Every man then becomes a republic within himself, having a clear conception of his own rights and his duty to others and to the State. He revolves around his proper orbit, and performs all his functions in a free state as naturally and harmoniously as the planets in the solar system. He manages wisely and justly his own affairs, and exercises an intelligent and wholesome supervision over those of the public.

The cure of our sick man is certain, if he will only take the medicine. How, then, shall we persuade him to do it? This ought not to be difficult. He is fully possessed of his reason, and the facts and arguments are all upon one side. It is only necessary to present them simply and clearly, and in an earnest and friendly spirit, and keep doing it, and he will in the end be convinced, and join us with a hearty goodwill to bring about this regeneration.

Property-owners are unanimously in favor of reducing the rate of taxation. This is best accomplished by both increasing the property and reducing the public burdens at the same time. Nature has poured out her gifts with a bounteous hand upon the cotton States; she has given them a mild climate, rich soil, abundant timber, and inexhaustible mines of coal and iron. They need for the development of their now idle resources only a large population of intelligent, industrious, and peaceable inhabitants.

They ask for immigration; but immigrants will not flock to States that do not provide for the education of children. They prefer the treeless plains and bleak winters of Nebraska, with her free common schools, to the tropical abundance of Louisiana with her 92,105 ragged, idle, and illiterate youth.

The laborer in this country, as a mere producing machine, is found, by actual examination in the great centres of industry of all kinds, to be worth 50 per cent. more with a common school education than if illiterate.

The common school, then, established throughout the cotton States as a mere industrial producing machine, would be equivalent to an addition of one million to her population; and, besides, would bring in its train other millions of intelligent, industrious, and hardy immigrants. In 1859, one of the largest landholders in the South, after having tried in vain for years to induce immigration from Germany and Switzerland, offered half his land to the State, if they would abolish slavery and establish free schools. He gave as a reason that then he could people the other half with intelligent settlers, and it would bring him more money than otherwise he could get for the whole. The land in a State filled with cultivated citizens is in demand at a high price; while in an illiterate community it can hardly be sold for the amount of the taxes.

Pauperism and crime are two chief causes of taxation. The illiterate persons throughout the United States commit, on the average, ten times their numerical proportion of crime; and in New England fifty-three times their proportion.

In the State of New York a single illiterate pauper girl has, in seventy-five years, been proved to have become the ancestor of two hundred criminals and paupers.

In the three States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois, the illiterates furnish thirty times their proportionate share of the paupers, and ten times their proportionate share of criminals. It is possible, by education, to reduce crime in this country 90 per cent., and pauperism 96 per cent.

What a load of taxation this would take off from property, and how popular, when rightly understood, will it be with property owners.

In the Grand Duchy of Baden, with a population of a million and a half, by universal education, they reduced the number of crimes 51 per cent., and the number of paupers 25 per cent., in a period of only seven years.

At this day, in a Christian country, it is a crime against the citizens for the State to fail to provide for them the means of elementary education; and Providence punishes the State for this crime.

When the State in this respect has performed its duty, then ignorance in the citizen becomes a crime against society and the State, and should be punished as such.

This doctrine is recognized and acted upon in the most enlightened countries of the world, under all forms of government; but it is especially true and sound in a democratic republic like ours.

A well-educated commonwealth, however narrow its borders or poor its soil, becomes orderly, industrious, rich, and powerful; while an ignorant one, under the happiest circumstances of land and sky, falls a prey to anarchy, idleness, poverty, and despotism.

These facts, and volumes of others of like character, if brought to the knowledge of the intelligent voters, and of the property-owners of the cotton States, will in the end make them earnest advocates of laws to secure to every child within their borders the benefits of an elementary education.

The colored people, though possessing at present little intelligence or property, yet from the fact that for generations under the exigencies of slavery, they have been rigorously forced away from the school-house doors, are now hungering and thirsting for knowledge.

It will not be difficult to enlist in favor of the free common school, in the cotton States, the property-owners, the intelligent classes, and the colored people. There only remain the illiterate poor whites; but they number above the age of ten 671,274, and, as a rule, are opposed to schools for themselves, or for any one else, and especially for colored people.

This body of illiterate whites are the citadel of the enemy; but they are a minority, being only about 14 per cent. of the whole population of that age, and hence by the aid of this universal suffrage are easily overcome, as soon as the intelligent whites, the property-owners, and the colored people, are enlisted in favor of education.

What is required now for the complete restoration to health—political, financial, intellectual, and moral—of our patient is vigorous and persuasive missionary work through the daily, weekly, and monthly press, the pulpit, the lecture-room, and the rostrum, in favor of the free common school.

Tracts and pamphlets upon this subject should be showered down upon the cotton States, until every voter who can read is thoroughly alive to the necessity of providing by law for the education of every child in the State.

If they prefer separate schools for the different races, and are willing to pay the cost, let it so be; for that is a social question for them to decide; not for us. What the country has a right to require is that schools for all, sufficient and equally good, shall be established and maintained at public expense in every neighborhood. This is a more inviting field for missionary labor than any that has been occupied for the last century. The Sandwich Islands, Africa, the East Indies, are no comparison to it. It is close at home. Public opinion of all sects and parties will sustain it. The cost is small, the converts easy to make, and not likely to backslide.

The founders of the republic foresaw the necessity of universal education, and expressed themselves in its favor with great earnestness.

Congress, in the Ordinance of 1787, enacted that "schools and the means of education shall be forever encouraged."

Washington, in his first message to Congress, said: "Knowledge in every country is the surest basis of public happiness. To the security of a free constitution it contributes by teaching the people themselves to know and value their own rights, to discern and provide against invasions of them." In his farewell address, he says: "Promote, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge."

Jefferson said: "A system of general instruction which shall reach every description of our citizens, from the richest to the poorest, as it was the earliest, so it shall be the latest, of all public concerns in which I shall permit myself to take an interest. Give it to us in any shape, and receive for the inestimable boon the thanks of the young and the blessings of the old."

Jay said: "The importance of common schools is best estimated by the good effects of them where they most abound and are best regulated."

Rush said: "Establish and support public schools in every part of the State."

Clinton said: "A general diffusion of knowledge is the precursor and protector of republican institutions; and in it we must confide as the conservative power that will watch our liberties, and guard them against fraud, intrigue, corruption, and violence. I consider the system of our common schools as the palladium of our freedom."

At a later day your own Horace Mann said: "Education in a republic must be universal; the whole land must be watered with the streams of knowledge."

The State owes an education to all its children, and each child has a right to demand of the State a generous, unsectarian education, such as shall fit him to be a citizen of a free and tolerant republic. This debt has long been repudiated by the cotton States, until not only their peace and prosperity, but that of the whole country, is endangered. These States must be no longer permitted to commit this injustice, this crime, against the citizens.

The National Constitution requires that "the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government." (Art. IV., 4.)

It is not the name that makes a republic, but rather the substance. Venice under the Doge and Council of Ten, though in fact a most rigorous and bloody despotism, was a republic in name.

If now an element is found to exist in any State which in its very essence and character is destructive of republican government, the United States in the spirit of the Constitution ought to have the power to eradicate it.

Ignorance, according to all history and experience, is just such an element. One of the objects for which the Constitution was formed, stated in the preamble, is "to promote the general welfare."

How can the general welfare be better promoted than by giving the national government the power to require each State to establish and sustain a system of free common schools, in which every child may acquire an elementary education sufficient to qualify him for the duties of citizenship?

Such a power might never be exercised, for its simple existence would be a stimulus, a spur to every State, to perform this clear, plain duty.

But with nine States in which a majority of all the people above the age of twenty-one cannot read and write, and whose governments manifest a reluctance to provide for education, there is an immediate necessity for this power.

In addition, then, to the patriotic and humane missionary work of creating a public sentiment in the cotton States for a system of free common schools, we should push forward an amendment to the National Constitution already proposed by Senator Stewart, of Nevada.

It is as follows: "If any State shall fail to maintain a common school system under which all persons between the ages of five and eighteen years, not incapacitated for the same, shall receive free of charge such elementary education as Congress may prescribe, the Congress shall have power to establish therein such a system, and cause the same to be maintained at the expense of such State."

The great work before us, then, as American citizens, and one that was carefully pointed out and well begun by the founders of our free government, may be stated in few words:—

First. To create and develop an enlightened and patriotic public sentiment in the Southern States, that will cause them to establish and support by law the free common school within reach of the children of every family, and to require by law every child of sound mind coming to adult age to obtain an elementary education sufficient to fit him for the duties of citizenship in a democratic republic.

Second. To amend the National Constitution so as to empower the Federal Government, in case a State fails to perform this duty, to see that it is done in each State.

This can easily be accomplished in a few years, and every true son of the fathers of '76 will gladly lend a hand to so beneficent a work. If this is brought about, our government, founded upon human rights and the equality of all men before the law, will then endure longer than has the Chinese Empire; and the North American continent will, in the course of centuries, sustain hundreds of millions of people, peaceable, prosperous, happy, contented, free; and all living under one flag, and speaking one language.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"PRIVATE INTERPRETATION" AND "LIBERTY."

MY DEAR ABBOT:—

I am emboldened by your courtesy to claim your attention once more.

1. Your "appeal to those who think and those who dare" was addressed to "Radicals." Hence I introduced B to your notice as a Radical Christian. This fact you seem to have overlooked. I beg that you will bear it in mind, as it is quite important. I think it will cause you to abate somewhat your charges against B, and also make it less difficult for you to understand his position. You will at least have no further excuse for complaining that he "shows two faces,—one to the Orthodox world when it charges him with 'denying the Lord that bought him,' one to the free-thinkers when they charge him with denying the principle of absolute liberty of thought and speech." If I know his mind and his spirit at all, and I think I do, for I have conversed with him often, he is as far from any sort of double-facedness as is my esteemed editor of THE INDEX himself. He "affirms the right of reason to sit in judgment on all things" to all comers, and never even harbors the thought of accepting the teachings of Jesus Christ, or of any one else, as a "Divine revelation beyond all suspicion of error." He may have acquired considerable confidence in Jesus as a teacher, and of that he is not ashamed. But he does not regard him as infallible, and, more than that, he has some doubts as to whether Jesus ever claimed any such superiority for himself. He will admit, however, I doubt not, that he was a person of "intense convictions." He denies Christianity to be what you affirm it to be. It does not bind him nor any one else "to submission, in mind, heart, and life, to the Lord Jesus Christ." That is his opinion, which opinion is the result of as careful investigation of all the facts in the case as he has been able to make. You demand that he shall either admit what you say, or "disprove" it. He has disproved it to his own satisfaction. He is not bound to satisfy you, or abdicate his own reason.

But you continue your complaint. He will not go with you "to the facts of Christianity and examine them afresh." He insists that you are mistaken. He has been with you there, again and again. What evidence have you that he has not? None whatever. But you are so fully persuaded in your own mind that you only are right, you can not possibly believe that he has been there—else he had not failed to see with your eyes! Nothing will convince you, unless he fall on his marrow-bones and confess that the fact is as you state it. Because he does not do this, you charge him with a "refusal to do anything but affirm and re-affirm his own 'private interpretation' of the facts, without submitting it to verification at all." He "sings his little song" all the same, and won't say, "Mr. Abbot, you are sound to a dot." Pray, tell me; if he conducts himself in this shocking manner, how differently do you carry yourself through it all? Has your "little song" ceased? Do you not "affirm and re-affirm"? Have you, then, failed to "verify"? No, certainly not. You "admit the possibility of being mistaken," but your "fresh verification" always shows you that you were not. Well, now, my dear friend, I think that that is precisely the way it is with B. He is not convicted of error, and he cannot take your word for it.

2. It is no part of my purpose to enter into a very elaborate defence of B, or to balance nicely the differences between him and you; for I tell you I do not care enough for your unprofitable discussion to do it. I have a simple and practical way of testing you both, and that without settling your dispute about names. If I find his Christianity and your anti-Christianity alike mean pro-Liberty, well and good. Enter ye both into the joy of my Lord!

But since I was betrayed, by my sudden surprise at what seemed to me to be your undeniable "Christian" treatment of him, into making some slight defence of his position, I cannot now well pass unnoticed one or two of your criticisms.

In the first place, B denies utterly that "the great dominant idea of Jesus was the fact of his Messiahship." He holds that that idea was both incidental and subordinate to his teachings. It was not a new thing invented by him, growing out of his ambition. It was a Jewish expectation into which he was born with all his countrymen. He did not even take it up as he found it. He modified and changed it, enlarged its boundaries until it became in point of fact little more than spiritual leadership. If he claimed to be king, adopting the current phrase, he founded no visible kingdom, no organized church with authority to force dogmatic prescriptions upon people for their welfare. He bade his followers, when the people in any place would not listen to them, to shake the dust of that place from their shoes, and depart. B thus believes that the institution called the Christian Church went back of the life and spirit of Jesus, and planted itself on the original Jewish faith that proclaimed an outward and visible kingdom. I cannot elaborate this statement, and adduce proofs to sustain it. I can only thus suggest that B is not without a basis of rational interpretation. In his judgment, the term Christianity refers more to a movement than to a person. With that movement he has strong, if not entire, sympathy. For the person he has great regard, but does not hold him to be infallible, nor in any sense Lord over the reason of mankind. He has his reasons for this conviction, strange as it may appear to you; and it is just possible that he will some day give them to the readers of THE INDEX. Of course you will continue your "green cheese" argument. You will say, "These are the facts," and think that "B chooses to disregard them." That, I suppose, cannot be helped.

3. You strive to turn the historical parallel I suggested to your own profit. I am bound to say that your success is more apparent than real. You tell me: "Every institution tends to carry out and develop its own fundamental idea." I agree with you, B agrees with you, so far. It is true of the American Union, it is true of the Church. And it is true that the Church has made its fundamental idea the Lordship of Christ. But it is not true that this country, as represented in its republican institutions, has ever made universal liberty its fundamental idea. Our American institution has invariably stood for the Lordship of the Union. Liberty has always been chained in the background, and only now and then let in to pick up the crumbs. The Union has been afraid of Liberty, and never of its own free-will has done aught but compromise it. Its concessions have all been made in fear and trembling, and the pressure has always come from without. Garrison began his crusade by burning the Constitution. John Brown provoked the Rebellion that forced the Union to abolish chattel-slavery or perish, by himself first defying the government institution. It hung him on the gallows, but his soul, "marching on," won the day. The institution did not "develop" freedom, but gave way before a rebel hero's conquering soul. It developed "Union." It centralized and consolidated its power, and is to-day quite as determined to strike down liberty to preserve its own life as ever it was. A century ago the Union was voluntary. To-day it rests on the bayonet. The harmony of the country is sacrificed to its unity. What is it you say about the early liberties of the Church culminating in the infallible Pope?

Now B will tell you that, notwithstanding this bad record of the two institutions, the inspiring ideas of both these great movements,—that of two thousand years ago and this of our century,—have spread far, and taken deep and abiding root. But both institutions have misrepresented and denied them. Both institutions, the Christian Church and the Republican State, grew not out of those fundamental and permanent ideas, but out of an incidental and transient phase of their movement in departing from old and outgrown institutions. The Church seized the authority of the Messiah; the State the authority of Law. Divinity, Legality: liberty of every description has been crucified between them! The parallel is complete, and is on B's side.

4. But enough. I will here leave B to his own resources (humbly confessing that I have most inadequately represented him), and speak for myself. As I have intimated, I have disliked the tone of your "appeal" to him, because it seemed to me that you both met on equal terms, so that your right to address him as one under "mental delusion that paralyzes courage and darkens the eye of reason," was an assumption not easily defended. I was unable to see how, even if he were to adopt your interpretation, he would, by so doing, become one whit more courageous than he now is. I am, as you have seen by my free criticism of your claim above, still blind to your logic. You say of yourself: "I do not rely on my own private interpretation." I wish I could know exactly what you mean. You say again: "The universal reason counts for something, even as against the individual." Am I to understand that you, as an individual, "surrender at discretion" to this "universal reason"? You have certainly given very little evidence of that sort of surrender. Are you beginning to think that you have no longer any right to possess your own judgment? Or is it your judgment that you ought to surrender your judgment? That is the way my Catholic neighbor defends to me his "free reason," in submitting to papal authority. I am very much in a quandary as regards you both. Perhaps you have some novel idea of what constitutes a private interpretation. You seem to think the private reason casts aside all allegiance to any sort of evidence that would naturally go into the forming of a conclusion, and spits out to the world just what whim it "chooses." If this be true, your idea is indeed a novel one, and I don't wonder you are desperate to beat out its brains. Let me suggest that the common understanding, the "universal reason" concerning the term, is somewhat different. The assertion of the private judgment, I take it, is simply this: It is a judgment formed by the individual, based on all the evidence (facts) the world can offer him. He must see for himself, and with his own eyes. This judgment can only be displaced by some other judgment formed in precisely the same manner. It is not a matter of choice; he cannot help himself, if he reasons and judges at all. If he does not, who does? There can be no collective judgment, no universal reason, that is not first individual judgment and reason. It does not follow that, because a man relies upon his private reason, he necessarily falls out with all the rest of the world. He may simply confirm for himself what all the rest have reasoned. You seem to think that the more of this private reasoning there is done, the more everybody will have everybody else by the ears. To my mind precisely the reverse must be true. For there is but one man, and but one reason: and the more that reason is cultivated in all persons, the more will the one universal reason abound. But! Meantime what are we going to do? Stop each his own machine, and let all the other machines work for him? That would be an impossible consummation devoutly to be dreaded! So I say once more, I do not see how either you, or B, or any one, can escape from private interpretations.

5. I ventured to say, by way of illustration of this fact, that your declaration that Christianity is "bondage" is in reality your own private interpretation, and not the confession of the Christian Church at all. You tell me in reply that I "reverse the verdict of the Church." You ask: "Does not the Church everywhere and always plant itself on the principle of Infallible Authority, and must not every free-thinker (the italics are mine) concede that this is mental and spiritual bondage?" But do you not see that your whole concern at this part is with the Church, and not at all with the "free-thinker"? What does it concede? that is the question. "Infallibility" and "bondage" may be convertible terms in your mind; but they are not so in the logic of the Church. The Church, if it concedes the one, will utterly deny the other. You are at sword's points with the Church; for never has that Church announced Christianity to be the ministry of bondage. You and I can get bondage enough out of its infallibility; but not with the Church's benediction. What then? Shall I say you have not offered me once more your private interpretation? I cannot conscientiously do so. That you are backed by the "consensus of all liberals," is doubtless a most cheerful reflection; but I venture you would hold your opinion if it were otherwise; yea, even as against the world. "Science," says Draper, "considers the vote of the majority in the ascertainment of truth with supreme indifference."

6. I certainly applaud your disposition to brevity, and wish that I were as gifted in that direction. But with all respect let me say that your "brevity" in treating what I have said on the "conflict of consciences" does yourself, I am sure, great injustice, and embarrasses me not a little. I do not wish to "sing my little song" once more, for I have no surety that you will "catch the tune" if I do. I think I had better do little more than refer you to my last letter. And I want you as a special favor to try to consider what I have said on this point with a more attentive ear. I know it isn't much, but it is all I have; and, being little, I have the more anxiety to have it measure its full length. But, to tell the truth, I thought I was furnishing you with a "text," when I wrote the words—"Do Nothing." I can imagine some stickler for the Established Church in England catching a like phrase from some advocate of "Disestablishment," and preaching therefrom as doleful a discourse as that in which you have indulged. "Do nothing!" he would say. "Why, is it doing nothing to dismiss all the clergymen, send home all the people, sell or destroy all the churches, and leave the rising generation to grow up without religion into helpless victims of scientists and demagogues! Why, I shrink from the very imagination of it! You do not in this way avoid trampling on the consciences of your fellow-men. You simply placate the consciences of the scientific minority by outraging the consciences of the vast majority who love religious institutions. You simply take sides with the conscience for science against your own conscience for religion. You cannot 'do nothing.' You have got to do something. You"—but brevity admonishes. The argument flows so easily, it were a luxury to keep on. Enough, however, for practical ends.

You will see that I consider the disestablishment of the State school quite as much in order as the disestablishment of the State Church. The declaration of John Bright in regard to the Church may be, with its proper modifications, equally well applied to the school. "The Established Church," he says, "whether as a political or religious institution, is out of harmony with the spirit of the time." And why? Because unwilling tribute is levied for its support. People are not "going to the dogs" for want of religion; but they will get their religion in their own way, and get, as they believe, a far better kind. So, too, people will not grow up in ignorance because State interference is withheld. They will get their education in their own way. Education they will have. The same impulse manifest in the creation of the State school will crop out, if left unchecked, in individual and cooperative enterprise. And such enterprise is alone in harmony with free society. It is not "free government"—there is no such thing on earth nor in heaven—we wish to perpetuate. That is the serious blunder from which we must recover. Society—free society—is the goal we seek. We seek it, for that alone is society. It does not exist where we are forcing this or that institution "for the good of all" down each other's throats. If democratic America offers this spectacle to the admiring gaze of the Old World at its Centennial show, I fear the wit of our visitors will easily detect the plagiarism. They have seen all that done at home, and far less bunglingly done, at that. I repeat what I have said, our problem is not whether a "free government" of the people, by the people, for the people can be established here; it is whether the people can get a universal conscience for liberty, and so constitute themselves a free, harmonious, and peaceful society.

Now I appeal to you, as a lover of and believer in liberty, as the only true means to all noble ends, to drop your fears, espouse heartily the great cause of America's complete emancipation; and so "let your light shine" that all men, your Catholic brethren included, shall come up to the help of all that is true, noble, and good. We want schools, and we shall get them; we want universal education, and we shall get it. But, I pray you, slay the "old Adam" that counsels you to violence. Disarm! Every boy knows the advantage of that, when he would get on peacefully with his fellows. William Penn knew the secret even of peaceful dealing with savages. Cannot we conquer Catholicism so? Disarmament, as most people argue, would heal the national woes of Europe. It will heal our woes of every description. Somebody must be brave enough to lead off. Who in America should it be, if not the religious radical? He surely will not slay Liberty for liberty's sake.

But, espousing her "for weal or woe," he will believe all things that make for the common good here possible under her banner!

Cordially yours,

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

CHURCH AND STATE IN AMERICA.

A LETTER FROM THE REV. DR. ARMITAGE UPON THEIR RELATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE:

Sir,—Your able article on "Religion in European Politics" must, I am sure, have given great satisfaction to your readers, and more especially the congratulatory statement which it contained, that in this country we have "an absolute independence of Church and State." Yet I see that your correspondent, John J. Phillips, of New Haven, pronounces these "fine words," while he doubts their correctness, on the ground that among us "the property of a church" is exempt from taxation. Now, is it a matter of fact that no form of property held by religious corporations is exempted from taxation? In the State of New York, all property held by such corporations is taxable, excepting that which is used strictly for religious, educational, and humanitarian purposes; and for good reasons it ought to be. But all other property held by such bodies, "the house of the priest" included, is subject to tax, and should be, because it may be used for speculation and money-making ends.

But how do these facts conflict with your statement, that under our government there is an "absolute independence of Church and State?" What is the connection of Church and State in the sense of which you speak of it in "European Politics," and as the subject has generally been understood in history? Clearly this: the establishment of a certain form of religion, by legal enactments, to the exclusion of all other forms of religion, so that men of another religion, or of none, as the case may be, are compelled to support the religion imposed upon them by law, however obnoxious it may be to them. And more than this; the law in such cases makes provisions for the education of the legalized teachers or that legalized sect, out of the State exchequer, for the salaries of those teachers, and for the erection of church edifices out of the public treasury. Nor is this all. The State defines the doctrines of the established sect, prescribes the practices to be inculcated, and the discipline to be enforced therein; and, of course, those who choose to dissent from the established sect, on any of these points, are classed by law among heretics, and are compelled to pay for what they repudiate; while their own form of religion, if they have one, may or may not be even tolerated by the law, and commonly they are put under the social law, and often suffer the loss of certain political rights in addition.

Now, I take it, that it is because nothing of this sort exists among us that you consider the State as such is absolutely independent of the Church in our country, which is truly a subject of devout congratulation, but not a whit more so than that the Church as such is just as independent of the State. Church and State know nothing of each other before the law in the United States. But I do not understand you to say that religion holds no relation to the State here, or that the State holds no relation to religion; for, in fact, they hold the most vital relation to each other. As I understand the question, the right to religious liberty entered largely into the considerations which led to the founding both of the colonies and the republic. If I am right, the whole theory of our political and civil jurisprudence, so far as it bears upon this point at all, rests upon the natural and inalienable right of man to be religious, and to enjoy all the necessary means for worship, without paying the State for its protection while exercising that right. While the State is separated from the Church as such, under any given name or form whatever, it is not and cannot be separated from religion. But, on the contrary, the framers of our government intended that it should stand squarely upon the principles, and especially the ethics, of religion; and they so intertwined these into the entire system of our liberties that if they should be removed for a day the government would fall to pieces. Protection of religion by the government is its self-preservation. All forms of worship are protected in this country, whether Jewish, Christian, Confucian, Mohammedan, or whatever; provided that our citizens worship in peace, and obey the laws of the land. In every nation, its religious standard is the standard of its morality and the ground of its law, simply because all immorality tends to subvert law, and, therefore, to overthrow government. At present, no free government exists where Christianity is not the religion of the people; and in the United States the highest authorities have decided again and again, with Judge Parker, and Daniel Webster, and many others of our interpreters of the Constitution and laws, that "religion is part of the common law." It follows, then, that in protecting religion our government protects the common law, and, according to George Washington, it does no more than its duty here.

When Washington resigned power in 1796 he said, in his valedictory address to the public of the United States: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firm props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume would not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths, which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle." The whole question, Mr. Editor, of the proposed taxation of property held and used for purely religious, educational, and benevolent purposes needs and demands a fair, dispassionate, and thorough examination; and the more carefully it is investigated the less will religion suffer, and the more will the Commonwealth be benefited.

Yours, &c.,

THOS. ARMITAGE.

{ No. 2 WEST FORTY-SIXTH STREET,
NEW YORK, Feb. 4, 1875.

A NEW EMPLOYMENT for womanly energy has recently been initiated in England that seems to be admirably adapted to feminine ingenuity, activity and tastes. Four ladies of good social position in London have adopted the profession of home decorative artists. They undertake the whole interior embellishment of a dwelling, including the selection of furniture, attention to the upholstery, and the tasteful selection and arrangement of all the ornamental appendages of a well-ordered home. They are said to be excellent artists in their profession, and have already met with marked success. But they have reached this result by serving a regular apprenticeship.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 13.

H. W. Wellington, $4; Chas. C. Merry, $2; George Dimmock, $3.70; D. C. Hawhurst, $2; R. B. Merrett, $2; John H. Pennerman, $2; C. L. Tomlin, $2; George Newcomer, $2; L. E. Bailey, $2; D. Sharpstein, $2; Mary Syles, $2; John Harper, $2; C. C. Beach, $2; E. C. Graves, $2; Wm. Milligan, $6.20; Alex. Grant, $3.20; Joseph A. Stevens, $1.20; Wiley Britton, $3; D. C. White, $1; J. E. Larimer, $3.20; Peter Newcomer, $3.20; A. Clegg, $2.50; J. S. Shailer, $3.20; Chas. H. Welch, $3.20; W. A. Downes, $23.20; Chas. M. Cuyler, $4; C. W. Peirce, $13.20; H. F. Badger, $2; George Winslow, $2; Alfred Kiser, $2; Isaac Cox, $2; John Hogeboom, $2; George E. Hollister, $2; R. F. Judson, $2; D. Waterbury, $2; Charles May, $2; S. Hubbard, $2; George Smiley, $2; Frank H. Duncan, $2; Wm. N. Warmington, $1.60; George W. Watson, $2; E. C. Styles, 50 cents; A. W. Thompson, $3; M. M. Gardner, 80 cents; C. H. Doolittle, $2; Perry & Morton, $2.20; E. P. Wright, $1.20; E. H. Bearse, $1.60; O. A. Taft, $1.20; Milan Bentley, $1.20; J. R. Burt, 25 cents; John Branham, $4; James Barton, $3; N. Littlefield, $3.20; John R. Lewis, 10 cents; J. T. Dickens, $1.20; George Capron, $3; Asa Fairbanks, $3; W. R. Pearson, $6.20; Isaac Wertheimer, 10 cents; Reuben Frisbie, $3.20; E. O. Avery, $10; Wm. B. Clarke, $2; James Blood, $1.60; G. H. Shaw, 80 cents; E. Blackman, 80 cents; B. C. Buck, 80 cents; E. Harrit, $3.20; Sarah F. Earle, $3.20; S. L. Curtis, $1.50; E. E. Deniston, $3; G. P. Delaplaine, $1.20; Jerome Bass, $1.20; Joseph Post, $3.20; B. B. Griswold, $3.20; Warren Griswold, $1.20; Geo. L. Paine, $1; J. W. Pike, $3.20; M. G. Whitmore, 75 cents; D. Y. Kilgore, $5; M. V. Longley, 25 cents; A. A. Bell, $10; A. A. Knight, $1.20; J. W. Winder, 50 cents; D. F. Henderson, $8; Mary Wright, 25 cents; G. H. Foster, $1.50; M. Altman, $15; E. M. Davis, $10; H. McNair, 25 cents; D. W. Ebersole, 30 cents; M. F. Horine, 75 cents; Wm. Allen, $1.75; J. M. Aldrich, $20; Mary E. Veele, 25 cents.

RECEIVED.

Books.

THE MORALITY OF PROHIBITORY LIQUOR LAWS. An Essay. By William B. Weeden. Boston: Roberts Brothers, 1875. THE DOCTRINE OF DESCENT AND DARWINISM. By Oscar Schmidt, Professor in the University of Strassburg. With 26 woodcuts. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1875. [International Scientific Series.] HEALTH: A Handbook for Households and Schools. By Edward Smith, M.D., F.R.S. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1875. PERSONAL REMINISCENCES BY MOORE AND JERDAN. Edited by Richard Henry Stoddard. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co., 1875. [Brac-Brac Series.] ALICE BRAND. A Romance of the Capital. By A. G. Riddle. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1875.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

SERMONS BY O. B. Frothingham, in Lyric Hall, New York. —The Divorce between Creed and Conduct: Jan. 24, 1875. —The Struggle for Supremacy over Conscience: Jan. 31, 1875.—New York: D. G. Francis, 1875. THE WISDOM FROM ABOVE. A Sermon. By Rev. H. W. Foote, at King's Chapel, Boston, Jan. 3, 1875. Boston: 1875. THE GLORY OF NEW YORK. A Discourse on Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 26, 1874. By Rev. E. P. Rogers, D.D. New York: 1874. SERMONS BY THE REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, at St. George's Hall, London.—Mrs. Girdling and the Bible Christians: Jan. 3, 1875.—On Rational and Irrational Prayer: Jan. 10.—The Controversy between Monsignor Capel and Canon Liddon: Jan. 17.—The Fallacy of Pretended Revelation: Jan. 24.—The Basis of Theism: Jan. 31. PUBLICATIONS OF THOMAS SCOTT, Esq., 11, The Terrace, Farquhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S. E.—Nine Years a Curate.—Spiritual Gambling.—Enthanasia.—The Free-Will Controversy. By T. D. Hutchinson.—Signs of the Times. March, 1875. CAUSERIES AVEC MES ELEVES. By Lambert Sauveur. TRAVELLING SALESMAN. An Address. By W. H. Baldwin. Boston: Boston Young Men's Christian Union. HISTORY OF THE WRONGS OF AMERICA. An Appeal to the People and Press of America. San Francisco: 1875. A REPLY TO THE RT. HON. W. E. GLADSTONE'S "Political Expulsion." By the Rt. Rev. Monsignor Capel, D.D. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1875. HEARTS AND HANDS. A Story in Sixteen Chapters. By Christian Reid. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 1875. IN THE CAMARGUE. By Emily Bowles. Boston: Loring, Publisher. REPORT OF THE NEW YORK CITY COUNCIL OF POLITICAL REFORM, for the Years 1872-73-74. New York: 1875. SECOND REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS OF THE NEWTON HOME FOR ORPHAN AND DESTITUTE GIRLS. Boston: 1875. THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW for January, February, and March, 1875. London: Chapman & Hall. THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. March, 1875. New York: D. Appleton & Co. THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. March, 1875. Boston: L. C. Bowles. THE PENN MONTHLY. March, 1875. Philadelphia: 506 Walnut St. THE SANITARIAN. March, 1875. New York: 234 Broadway. THE HERALD OF HEALTH. March, 1875. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 18, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

LIBERTY IN CHURCH AND STATE.

MY DEAR MORSE:—

You will find your third letter printed on a previous page; and I will only say that, instead of your being beholden to any "courtesy" of mine, I am in your debt for urging your own differing views so candidly, yet so vigorously, in these columns. If either of us felt inclined to quibble over trifles or waste time and space in mere verbal retorts, I should think this a very profitless discussion, and expect our readers to complain of it; but since we both want to find, if possible, that common ground on which the great questions raised may be reasonably settled, and since neither of us seeks or wishes to "get the victory" but to arrive at truth, I hope that our readers are not yet tired of the subject.

1 and 2. Perhaps I did not sufficiently consider that "B" was a "Radical Christian," because I experience the same difficulty in reconciling Christianity with "Radicalism" that confronts me in reconciling it with "freedom." On the whole, I will drop B out of my part of the discussion. A "Christian" who, as you say of him, "never even harbors the thought of accepting the teachings of Jesus Christ, or of any one else, as a 'Divine revelation beyond all suspicion of error,'" is such a white blackbird that I cannot tell his color at all. His "Radicalism" and his "Christianity" eat each other up, like the Killenny cats, and I cannot find so much as the tail of either. The only scrap of fur that is visible of his "Christianity" is his admission that Jesus did at least claim "spiritual leadership," when he claimed to be the Messiah. Very well: from that admission, as from a bit of fossil bone, any one who has sufficient leisure can reconstruct the entire animal. But the animal is unmistakably deceased. Quite as dead, too, is the "Radicalism" that still cleaves to personal "leadership" in any sense; it does not interest a free-thinker; it has nothing that is alive about it. No, I give up in despair; I cannot guess B's conundrum—how to reconcile Christianity and freedom.

3. In order to make comprehensible the thesis that freedom and Christianity are compatible, at the same time that freedom and the Church are confessed to be incompatible, you have instituted a parallel between the Church and our own Republic; holding that the Church has been false to Christianity in the same way that the Republic has been false to freedom. You said in your second letter that this nation "dedicated itself to the 'inalienable right of all to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness,'" yet "for nigh a whole century unblushingly defended an institution of human bondage"; and you urged that, "as republicanism is not republicanism when it defends bondage, so Christianity is not Christianity when it enslaves human nature." This argument I met by saying that every institution must be true to its own fundamental idea; that the fundamental idea of the Republic was freedom, to which it was true when it abolished slavery; that the fundamental idea of the Church was the Lordship of Jesus, to which it was true when it suppressed individual liberty; that neither the Republic nor the Church has been false to its fundamental idea in its history as a whole; and that your illustration was wholly in my favor. Now, in your third letter, you shift your ground completely, and deny (what you before affirmed) that the "inalienable right of all to life, LIBERTY, and the pursuit of happiness" is the fundamental idea of the Republic. You say now: "It is not true that this country, as represented in its republican institutions, has ever made universal liberty its fundamental idea. Our American institution has invariably stood for the Lordship of the Union. Liberty has always been chained in the background, and only now and then let in to pick up the crumbs." Very well, then; if the Republic was not dedicated to liberty at the start, and has not been true to liberty since, it does not at all serve your original purpose as an illustration of an institution which has been false to the ideas on which it was founded.

In the same way you have completely shifted your ground about the Church. In your first letter, it was founded upon the "teachings of Jesus," which were considered to be "proclamations of liberty," but from which the Church "departed." In your present letter, the Church, like the Republic, "grew not out of those fundamental and permanent ideas, but out of an incidental and transient phase of their movement in departing from old and outgrown institutions." It now appears that the Church never "departed" from the ideal of Jesus because it never was based upon it.

The whole ground of your parallel, therefore, has been changed. At first, the Church and the Republic were alike in this, that both of them betrayed and "departed from" the fundamental ideas on which they were originally based. But now it turns out that they are alike in this, that [they were not originally based on those fundamental ideas at all, but were both based on merely incidental features of a "movement" which they have most perversely and unreasonably persisted in misrepresenting! Neither of these supposed parallels will stand close examination. I have accepted the fact of parallelism, but considered it to consist in the fact that both the Church and the Republic have logically carried out the fundamental ideas on which they were based, and that they have thus represented fairly, not misrepresented, the movements that respectively gave them birth. This parallelism I am willing to defend further, if necessary. But previously I should like to know which of your own two parallels you really intend to stand by; for you have drawn two parallels, instead of one, which are mutually contradictory and irreconcilable.

4. The question you raise in this section of your letter, between "private interpretation" and "universal reason," is so important and vital that I must reserve consideration of it for a separate and independent article; and meanwhile I will pass to the next section.

5. You affirmed that my "declaration that Christianity is 'bondage' was in reality [my] own private interpretation, and not the confession of the Church." I replied: "Does not the Church everywhere and always plant itself on the principle of Infallible Authority, and must not every free thinker concede that this is mental and spiritual bondage?" You challenge this reply, and tell me that my concern is with the Church, and not at all with the free thinker; that the Church does not concede that Infallible Authority is bondage. I admit that I cannot find the precise words of the abstract proposition—"Christianity is bondage"—in the authoritative declarations of the Church. But the Catholic Church tells you and me that we are "bound" to believe and obey the Pope; and the vast majority of the Protestant churches tell you and me that we are "bound" to believe and obey the Bible. That "bound" is exactly what Infallible Authority means; and it forbids us to doubt, to disbelieve, to disobey. Why should we quibble over words? The Church does affirm, as plainly as language can put it, in innumerable ways and forms, that we are not free to reject what it proclaims as "Divine truth." The Athanasian Creed, in the famous so-called damnatory clause, affirms that "he who does not thus think concerning the Trinity shall without doubt everlastingly perish." (I quote from memory.) Is not that proclaiming mental and spiritual bondage with a vengeance? Yet the Athanasian Creed has been for a thousand years and more a formula recognized by almost all Christian churches as one of the great standards of their faith. It does not say in terms that "Christianity is bondage"; yet does it not bind thought to certain dogmatic conclusions on peril of damnation? The liberty of thought which you and I claim is repudiated by the Church; it tells us that it is sin, and brings perdition; when it says that the service of Christ is "perfect freedom," it does not mean the freedom of thought which we mean, but freedom from sin and its consequences; and, if we explain what the freedom is that we want, it tells us it does not want any such freedom as that, and is ready enough to confess that its own "infallible authority" is the exact opposite of it. Ask Rome if she considers her faith liberal and free; Father Hecker may say yes, but the Pope, Father Hecker's acknowledged infallible master, says no in words as unmistakable and strong as possible. Pope Gregory XVI., in his Encyclical Letter Mirari, denounced the doctrine that "liberty of conscience and worship is the personal right of every man," as "insane nonsense" and the "liberty of perdition"; and Pope Pius IX., in his still more famous Encyclical Quanta Cura, asserts "that salutary power which the Catholic Church, according to the institution and commission of her divine Author, should freely exercise to the end of time—not only over individual men, but over nations, peoples, and their sovereign rulers." What stronger confessions do you want from the Church that Christianity is bondage, if there is to be no artful falsification of the word freedom? Most certainly I claim that the Church does confess her "infallible authority" to be "bondage," when she fully comprehends the kind of freedom which you and I demand. The terms are "convertible in the logic of the Church"; and you are "at sword's points" with her, not I, when you maintain the contrary. Has not "free thought" been a term convertible with "sin" in her vocabulary from time immemorial, even in the half dechristianized Protestant churches? It is not on the "consensus of all liberals," but on the consensus of all recognized Christian churches (excepting always the Neo-Christian hybrids), that I rest the proposition—"Christianity is bondage." They all bind the intellect to their own dogmas, and denounce and repudiate all freedom which questions them. Can you deny it?

6. I have carefully re-perused what you say in your second letter on the subject of the "conflict of consciences." I certainly tried to meet your main points fairly, without essaying to answer you sentence-by sentence—always a tedious business both to writer and to reader. In that letter you said [THE INDEX, Feb. 25]: "If the public school system is not founded in right and justice, drop it. You will find it is not worth the cost of pursuing. Purchased at the price of liberty, you have sold your birthright for a mess of pottage." Why, certainly; that is true. But I think that, if anything was ever "founded in right and justice," the public school system is. Whose "liberty" is the price of it? "The Catholic's," you will say. That is, the Catholic parent thinks it his sacred duty to make his child a Catholic too; he claims the right to deprive him of a common school education, unless the priest is allowed to teach him Catholicism in that common school; he thus asserts the right to rob his child of the knowledge essential to his future welfare, unless he is allowed to control the management of the public school in the interest of his private dogmas. That is what I call a CONSCIENCE FOR DESPOTISM. Has the child no rights of his own? Has he not a right to the knowledge which is absolutely necessary to give him a fair chance in life? Has the State, which only exists to protect rights, no duty to protect the rights of the child as well as of the parent—no duty to respect the consciences of the other parents too? I answer, yes; and the State cannot discharge this duty at all, without maintaining schools by universal taxation and keeping them secular all the while. If that is not justice, I don't know what justice is. I admit that the Catholic's conscience for despotism is violated by this obedience to the conscience for liberty and justice; I am very sorry it is so, but see that the only choice lies in violating one or the other. You will say: "So long as there are in America two consciences on this question of freedom, there will be conflict." There are indeed two; the conflict exists; and the only way to "mind our own business" (which is your recipe) is to discharge the public duty which the situation imposes, namely, to protect the conscience for liberty against the conscience for despotism. In this conflict you will have to take sides. You do take sides—against the conscience for liberty.

"Doing nothing" is simply impossible. Your "stickler for the Established Church in England" is quite right, when he thinks that Disestablishment is a very emphatic something. The only trouble is that, while this particular something is just and right, he nevertheless objects to it. Now you happen to be in favor of this particular something yourself, although it hurts the Churchman's conscience! You would abolish the State Church,—in fact, the State and Church. But in doing so you pierce your "stickler's" conscience! Well, I too would disestablish the Church; but I should know I was doing a very large something, and should never imagine I was "doing nothing."

The fact is that the conscience which prompts any man to violate his neighbor's equal rights (and unenlightened conscience often prompts this, as in the Catholic's case) cannot be otherwise than offended and restrained by any community which is organized for the protection of equal rights. You think you can escape this necessity by "doing nothing," which, if it means anything that I can comprehend, means the total dissolution of the State, the total cessation of the protection now given by the community to the rights of the individual. But this is anarchy, and anarchy means everywhere and always the subjugation of the weak by the strong. However imperfectly individual rights may be now protected, this imperfect protection is a great deal better than none; and it is the PUBLIC DUTY of every citizen to join in giving it. Instead of regretting the existence of the State as a necessary evil, I value it as the necessary condition of all that is good. To maintain it under the form of popular self-government, with constitutional guarantees of individual liberties, seems to me the highest duty of every man as a member of civilized society; and yet to maintain it without a thoroughly developed system of universal education is a sheer impossibility. The Catholic's demand either to control this system or else to be released from his share in the expense of maintaining it cannot be complied with, except by inflicting the grossest wrongs upon all the rest of the community. Whoever appreciates the inestimable value of free government (that is, the people's self-government in all that concerns the people collectively) knows that there can be no "free society" without it. I think your supposition that there can be "free society" without "free government" is a woefully unpractical one, so long as a single man, woman, or child is ever tempted to commit a crime of any sort against the equal rights of any other. And universal education is the prime condition of all free government.

Nor, in the light of facts, can I believe that education will be made even general, much less universal, if our public school system is abolished. You say that the people "will get their education in their own way." Of course they will in a republic; and the public school system is "their own way" of getting it. Destroy this system, and a vast proportion of the people will be totally unable to get any education at all. This system is simply a device for bringing education within the reach of every one. Whom does it hurt or oppress? What more beneficent institution was ever imagined? There is no "violence" about it. If by urging "disarmament" you mean to urge the abolition of all the restraints imposed by the State upon the turbulent and the unjust, I see that it would inaugurate a perfect reign of "violence." Of all tyrannies, what so tyrannical as mob-law? In my turn, I appeal to you, "as a lover of and believer in liberty as the only true means to all noble ends," to drop your own fears of the State, and perceive that the State is simply the realization of the highest individual liberty which is compatible with the protection of the liberty of all individuals; to recognize the plain facts of humanity as it exists to-day, and not go on the quiet assumption that, if the State and its schools were abolished, nobody would ever wish to infringe upon his neighbor's rights. I wish that were true; but it is not true, and dreams will not make it true. The State is imperfect, of course; but it is chiefly because knowledge is also imperfect. Then help to perfect the State by increasing knowledge in the people; and help to strengthen and improve that public school system which is the only means of increasing knowledge in the people. For the sake of all individual and public liberties, which you prize as highly as I, but no more highly, do not in your devotion to the end destroy the one indispensable means.

Yours in all sincerity,
F. E. ABBOT.

CHURCH AND STATE.

Attention is called to the letter on "Church and State," by Thomas Armitage, of New York, printed in another column. Dr. Armitage is a Baptist clergyman of high rank and respectability, as the publication of his letter in the Tribune avouches. He is supposed, too, to be a man of ability, though no one will judge so from this performance, which is about the most remarkable for mental opacity that the literature of this discussion has produced. It is interesting chiefly as showing the mass of obfuscation that must be cleared away before the radical position can be apprehended. A sweeter simplicity was never exhibited than that displayed in the first paragraph, in which the Doctor states that "all property held by religious corporations is taxable, in the State of New York, excepting that which is used strictly for religious, educational, and humanitarian purposes"! The Doctor contends for a larger exemption than many of his brethren do, while aiming at a reduction of it to the indispensable pieces of property. The "house of the priest," he boasts, is taxed. But why it should be so long as "the priest" resides there is not, on his reasoning, apparent. If the church edifice, which is the priest's official and public house, is exempted from taxation, why not the parsonage which is his unofficial and private house? As soon as the priest's official and public house—the church—ceases to be such, and becomes a carpet-warehouse, a dry-goods store, a carriage-factory, a livery-stable, or a theatre, it is taxed. Why should not the unofficial and private house be untaxed, until it too is put to secular uses? In the State of New York it is to a degree exempted. Ten years ago, when I went to the City Hall to pay my first house tax, I was told that settled clergymen were entitled to a deduction of fifteen hundred dollars on the valuation of their dwellings. The information was volunteered, but has not been taken advantage of, and I have not had the curiosity to inquire since whether "the priest's house" still enjoys its privilege. I presume, however, that it does; and, if it does, the magnanimous concession of Dr. Armitage is not accepted by the city in which he resides.

But the most desperate intellectual confusion occurs in the third paragraph, which betrays the secret trouble that afflicts the whole mind of Christendom, the incurable color-blindness which is unable to distinguish between religion and some form of religion, between religion and religious institutions. "If I am right," he says, "the whole theory of our political and civil jurisprudence, so far as it bears on this point at all, rests upon the natural and inalienable right of man to be religious, and to enjoy all the necessary means of worship without paying the State for its protection while exercising that right." We call particular attention to this sentence, for it is a rare and delicious morsel of evangelical reasoning. Such tidbits are not furnished every day, and wise people will make the most of them when they are provided. Here is history, philosophy, ecclesiastical and civil law, ethics, logic, and wit, all in a single sentence, which the reader shall have the pleasure of analyzing for himself.

And when that has been thoroughly done, let him go on to the remainder of the paragraph and the conclusion of the letter, and mark the other ancient assumption, that morality rests on "religion" (that is, on religious institutions), and the ingenious suggestion that, when Washington urged the claims of ordinary morality on the statesmen, politicians, and people of his generation, he was recommending religious institutions to the patronage of the State, and pressing their claims to peculiar privileges. Yet all this is meant seriously; Dr. Armitage is not jesting; he is not playing the casuist; he is not, in his own judgment, defending a desperate cause. He is expressing his clearest views; he is candidly giving voice to the fixed convictions of an immense number of Christian believers; and the sole effect of his letter is to make us feel how far we are from having reached the preliminaries of discussion on a question of vital public concern. Well, all the deeper is the need of perseverance and patience. O. B. F.

THE RELIGIOUS CONDITION OF THE NEGRO.

I make it a general rule not to answer any criticisms upon myself or my words which appear in a newspaper; but your correspondent "P. H. C.," in THE INDEX December 10, seems to be under such an entire delusion in regard to my thoughts, that I feel bound to say one word in explanation. I do this because I judge him to be one of those educated colored men with whose extreme sensitiveness as regards any slight on their race I have great sympathy. As to my "taking stock in the negro," I assure him that I have entire faith in that race and their future destiny; believing that, while the difference between them and the Caucasian race in intellectual characteristics are very slight and not easily defined, they have ethnological peculiarities of great value in morals and aesthetics, which will add new power and grace to our civilization, when they are fairly represented in it. In consequence of this belief, my principal work for the last ten years has been aiding the education of the freedmen, as the most immediate duty to themselves and to us.

The form of religion now prevalent among the freedmen I consider a great obstacle to their education; and, as "P. H. C." truly says, it has been taught them by the whites who did not care to develop the moral and intellectual power of the slaves, which would have made them less servile and submissive, but were very willing to let them vent their emotions in religious exercises, and encouraged them to console themselves with the thought of heaven in another world, instead of seeking to better their condition in this.

Out of the influences of slavery and what is called Evangelical piety has grown that sensational, superstitious, ignorant form of religion which is more prevalent at the South, both among whites and blacks, than where education prevails to a greater degree; and I repeat, not that there is no morality among the freedmen, but that, as a general rule, they do not consider it to have any special connection with religion. That a man is honest, kind, temperate, industrious, and so forth, does not prove that he has "got religion," or the reverse. But that he shouts, and sings, and falls down in trances, and so forth, does indicate piety, although he may lie and steal the next day.

But I believe that the negro has a special genius for religion, and that if, avoiding all controverted dogmas, we go to him with the simple, grand truths of religion, and show their relation to life and morals, he is very readily receptive of them. In travelling through the South on a special mission to freedmen's schools, the friend who was with me and myself spoke every Sunday, either in churches, prayer-meetings, or Sunday-schools. Both counting ourselves as Free Religionists, we spoke our own thoughts of religion without any reference to the current opinions of the people, and we never failed to meet a warm response from the people, who sometimes came to us wondering how we could understand and sympathize so well with them.

In one case, a revival preacher, who had been urging the young people not to go to school lest it should hinder their "getting religion," came forward and indorsed our views, when we had been showing the necessity of education as developing the heart and mind, so that we could serve God with them truly. This was on a week-day, however.

I believe that, if we would approach these and all other uneducated, simple people, not with an idea that they need different religious food from what we do, but with the very thoughts which help us, put into clear and simple speech, we should always find a substratum of good sense and natural religion which would respond to us.

Such are my views of the religious condition of the negro and of his needs, and I hope you will pardon the seeming egotism of the explanation. I can bear the misunderstanding of a white person, but I am not willing that any negro should think me unfriendly to his race.

E. D. C.

[We owe an apology to Mrs. Cheney for the delay in publishing the above article. It got slipped by accident into the wrong envelope, from which accident alone rescued it; and we regret exceedingly that such a mischance should have hindered its appearance so long.—ED.]

REFORMS AND REFORMERS.

From my boyhood, I always have had a great respect for reformers. Well do I remember how my boy-heart was stirred with admiration and enthusiasm, when first I saw Lucy Stone upon the Anti-Slavery platform. It was some twenty-five years ago that she came to my native village, and, alone, and almost uncountenanced by anybody in the town, lifted up her sweet and persuasive voice (which, even now, has lost none of its fine qualities) in behalf of the oppressed black man. All the "piety" and the "respectability" of the place were arrayed against her; the sarcasm and irony of the local press flayed her reputation in advance; and the result was that she had to speak in the face of bitter prejudice and ridicule, and at the imminent peril of her person. But, notwithstanding she represented on that occasion two most unpopular reforms—dress reform and anti-slavery (she was clad in the "Bloomer" costume)—and although, moreover, I was a stout Whig boy, she utterly won my heart. From that hour, I was thoroughly converted to the cause she so nobly championed; and never thereafter did I fail to stand up, through thick and thin, for all those men and women who so faithfully labored, amidst reproach and scorn and danger, for a wronged, a suffering, and a down-trodden people.

And, to-day, I have still a genuine and deep respect for reformers as a class. I entirely comprehend how their souls are aflame with the desire to correct what seem to them the abuses, and to right what seem to them the wrongs, which afflict society at the present time. I understand how they cannot be content to let alone the woes and the ills that harass the body politic, nor hold themselves aloof from the causes that seem to cry out to them for help. I appreciate the impatience which they sometimes appear to feel, that every humane person does not immediately fly to their side, and work with them in that particular reform which they think is of the first and gravest importance. In my own case, I often find it harder to resist such an appeal than to give myself utterly to it; for every arduous and unpopular movement, which has for its honest purpose the betterment of the race, seems to reproach me if I do not labor night and day to help those who are trying to carry it onward. Every despised "Nazareth" has for me a powerful charm, because I am constantly thinking, notwithstanding frequent disappointment, that perhaps some great good, or some splendid soul, is likely to come out of it. I liberally share with all mankind the popular superstition, that a messiah and a millennium are sure to come, whereby and wherein every evil will be changed to good, and the whole race experience a grand redemption.

But I have lived to learn that a glittering illusion and a momentous danger are connected with every reform. The illusion is, that no reform is half so complete or so pressing as it seems; and the danger is, that, in pursuing one idea, one theory, one principle, we lose sight of many others that are equally as important and vital,—and so end in becoming, as reformers, narrow, dogmatic, illiberal, conceited, and vain.

It seems to me that the great gospel of the nineteenth century is the discovery of the law of Evolution; that there is in Nature an irresistible and eternal tendency from the imperfect to the perfect, from the finite to the infinite, from chaos to cosmos. This discovery takes the place of the old notion of the division of the universe between God and the Devil, both of whom were constantly striving with each other, and rallying their respective followers in a mutual and never-ending warfare. Now we see, in the light of this truth of Evolution, that the struggle which is going on in the universe is not at all a fight in the old sense, but a constant and steady unfolding of the germ, and a corresponding adaptation of it to its environment.

And what thought follows from this gospel-discovery of Science, as bearing on the subject of reforms? If there be not at the heart of the universe this sound and healthy germ of all possible good, and if there be not throughout all Nature this eternal and irresistible tendency of the finite to unfold into the infinite,—then all our efforts at reform, all our struggle and striving, are for naught, because there is no help in us or for us. But if it be true that Evolution is the law of the world, and that there is this sure and quickening step of progress to be heard through all the ages,—then it is apparent that the reform which underlies all reforms is our becoming individually conscious of the divine meaning of Nature, and falling in and keeping step with the sublime, unhalting march of Evolution. Then we see that everything does not depend upon us alone, to make society what it should be,—that Nature works even while we are asleep and at rest; while we are doubtful, perhaps, not knowing what to do. Then we lose our spirit of hurry and worry, our spirit of scolding and condemnation, our spirit of controversy and of battle. Then we become, not content with evil, but patient with it,—cheerful, hopeful, believing. Then we cease to be mere benevolent busy-bodies, manipulators, and tinkers, and become philosophic coöperators with each other and with Deity,—looking not to partial and immediate results, but to a comprehensive and gradual fulfilment.

Any reform that is hastened or brought about by violent means is, so far as true progress is concerned, a stumble, not a step. It may be questioned if even the anti-slavery reform were not at last consummated too precipitately; if a more gradual emancipation, including a preparatory education for freedom, might not have been better for both the enslaved and the enslavers. Be that as it may, I think we all look forward to the time when the method of war and violence shall not be resorted to, to reform anything. Moreover, as reformers, we should beware of cherishing any pet theory, and of suffering ourselves to get in the habit of thinking that, if this could be universally adopted, the glory-hallelujah period would arrive at once. A hobby-rider is well nigh an intolerable nuisance to society; he narrows and belittles his own mind, and over-bears the minds of others. The danger that lurks in the path of the special reformer is a subtle one. He is likely to become a bigot and a scold. If once he gets in the habit of denouncing, he is more unfortunate than Othello; for his occupation is almost sure never to forsake him. Both ancient and modern history furnish some striking illustrations of this fact. Besides, in looking persistently in one direction, and suffering our minds to dwell exclusively upon one subject, we become warped and crooked in our judgment, our mind arrives at a stand-still, we see things out of their right relations, and we make ourselves incompetent to judge anything fairly.

It is a question if any really profound and broad mind can long be committed to, or absorbed by, any special reform. Such a mind outgrows one theory or idea; it expands on all sides of it, and takes in many others which are related to and qualify it. Not that such a mind can be said ever to outgrow a principle—say the principle of justice, or equity—but it does outgrow a particular method of applying that principle. It ceases to insist on any one method or theory of reform; it ceases to magnify out of all due proportion any one idea or subject, and passes to a more comprehensive view of the whole situation.

Without wishing to discourage any well-meaning soul, or to dampen the ardor of any enthusiastic reformer, I yet can but wish that we all might be less committed to our own pet notions and plans of reforming the world, less superstitious about the coming of any particular messiah, less bent on taking the kingdom of heaven by violence. We fret ourselves to death with an awful sense of our individual responsibility for everything, and forget that God himself is still alive, and able to do a little something on his own account. We are never certainly to grow lazy or indifferent, never to lapse into selfishness; but we can be, and ought to be, willing to share the responsibility for all things with God, and not try to take his work out of his hands. O ye dear and good reformers, have a little pity on us; and don't hurry us up so on the sharp point of your everlasting zeal to fix things!

A. W. S.

MISS PEABODY'S "KINDERGARTEN MESSENGER."

Many friends of Miss Peabody, as well as of the improvement of educational methods, will be glad to learn that she has been enabled to resume her Kindergarten Messenger, and has just issued a triple number for January, February, and March, and will continue a monthly issue throughout the year. Even those who do not fully agree with Miss Peabody in all she claims for the Kindergarten movement will cheerfully confess that it is doing a great deal to call attention to the real demands of young human nature, and to improve our methods of teaching in primary schools; and no intelligent teacher can fail to learn a great deal from the thoughtful and suggestive papers in this number. At the present time, when drawing is getting introduced as a necessary part of public education, Mr. Spring's lecture on "Modelling" will be read with interest, and his "Practical Hints for Modelling Work" give us the results of many years of experience in a very condensed form. We hope the Messenger will do its work in many schools and homes.

E. D. C.

A WRITER in the Schoolday Magazine has gathered together the following dictionary words as defined by certain small people here and there:—

Back-biter—A flea.
Fan—A thing to brush the warm off with.
Fins—A fish's wings.
Ice—Water that stayed out in the cold and went to sleep.
Nest-egg—The egg the old hen measures by to make new ones.
Pig—A hog's little boy.
Snoring—Letting off sleep.
Snow—Rain all popped out white.
Stars—The moon's eggs.
Trunk (of an elephant)—His front tail.
Wakefulness—Eyes all the time coming unbuttoned.

MR. EMERSON has just delivered in his native town a lecture entitled "True Eloquence," in which he concentrates into a very few words a very graphic and common-sense explanation of the nature of eloquence itself. He says: "He who can convince the excellent Mr. Dunderhead of any truth which Dunderhead does not see must be a man of high art of eloquence. Declamation is common, but such possession as is here required, such transformation of the principles of the truth written in God's language into the truth written in Dunderhead's language, is one of the most powerful weapons forged in the forge of the Almighty."—Christian Union.

IN A LATE severe gale a lady asked a neighbor if he was not afraid his house would blow away. "Oh, no," was the answer, "the mortgage on it is so heavy as to make that impossible."

Communications.

"WIND AND SUN."

The Free Religious Society of Providence, and its friends, had yesterday the good fortune of listening to the clear-cut sentences of Higginson. The topic announced, both in advertisement and by the speaker himself, is indicated above. This title is, however, a misnomer. "Wind or Sun; which?" is more nearly descriptive of the address, and its apparent purport, as actually given.

Quoting Æsop's fable of the contest between north and south wind, the one to compel a traveller to keep his cloak on, the other, by dispersing the clouds, and exposing him to the heat of the sun, to put it off, the speaker made application of it as illustrating two different methods for advancing the interests of free-thought as against Christianity; namely, that of direct antagonism, and that of doing better work, and living better lives, than Christians. He announced himself in favor of the method of the south wind, and deprecated direct antagonism. We should deal with the Church, he said, as it is; not as it has been. The age of persecution is past; the methods which were proper in an age of persecution are inappropriate now. Indeed, so changed is the spirit of the Church from what it was, that he had felt a logical injury was done him by its neglect to act up to its principles, and burn him as a heretic. Persecution there is none, now. Some loss of social consideration, some little inconvenience occasioned by divergent views, there may be. But, Persecution! That is a large word. Etc., etc.

I believe the influence of the discourse, on the whole, a misfortune. It will be reassuring and tranquillizing in quarters even now too apathetic. A clarion-summons to effort would seem more consonant with the needs of the times. Breadth is good, but depth is equally commendable.

While carefully noting what the Church is, it should never be forgotten what it has been, and what it may become again. The creature does not tear and devour at present, it may be; but it is caged now. It is to the strength of its inclosure, and the vigilance of its keepers, not to changed instincts in the beast itself, that we owe present immunity from its ravages.

Sympathize with the Church, coöperate with it, enlist in it every good work, if you can; trust in it, indeed, as far as you may safely; but "keep your powder dry" by duly circumscribing the opportunities and power to do mischief of its infallible popes and constitution-tinkering zealots.

The spirit of persecution does not belong to any age, and therefore does not pass away with any; it is the spirit of bigots in all ages. It comes logically from the premises of Christianity. The Christian's God accounts free-thinking worthy of hell-torments; is it, then, reasonable to expect Christians themselves to judge it deserving of protection and toleration?

Wind and Sun; direct antagonism and competitive goodness and usefulness; each method has its uses.
JOHN FRANCIS SMITH.

PROVIDENCE, R.I., March 1, 1875.

DRESS REFORM MOVEMENT.

In West Amesbury, Massachusetts, at the suggestion of a few friends of the dress reform in this town, Mrs. H. K. Crane, the lady Superintendent of the Dress Reform Rooms, 25 Winter Street, Boston, was prevailed upon to pay us a visit, and to deliver one of the lectures which she gave before the ladies of the Physiological Society, Boston, on the new style of dress reform.

Wednesday last was the eventful evening, and the large, enthusiastic assemblage of ladies who welcomed her, in the Town Hall, gave ample evidence of the deep interest felt by the ladies of Amesbury in this important and benevolent movement. At the rear of the platform diagrams were suspended to illustrate the subject, and in the front of the desk a lay-figure was used, to show the relative advantages of the different under-garments that have been approved by the "Dress Reform Committee," with sundry additions and improvements designed by Mrs. Crane herself. The lecture, which occupied an hour and a half, was listened to with intense interest, and was delivered with an ease and eloquence we have seldom seen surpassed.

Although the lecture was advertised "To Ladies Only," the highly respected physicians of the town were invited, out of courtesy. Dr. Corken introduced the lecturer, and gave a short epitome of the movement from the time of Amelia Bloomer until the suggestion of Dr. Mary Safford Blake, which led to the publishing of What to Wear, by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, and the more detailed work of Abba Gould Woolson on Dress Reform. The doctor highly complimented the lecturer upon her dignified independence and self-consecration to this noble work, and assured her that she had the sympathy of all true reformers in woman's costume, and in woman's elevation to her just and heaven-ordained position in the relationships of life.

At the close of the lecture, Dr. H. I. Cushing spoke in the highest terms of the lecture of Mrs. Crane, and said that, with Dr. Corken, he had no hesitation in giving his unqualified approval to the wise and judicious movement that had been so ably advocated by the distinguished lady lecturer.

Dr. Corken announced an apology from Dr. Sevey, who had been unavoidably prevented from attending.

Free conversation followed, and a group of some hundred ladies surrounded the lecturer to offer their personal thanks and congratulations on the complete success which had attended their first effort in the direction of dress reform.

The seed has not only been sown, but fruit even amid snow appears. More than one lady has said to her tormentors (corsets), "Avaunt! be gone forever!" and considerable diligence appears in trying to make old styles into new. If Mrs. Crane will pay us a second visit, she will gather "ripe fruit" to enjoy in 25 Winter Street.

W. D. C.
WEST AMESBURY, Mass., Feb. 19, 1875.

KIND WORDS.

SALEM, O., Feb. 21, 1875.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I feel like congratulating you, and all lovers of freedom, liberality, and charity, upon the wise and magnanimous course pursued by THE INDEX in giving all sides a hearing. And, by the way, this congratulation is hereby extended to the glorious old Boston Investigator, also.

It seems to me that this glorious spirit of toleration and fairness has marked the course of these two papers in an eminent degree, especially for the past year or more; and we may well be proud and thankful that the men who conduct them have thus the moral courage and heroism actually to go in practice where the logic of their thought carries them.

Your remarks, and those of the Investigator, relative to the course chosen by Professor Denton and Mr. J. W. Pike, at the dedication of the Paine Memorial Hall, it seems to me, were eminently proper and just; and all true reformers must surely respond, "Amen!" and thank you from the bottom of their hearts.

It has been the pride of those who have worked so hard to build this "Home for the Investigator," to declare that its platform should be free, and the hall dedicated to humanity! What a spectacle would be presented to the enlightened world, had the course of Messrs. Denton and Pike been adopted or approved! God pity such a spirit of intolerance and uncharitableness, whether manifested by Christian, Materialist, or Spiritualist!

I have read with great interest the discussion in THE INDEX of the question—"What is the logical attitude of Free Religion (or freedom) toward Christianity?" especially the discourse of Rev. M. J. Savage, and your reply. You seem to have a host of able minds, of various shades of thought, storming your position on this question; and if one should read all their arguments without noticing your replies and cross-questionings, he would doubtless imagine that you had been silenced, and that "Christianity" and "freedom" were in an eternal, peaceful, and loving embrace. But permit me to say that, after reading your arguments, I have from the first been forced to the conviction that your position was impregnable, unless it is agreed that the pure ethical teachings of Jesus alone constitute Christianity, and not the great organized institution of to-day which claims the name.

If this is agreed to, then I submit that the churches themselves are the most "anti-Christian" of all.

To conclude: may I express my delight and gratification at beholding the intense earnestness with which the men and women of thought and culture are discussing the great problems which now agitate the public mind? The friction of deep and earnest thought ever flashes upon the world new and brighter truth; and so long as there is more truth beyond, so long must we have the clashing of intellects to discover it.

To me there is a germ of truth—greater or less—in each school of thought; while none is infallible, all are necessary to complete the whole. While we are developing a more marked and perfect individuality and greater love of personal freedom, we are at the same time tending toward a more perfect unity of the whole human race.

Respectfully,
CHARLES BONSALE.

[In justice to Professor Denton, we refer to the paragraph in a late INDEX which states his own explanation of the matter alluded to. Mr. Bonsale's epithet of "glorious old Investigator," is fairly earned by the reply made by it recently to a radical bigot, who would have made a capital Inquisitor, if he had been born a few hundred years earlier. As both the article and reply are short, we append them in further illustration of the above; and we think every reader of THE INDEX will call the reply of Mr. Seaver truly "glorious."—ED.]

A PROTEST.

EDITOR INVESTIGATOR:—
I for one protest against the request of G. H. Humphrey, to grant him a half column of the Investigator to stick religion at us. Why don't he ask you to let him stack his oats in one end of your parlor, or introduce a little of his "hell fire" into your barn? I have no patience with their superstitious trash. Let him take his merchandise to where it will be appreciated. The columns of the Investigator are too valuable to be lumbered up with such stuff.

Yours,
LANCASTER, O., Feb. 20, 1875.

It is related of Jesus, that he told his disciples if they were not better than the Scribes and Pharisees, then they (the disciples) could not justly claim any superiority. If that was a fair test—and we think it was—let us apply it to the case in hand. Christian papers will not admit into their columns infidel articles. Now if in our infidel paper we reject Christian articles, are we any better than a Christian? Nay, are we not worse? We think we are, because we claim to "hear all sides," and he does not. He is consistent, therefore, in rejecting us, but not so with us in rejecting him.

We need not multiply words. Our friend, J. A. R., sees the point, no doubt; and if so, he will agree with us that we cannot in good faith refuse the Christian Mr. Humphrey a hearing. Why should we fear? If he has any truth to impart, we want it. If we have any, he wants it; so we will both speak, and perhaps both will be benefited.—ED. INV.

FREEDOM AND AUTHORITY.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In offering my thought for your columns I ought to say, first of all, I am in intimate sympathy with the leading dogmas of the visible Church; but I most decidedly take exception to that Church's attempts at a rational construction of its own theses. Simple affirmations of my theologic attitude would doubtless be mostly accepted, with very decided relish, by the votaries of that Church; but let me carry those affirmations into rational explication, and I would most likely be deemed hopelessly heretical. On the other hand, while feeling compelled to take decided exceptions to the general theses of "Free Religion," I am led to believe that in my conceptions of human life and destiny, and the practical endeavors relating thereto, I should be found in intimate relation with its votaries, and find them largely ready to fellowship my views, though perhaps repudiating the root whence I find those views vitalized.

That freedom and authority are both variously essential to human development—both of the individual and the race—will be seen upon due reflection. Freedom sufficient to preserve and duly actuate individuality is indispensable. Authority sufficient to hold the individual or special factor to a true purpose (which should ever be to develop and fix the individual in the dignity and repose of ripest character in full social order, wherein alone the pressure of authority may be dismissed) is equally a necessity.

Thus, clearly, both freedom and authority are essential during the developing processes of the human mind; but, as both are, by right, solely in the interests of man, with a view to fix him in amplest manhood and the unrestricted freedom thereto belonging, neither can be in order upon any other conditions. Accordingly, the right of conventional authority over the human mind is solely pertinent to man's state of minority, wherein educational needs demand educational authority. Then the object of such authority should only be to serve and never to oppress. Such is surely the law of authority, whether relating to man individually or collectively.

A serious mistake is made when conventional authority is held to be objective and final; whereas, truly, it is always temporary and a mean to an end,—is wholly subjective in human use. If it were so regarded and operated it would be changed in its forms, in strict accordance with the changes in advancing human conditions. But, held and used on its own account, it tends to fetter the human mind rather than to rightly empower and enfranchise it. Even in its misconception and abuse we can form some just estimate of its value in civilization to-day, by reflecting as to what would be the social effect of having withdrawn, for a generation, the diction of the Romish Church from its hordes of servile worshippers. Other like forms of authority are in their measure similarly useful, as they relate to different degrees of culture.

We must discriminate between absolute and relative authority,—the former being constant in its form, and the latter changeable, according to the changeable conditions of the human mind in development. Absolute authority is the rule of immutable law, while temporal authority is a rule in the present adjustment of power to immediate human needs, to be kept and operated only till new forms are needed in the same educational interests. The eternal laws of mathematics make a code of unchanging authority, which the human mind hath neither power to annul nor escape. Mental development, in order to command and use those laws as a perfect science of mathematics, necessitates various forms and degrees of authority, all of which come to an end when the mind is fully educated in this particular form of knowledge or science. But the laws which are basic to this knowledge, and constitute it a science, stand immovably as authority forever; and in this constant authority, acquired as science by man, does the mind become duly fortified and free to play thenceforth in all the majestic realms of mathematic power.

I adduce this simple figure to illustrate the true attitude of the human mind with reference to the absolute laws of Life and Being. It is both the right and destiny of the human mind to become perfected in the knowledge of universal law, as a science of universal order; by which all mysteries are readily solved, and all truth is unsealed. And I further affirm that such full mental fruition, or perfection in knowledge as unitary science, implies no stagnation or cessation of mental activities, as is often mistakenly conceived,—no more than the perfect education of the mind in mathematics implies an end of its activities in that realm of special science. It only assures its powers in new and most delightful activities; carrying the thought, in the solution of all problems seized, upon immutable grounds, yielding various charms by the way, and the highest delights in results.

It is here that we find the liberty of perfect law and the law of perfect liberty; for, when our freedom works in the fulness of absolute law, and that law finds its completest expression in our freedom, what remains to add to our joy? Here, too, we come to a valid comprehension of the old dogma of the divine fulness in the unity of liberty and law, relative and absolute, God and man, by which both factors are glorified together.

I have thus briefly tried to hint concerning the methods by which the intellect is educated into highest truths, and how it is empowered and disenthralled in absolute science as the supreme law of liberty. I might add concerning the affections as to how they are vitalized concurrently with the intellect, and play therewith in perfect unison, in the fullest behests of life; but will merely summarize further.

Personal freedom is a necessity of the human form, being subject to temporary conventional qualifications and restraints, in behalf of the ultimate realization of absolute freedom in a duly educated manhood.

Conventional authority is requisite as a ministry in the development and organization of human powers; always in order when thus used as a servant, and out of order when held and used in its own behalf to partial and inhuman ends.

Absolute authority—the immovable law of Life and Being—is constant and supreme; and becomes the full consummation of man's highest freedom and delight when he becomes educated into full unity therewith, just as the laws which make any special science a human power are delightful authority when incorporated in the intellect as positive knowledge.

The principles thus verbally outlined were clearly set forth long centuries ago as a system of Divine Authority and human freedom made one; yet the professed votaries of that system to-day seem to be stone-blind as to its transcendent divine pith and human significance; seem mostly wanderers amongst the tombs,—groping over the proper abodes of all that is dead and dying in human affairs.

Theron Gray.

SANITARY REFORMS.

Our lives are mainly physical ones, and any principle or belief affecting our physical actions is quite as important as moral principles or belief. The theories of curing diseases by the use of poisons that will cause either similar or opposite diseases are as pernicious as a parallel political or moral belief. It is the one great error that stands in the path of sanitary reforms, and directly encourages physical vice.

Disease is caused by violations of organic laws. To teach that the penalty can be avoided in any way is to make sinning cheap; but to teach that it is done by the means of another violation is to sweep away all foundation for physical right and wrong. Reason and science give place to mystery and chance. Disease attacks us; the cause is obscured; and the clergy talk of a "mysterious Providence." It is impossible to have physical morality on such a basis. Intemperance can defy prohibitory laws and crusades, so long as stimulants are so indispensable.

These theories are sustained or proved by exceptional rather than uniform results, while diverse, opposite, and ever-changing methods of practice show that the results are far from satisfactory. But it is not the direct practice that I would now criticize, but the results that come from this unreasonable and pagan principle. It is not denied that poisons and other destructive agents may be used to effect desired, and even beneficial, ends. Thus assassination may be the means of ridding a country of a bad ruler; or a child who is about to grasp a hot iron may be harshly kicked away and saved from a burn. But this does not justify the use of these methods, or make them less destructive in their nature.

Just so far as the people rely on remedies will they be blind as to the cause, and indifferent about preventing diseases. They will be no better or wiser after suffering the severest penalties. The world to-day is groaning under severe physical penalties, but seeking for relief in remedies, and growing wiser very slowly. When the people have a clear perception of the fact that physical disobedience brings a sure penalty, and that obedience to the laws of health is the only sure and reliable road to health, we shall have an outpouring of sanitary reforms that will be the dawn of a new era in the "Coming Religion."

W. V. HARDY.

IMMORTALITY.

NEW YORK, March 3, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—It is pleasant to read the frank words which in issue of February 25 you use concerning immortality, in answering a communication. So many liberal-minded people seem fearful of expressing a doubt about any subject which Christians say they are united upon, that it is refreshing to read your plain words.

Why should we question so much about another life? A higher power of whose being we know not placed us in this world; by no influence of our own did we come. The same power will take us away, through the result of Nature's laws. The only vital question is the present,—how to live most nobly, that we may be worthy the blessings showered upon us.

The future is not ours; and I often think, if we could borrow some of the earnestness of the old philosophers, and live more in the present, live in the full sense of the word nobly, we were more likely to "see God" than by borrowing trouble or fear regarding the future.

The past is ours to profit by; the present is ours to fill full of earnest purposes and works worthy of our truest manhood and womanhood; the future is God's. Am I not right? Yours truly, "A."

ENGLAND spends five times as much for charity as for education; while Switzerland spends five times as much for education as for charity.—J. Scott Russell, in the London Times.

GREAT evils are apt to excite great powers of endurance; but small annoyances fall upon us in our undefended moods, and have us at advantage.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.	13 " 25 "	26 " 51 "	52 " "
	8 " "	6 " "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association.

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal
DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist, With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games, a new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig, and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aim and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being Practical Illustrations of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	2.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasie Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknowable River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	6.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....
Mosses from an Old Manse.....
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....
The Marble Faun.....
The English Note-Books.....
The American Note-Books.....
The French and Italian Note-Books.....
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Maiden. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel- 1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poses for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith. Four Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans. Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....
The Newcomes.....
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....
The Virginians.....
Esmond; or, Love the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon. Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denial, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.0
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Slings and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Wayner's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.
A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wi dom. Price, $1.50. Address
THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIG-ION.
By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!
A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FREE DISCUSSION
is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious,
Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS
AT BELFAST.

Seventh Edition,
Containing the First and Second Prefaces replying to his Critics, an extract from the Manchester Lecture, and the paper on "Scientific Materialism" in full. 120 pages.
Price 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, 1
Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

SCHOOL MUSIC BOOKS.

Commence your instruction with
AMERICAN SCHOOL MUSIC READERS.
IN THREE BOOKS.

Book I. [35 cts.] has a charming course for Primary Schools. Book II. [50 cts.] has one equally attractive for Grammar Schools, and Book III. [50 cts.] is fitted for higher Grammar classes and High Schools. The very practical, interesting, and thorough course in these books was constructed by L. O. Emerson and W. S. Tilden.

For a companion book use
Cheerful Voices. A large collection of genial School Songs, by L. O. Emerson. A popular book. 50 cts.

Afterward take up
THE HOUR OF SINGING, CHOICE TRIOS, or
THE SONG MONARCH.

These books are for HIGH SCHOOLS and ACADEMIES. The Hour of Singing [$1.00] by L. O. Emerson and W. S. Tilden, is arranged for 2, 3 or 4 voices. Choice Trios [$1.00] by W.
S. Tilden, for 3 voices, are choice in every sense, and The Song Monarch [75 cts.] by H.
R. Palmer, assisted by L. O. Emerson, unexcelled as a book for Singing Classes, is equally good for High Schools.

All books sent, post-paid, for retail price.
OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

NOTICE TO THE LIBERAL
PUBLIC.

M. ALTMAN & Co., }
301 & 303 6th Ave., N.Y. }

I have during the last six years kept my name and business constantly before the readers of Liberal papers, and have during that time supplied most of them with merchandise from my establishment, orders in most cases coming through the advertisements published by me.

But the limited space necessarily occupied in a newspaper makes it impossible to enumerate or specify accurately the many articles required by the public, and I have been,
and still am, in receipt of many letters begging for a more detailed Price List or Catalogue. I have determined to issue the most complete Price List of Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Ladies' and Gents' Undergarments and Outfits, Suits, Costumes, Hosiery, Gloves, and the thousand small articles in Millinery,
Notions, and Haberdashery, that has ever been circulated, free of cost, to all who may send stamp and address. The matter is now in the hands of the printer, and by the time this is read will be ready to mail. Send on your addresses, with stamp for return postage. Liberals who may not be able, or who hesitate to send stamp, may simply send their address, and I will mail a few for distribution among their friends.

Faternally yours,

MORRIS ALTMAN.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.
At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS,
Williamsburg, N. Y.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone,
Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten
Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address
SEDBEER, SHEPARD & MILLER,
181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

PREMIUM CHESTER WHITE
PIGS.—$15 each, $28 a pair. Chester County
MAMMOTH CORN, and Imported BEL-GIAN OATS. 4 lbs. by mail, $1; peck, $2;
one-half bushel, $3; Circulars and Sample Packages of Seeds free for two Stamps. Address N. P. BOYER, Parkersburg Chester Co., Penn.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,
NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPA-PERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

TWO NEW BOOKS.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIV-ILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dume Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN
CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY,
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 2 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son
& Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York.
No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, and samples of dry goods.
20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE COLORADO HORTICULT-
URIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.
Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H.
FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds,
Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado
Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please
you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c.
each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds,
10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.
FOSTER & CO., Publishers,
P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address
S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents
wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomer for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & CO.,
Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E.
Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPU-LAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN
THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c.,
of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER
LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt,"
"Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Her-etics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc.
Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHI-LOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticism on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-
Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which
Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings.
Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol.
8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published;
he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying:
"It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FREE

SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND RE-VIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTER-EST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate
the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London;
Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long,
London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark
H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,

256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-TION.

HORTICULTURAL HALL

LECTURES

FOR 1875.

The Committee of the Free Religious Association, in charge of the Horticultural Hall Lectures on Sunday afternoons, again invite the friends interested in maintaining these lectures, either for their own or for others' sake, to contribute the money necessary for the purpose. It is believed that, from winter to winter, such friends will be glad to join in offering the course, as their gift, free to the public. Their speakers—whose names and subjects will be found below,—in receiving but thirty dollars for a carefully prepared essay, are themselves the largest contributors. The whole expenses for this winter, including the hall, &c., will be about seven hundred dollars. Money sent to any one of the undersigned committee will be gratefully acknowledged:—

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, 139 Federal St.,
Boston.

HANNAH E. STEVENSON, 32 Mt. Vernon St.,
Boston.

CHARLES K. WHIPPLE, 19 Pinckney St.,
Boston.

J. C. HAYNES, 277 Washington St., Boston.

W. C. GANNETT, 155 Boylston St., Boston.

Boston, Dec. 15, 1874.

Seventh Course of Horticultural Hall

Lectures on Sunday Afternoons.

Jan. 3.—O. B. FROTHINGHAM, "The Scientific View of Human Nature."

Jan. 10.—ANDREW D. WHITE, President of Cornell University, "The Warfare of Science."

Jan. 17.—WILLIAM B. WEEDEN, of Providence, "Evils of Prohibitory Liquor Laws."

Jan. 24.—SAMUEL JOHNSON, "Laws of Personal Function Unrecognized in American Life."

Jan. 31.—CHARLES G. AMES.

Feb. 7.—WENDELL PHILLIPS, "Some Aspects of the Labor Question."

Feb. 14.—WILLIAM J. POTTER, "Names and Things in Religion."

Feb. 21.—Hall occupied by Fair for Protection of Dumb Animals.

March 7.—DEXTER A. HAWKINS, Chairman of Committee on Education of the New York City Council of Political Reform,
"Our 'Sick Man,' and How to Cure Him;
or, The Educational Problem in the Cotton States."

March 14.—JOHN WEISS, "Tragedy in Nature."

March 21.—FRANCIS E. ABBOT, "Individualism; or Atomism in Religion."

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 25, 1875.

WHOLE No. 274.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

WHAT is the difference (if any) between the "Pater-familias" and the "Pat, or family ass"?

THE REPORT of the Massachusetts Commission on "Equal and Just Taxation" is out. So great has been the demand that another edition is to be printed by the State. Next week we shall issue a "Church Taxation" number of THE INDEX.

AN ENGLISH Ritualist writes a public protest to the Church Times because the priest in Hamlet was "vested in a chasuble with a cope over it," at a recent theatrical performance, and not in "a cassock and surplice." What a pother about nothing!

THE CATHOLICS of Acapulco, on the evening of January 26, were guilty of a terrible massacre of Protestants in the church occupied by Rev. Mr. Hutchinson and his Presbyterian congregation. Several men and women were murdered outright, and many more were wounded. The tiger is a tiger still; the cage is a necessity.

THE Banner of Light, following Judge Edmonds, who followed the Roman Catholic clergy, who followed nobody knows whom or what, estimates the number of Spiritualists in this country as 11,000,000. The Spiritual Scientist, however, believes that there are "not 800,000 Spiritualists in the United States." The latter estimate is apparently much nearer the truth than the former.

THE ST. LOUIS Central Law Review of February 5 says, in opposition to the Christianizers of the Constitutions: "It is not true, as these persons claim, that we are a Christian nation. We are a Christian nation only in the sense that a majority of our people are nominally Christians. We are in fact a nation of any and all religions; and our people, instead of being all Christians, are Christians, Infidels, Jews, and Pagans." This is true.

THE LATEST lottery scheme is that of Beadle & Adams, 98 William Street, New York, who advertise that they will send $5.00 cash premium to every fifth subscriber for a certain journal of theirs, all names to be entered as received. That is, they run a lottery in which every fifth ticket wins $5.00. And this advertisement is admitted into a "religious journal" which is published by the "great and good" Henry C. Bowen solely for the purpose of "saving souls"—and making money!

THERE is a verse in the book of Proverbs which reads thus: "And thou shalt have goat's milk enough for thy food, for the food of thy household, and for the maintenance of thy maidens." An old-time minister interpreted this verse as follows: "Milk denotes nourishment, goats signify sinners; hence the passage teaches that it is the will of God that the Church should milk the goats—in other words, get all the money it needs from sinners." On the strength of no better reasoning than this, the Church milks the goats still, and makes the "infidels" and other sinners foot her own tax-bills.

THE DANGER of dabbling in radicalism, if one wants to maintain a good "Christian" reputation, is well illustrated by the following from the Independent: "The Liberal Christian has been reading the newspaper reports of sermons of Dr. Hall, Dr. Armitage, and other evangelical clergymen whose houses are filled with hungry hearers who suppose themselves to be fed, and finds in them nothing but the old story about 'the faith of the apostles, the divine scheme of salvation, and the mediatorial restoration of man,' and is inclined to think that, instead of going to church, the 'coming man,' if he is a sensible fellow, will stay at home. If he is like the present man, it is just such churches that will throng to overflowing. We thought we must be reading THE INDEX when our eyes fell on the passage."

IN THESE days when the public treasury is the common grab-bag of thieves and speculators, the noble pride of George Washington ought to be remembered with admiration. The Christian Union thus testifies to it: "It would be wrong for the American people to forget that, if ever there was a public servant who maintained toward his employers an absolute and almost Quixotic delicacy in money matters, it was Washington. He carried his scruples so far that he never took a salary. When he was appointed General, he said to Congress: 'As no pecuniary consideration could have tempted me to accept this arduous employment, I do not wish to make any profit from it. I will keep an exact account of my expenses. Those, I doubt not, they will discharge; and that is all I desire.' Such an account he kept. It is now to be seen in his own handwriting. Washington, as General, cost the country a few cents over $8,044 per year, during the war, besides the supplies furnished his military household by commissaries and others. He preserved the same spirit during his presidency. In his first inaugural speech he says: 'When I was first honored with a call into the service of my country, then on the eve of an arduous struggle for its liberties, the light in which I contemplated my duty required that I should renounce every pecuniary consideration. From this resolution I have in no instance departed. And being still under the impressions which produced it, I must decline as inapplicable to myself any share in the personal emoluments which may be indispensably included in a permanent provision for the executive department; and must accordingly pray that the pecuniary estimates for the station in which I am placed may, during my continuance in it, be limited to such actual expenditures as the public good may be thought to require.' Such was Washington's spirit as a holder of public office."

SUPERFICIAL OBSERVERS of the signs of the times are in the habit of ridiculing the Christianizers of the Constitution, as if their fanaticism had no hold on any large part of the people. But they forget that superstition lets rationalism do the talking, while it stands ready to act on short notice in case of emergency. The recent expulsion of Mr. J. W. Thorne from the North Carolina Legislature, on the score of (falsely) alleged atheism, is an instance in point. The Raleigh News of February 23, admitting that Mr. Thorne had declared his "belief in the existence of a Supreme Being," pronounced this declaration insufficient; said that "this is the question the House has to decide to-day, whether the accused believes in the God of the Bible or the philosopher's God of Nature"; and appealed to the "Preamble to the Bill of Rights," which "acknowledges a dependence upon Almighty God for the blessings we enjoy." "This," adds the News, "must mean a God who directs human wants, who loves, and who chastises. This is the Christian's God, and this is the God meant in the Constitutional disqualification." It is thus the recognition of God in the North Carolina Constitution which is at the bottom of this great blow at religious liberty; and for this there is no existing remedy. When the Detroit Post says: "If Mr. Thorne can by any process get his case before the courts, the action of the North Carolina House in expelling him because of his religious belief cannot stand for a moment," it ought surely to be understood that there is no process whatever by which Mr. Thorne can get redress from the courts. The Legislature is the supreme judge of the qualifications of its own members by the Constitution of every State; no State court can get behind that. Neither is there anything in the United States Constitution to-day to give him any redress. Read our proposed "Religious Freedom Amendment" on this very page, and you will see the only measure which can ever rectify such wrongs as this.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TULEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VIKELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SACK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Pre-Natal Influence.

AN ESSAY READ TO THE SECOND RADICAL CLUB, BOSTON, MARCH 8, 1875.

BY DR. MARY J. SAFFORD BLAKE.

If I could place before you at this moment one of the finest binocular microscopes, and thereby increase your power of vision two thousand times, what a world of hidden life, of beauty, and of wonder would be revealed to you. After you had taken a glance at the before unseen throng surrounding you, how eager you would be to concentrate your gaze, if I told you that under your object-glass was a protoplasmic atom, a germ of life.

In the moment of eager expectation you might find yourself querying, as did the philosophers of old, Will there not be revealed to us in this germ the seat of life, the habitat of the soul?

How you would concentrate your visual power, wipe your eyes, carefully adjust the eye-glass, brush it that it be not dimmed, and then, as if I could help you out of the dilemma, you might turn to me and acknowledge that you see only a pellucid atom, void of shape and form. Chagrined though I am to confess it, I should be powerless to show you more. No human skill can decide if this molecule contain within it the inherent something that shall enable it to develop into the highest or lowest form of life,—into man, bird, protozoæ, or plant. It would seem, so Maudsley says, that this cell is possessed of a memory that makes it loyal to its ancestry. Suppose the conditions of this atom which we are examining are favorable to the development of the human species, we shall then find a germ capable of receiving the anatomical, physiological, pathological, and psychological traits and tendencies peculiar to its parents; or, what is more singular, according to the law of atavism, those of its ancestors dating back three or four generations.

This being the case, well might Emerson exclaim, "Who shall save us from our ancestors?" or Montaigne, "What a monster is this germinal atom from which we spring, carrying with it not only the corporeal form, but the thoughts and inclinations of our forefathers!" Let me state some of the peculiarities pertaining to this law of heredity.

This law holds true in all life, both animal and vegetable. In man it has a dual manifestation. In the physical structure, in his anatomy, it is shown in a marked degree in the peculiar cranial and physiological development of the several races of the human family. On the other hand, mental peculiarities are no less marked. Let us first note the effects of inheritance on physical life.

This law has been closely studied in its relation to animals. Stock-breeding has received much attention both in Europe and America. The massive English draught-horse, the fleet racer, and the Shetland pony are illustrations of the varieties that may be brought about in the horse. Darwin has shown, by careful selections of peculiarities to be observed, that almost any degree of difference can be produced in domestic animals. Plant-life furnishes numerous illustrations of this law. Our finest apples were all produced from the gnarly crab. All of our tomato-plants under cultivation, the large and the small, originally came from one plant, now known as Sycopersicum esculentum. A celebrated Frenchman has shown, by experimenting with the Daucus carota, that six generations were sufficient to produce from the wild carrot our favorite edible one. The varied beauty of the wild aster has charmed your eye; its city cousin, magnified ten-fold, with all its varied lines and frilled to perfection, is the handiwork of the skilled florist. The step from the little single aster, growing by the wayside, to the larger showy quilled one of your lawns is a long one; but the variation from one generation to another, of which the gardener has taken advantage in the production of the latter, has been exceedingly slow. A slight increase in size, a deepening of a tint, a delicate turning of a petal, have been watched for, and, added together, generation after generation, the result is the present showy aster.

The instances are rare in which any special attention has been bestowed upon a perfect development of the human species. We all remember the account of that historic body, the guard of Frederic the Great, famous for their immense physique; and that this commanding stature should be perpetuated in the offspring, they were allowed to marry none but women of corresponding size.

The practice of the ancient Greeks of putting away their maimed, dwarfed, and diseased children, that they might not perpetuate their physical defects, shows how early this law of inheritance was recognized. Strength and perfection of body was the ideal of the Greeks. At the present time this has been lost sight of in a more thorough study of the development of the intellect. The most rapid progress must unite the two.

Galton, who has very thoroughly studied the laws of heredity, says that the dexterous oarsmen and athletes of England have followed the same occupations for generations in the same family. The same is true of rope-walkers or skilful dancers. The individual characteristics of each parent are sometimes strikingly reproduced in their children. This is shown in the intermarriage of races of opposite color. A child having one African and one Anglo-Saxon parent may partake wholly of the characteristics of either father or mother.

Another forcible illustration is that of Lislet Geoffrey. He was the son of an ignorant negress, from whom he took her color and form; from his father, an intellectual white, his talent, which was so marked that he overcame all obstacles thrown in his way in the acquirement of knowledge, and died crowned with the highest honor that literary fame knows in France,—that of being a member of the French Academy of Science.

Idiosyncrasies of physical development often run a marked course through several generations; they may be transmitted by either parent, they may be shared equally in the children, by both sexes. This is frequently seen in polydactylia, a superabundance of fingers and toes, or in some peculiarity of form of the same. An organic arrest of development of a part of the body, as in hair-lip, is not infrequently seen in the same family in successive generations. Of hereditary anomalies, that peculiar one of Edward Lambert is the most remarkable. His whole body, except the face, the palms of his hands and of his feet, was covered by a horny excrescence. His entire family, six sons, each, when six weeks old, presented the same strange appearance. They, in turn, transmitted it to their sons, and this ran through five generations.

I recall the following cases: First, that of a girl whose hair at twelve years of age was silvered with gray; her father's had become gray at the same early age. The second, a boy who, at seventeen, retained not a trace of his original black hair; his mother and grandmother had this same marked peculiarity. If the theory respecting the change of color in the hair is correct, that it is a nervous influence, then again is illustrated the subtle force that nerves contribute to the law of heredity. These illustrations are in accord with a very generally-accepted theory that peculiarities of the father impress themselves more frequently upon the daughters, and those of the mother upon the sons.

Questions, such as have been cited, become familiar to us, and we cease to think of their deep significance; but when we come to note the heredity of acquired modifications, each individual cell of the body becomes magnified in importance. Virchow says that this anatomic element plays the same rôle in the organism that the individual does in the State; that it has a certain measure of independence, and at the same time makes an integral part in the social body. The following well-authenticated cases admirably illustrate Virchow's theory.

A boy was bitten by a dog; a peculiar scar upon the cheek and a drooping of one of the eyelids was the result. The child grew to manhood, married, and became the father of a son; and the scars were reproduced on this son in the same place and to the same degree as exhibited in the father. This law is still further illustrated by fractured bones which have been badly set, and causing deformity in the parent, which deformity is reproduced in the offspring. The eyes of a certain woman were made by disease defective in sight and revolting in appearance. Her children, five in number, born after this calamity befell her, were similarly affected. The fear that such a thing might occur was continually in her mind, and no doubt the impressions of the mother, communicated by the nervous system to the part affected, produced this abnormal condition in her children.

Prof. Laycock and others say that the mind may exert an influence through the circulation, that mental states may cause the dilatation and the contraction of the small vessels that convey nutriment to the cells of the glands and tissues.

Tuke says: "The result of impressions made upon the senses from without cause sensation and motion, and important changes in the organic functions of the body." Carpenter maintains that influences are transmitted, not only through the vaso-motor nerves, by virtue of mere action on the calibre of the vessels, but by the direct action upon nutrition and secretion.

Having dwelt somewhat at length upon the physical man, influenced by heredity, we will now consider his mental condition; for, as George Eliot says:—

"What! shall the trick of nostrils and of lips
 Descend through generations, and the soul
 That moves within our frame like God in worlds
 Imprint no record, leave no documents
 Of her great history?"

In his intellectual status, we find man "heir of the ages," and, as Maudsley suggests, inheriting as a natural endowment the laborious acquisitions of his forefathers. To illustrate this, we have but to mention the names of Vernet, Bonheur, Teniers, Caracchi, and Titian, to find that art, as a talent, manifested itself as an inheritance. In the family of Titians there were nine distinguished artists.

The opportunities granted women from the early ages down to quite recent periods for the exercise of the talents they possessed have been so few, that it is impossible to tell how much of latent power has slumbered in them. A daughter of one of the noted masters of Sienna inherited a fair share of her father's talent; for fear of incurring his displeasure, or of calling down upon her the ridicule of friends, she painted in secret. By chance her father came upon one of her pictures which possessed so much merit that he was proud to show her work, and to encourage her to continue in it. And now in the gallery of her native city hang, side by side, the works of father and daughter. We do not know how many Rosa Bonheurs have been lost to the world. With so little to aid, and with so much to oppose, in her earlier years, only a brave spirit, in whom the love of science was ingrained, would have ever developed into a Mary Somerville.

We cannot, I think, overrate the influence that mothers have exerted upon their offspring. The very desires and yearnings that they may have had for more knowledge, and for the privilege of exercising, in congenial ways, that which they did possess, may have impressed itself upon the minds of their offspring as germ-talents.

In music, there is the remarkable instance of heredity in the Bach family, which stamped itself as genius through eight generations. Beethoven's musical talent was the climax of a gift that had distinguished his father and grandfather. There were æsthetic tastes in Mendelssohn's family preluding his musical genius. His father was a connoisseur in music, and his sister was endowed by Nature with a musical talent which, in her youth, gave equal promise with that of her brother. We have every reason to believe, with like opportunities for a development of it, and with corresponding stimuli, she might have become as famous as her brother as a musician and as a composer.

Literary talent, as a direct transmission, has been less frequently observed. Mental gifts in other directions have been noted among the children of writers. Ada, sole daughter of Byron's house, had a remarkable mathematical talent. Goethe recognizes a share of his talent as an inheritance from his mother, who possessed a clear brain and markedly individual traits of character. Much of Schiller's fine spirituality has been traced for its origin to the beautiful nature of his mother. Lord Bacon's mother was a noted Greek and Latin scholar. Cuvier's mother is said to have been chiefly instrumental in directing the steps of her son in the paths of science. Among the Herschels, there is the father, his brother, his son and daughter, all distinguished scientists. Of the Darwins whose fame is well known, there are grandfather, son, and grandson. Marshal Saxe was the great-grandfather of George Sand. Many more instances might be shown, that he who is favorably begotten receives an impetus toward well-doing, that cannot be wholly supplied to the less fortunate by the most favorable conditions of education.

As the sculptor models the plastic clay into an ideal form, giving his best thought to its conception and creation, so may the parent, directed by love divine, in harmony of spirit and holiness of purpose, influence largely the embryotic germ as his will directs. We may have then the clean offspring of a holy marriage, or the child of lust. Let the intelligence of man, which places him above the animal, decide which it shall be.

Parental impressions are only beginning to be observed by scientists with care and intelligence. Each has been left to interpret them according to the dictates of his fancy; but now the crucible of scientific investigation is testing them, and we may hope soon to know more of their subtle workings. Let me state a few cases that have been communicated to me through trustworthy sources. An American gentleman living in Spain buried his wife there. She was a lovely blonde; her complexion, hair, and eyes were all expressive of a delicate, sensitive nature. She died childless. Her husband married again, and this time a thoroughly Spanish brunette. Their first child, a girl, resembled his first wife so markedly, not only in complexion, but in features, that when they returned to America it was difficult to persuade the friends that this was not the child of the first wife.

The illicit children of married men have often been known to resemble their wives. An Englishman living in China many years ago, and who was known not to have been over-scrupulous in morals, returned to England and married a fair young lady, and their first child, a daughter, bore the peculiar Chinese features in as marked a degree as if she had been born of Chinese parents.

Tuke says: "Probably every sensory impression once produced is registered in the cerebral hemisphere, and may be reproduced at some subsequent time, and yet there be no consciousness of its existence." These important and interesting phenomena may be accounted for by supposing them analogous to the photographer's impression left upon the negative, which awaits only the proper conditions for development. So likewise these subtle influences which have unconsciously but indelibly stamped themselves upon the human organism await development. They then become a transmitted inheritance.

Nervous impressions made upon the mother during the period of gestation may interfere decidedly with the nutrition of the child's mind and body. I can but believe that the so called mother-marks are the result of impressions which take form, it may be, in the shape of an undue supply of blood, or a lack of a proper amount of the same, to the part affected. Several instances during the Franco-Prussian war were observed of children born with amputated limbs; it was ascertained that the mothers had been shocked by learning that a corresponding limb of some dear one had been lost in battle.

Peculiarities of disposition as an inheritance can be had in every individual. The captain of a vessel was lost at sea, some of the crew were saved, and his wife believed her husband to be among the number. Day by day she watched with intense anxiety his coming. Every footfall by day or night aroused the hope in her that he had come. A child, to whom she gave birth several months after her husband's death, from infancy onward to maturity was never known to sleep if a footfall were heard, and her whole life was characterized by an anxious expectancy. Children born of mothers who have endured great grief during pregnancy often cry incessantly for months after their birth, and may even carry this gloomy tendency through life. Draper says that the primitive cell helplessly submits to whatever impression is put upon it, and the descendant becomes like the ancestor.

In no direction of development are we more impressed with this than in the heredity of tastes, and this again is nowhere more strikingly exemplified than in the taste for intoxicating liquors. There are those who dare not look even upon the wine-cup when it is red, and how much less taste its contents. A mother who had an abnormally craving desire for brandy gave birth to a child that was not pacified by its food. Remembering her unsatisfied longings, the mother suggested, as an experiment, giving the child a few drops of brandy and water; and from that time it was quiet and satisfied with the nourishment given it. Two children found a flask of spirits that was kept in the house for medicinal purposes, and drank therefrom till they were helplessly intoxicated. When the parents returned and learned the cause of the illness of their children, thinking to stop any desire in them for liquor in the future, offered them more. At the sight of it one turned his head in disgust, but the other one seized the cup, and would gladly have drained its contents. The father bowed his head in silence, in sorrow, and remorse, knowing too well the origin of the taste. The after-life of this child was a struggle with the tempter; occasionally it mastered him, and I have heard him say that sobriety had cost him a great effort. Dr. Morrill examined the condition of one hundred and fifty children between the ages of ten and seventeen from the poorer classes of England, the majority the offspring of criminals, and of those addicted to the use of liquor; he says, not only were these children endowed with a depraved physiognomy, but there was stamped upon them the triple curse of physical, intellectual, and moral degeneracy. When we realize the large numbers of children not only among the poor and ignorant, but also among the educated and wealthy, that are conceived when the demon alcohol is coursing through the blood of one or both parents, we are not surprised that drunkards and criminals are the result.

Last winter I made constant visits to the poorest and most degraded occupants of dilapidated tenement houses in Boston. Among many other similar experiences, I recall a bare attic room, within it husband and wife, both lying upon a pile of rags in one corner, stupefied by liquor. The wife and mother, half clad and deformed, clasped in her arms a six-months old babe which was drawing its nourishment from her poisoned milk. If the imp of darkness had conspired to imbue the child's nature with the worst possible influence, nothing more could have been done to bring about this demoralizing result.

In another den of wretchedness I saw a little child whose head scarcely reached above the table drink empty a cup before I could seize it, that contained whiskey that had been prescribed by the city physician attending the dying mother of the child. We must take into consideration that inherited alcoholism shows itself, not alone in drunkenness, but in the form of mania, and of hypochondria. As Carpenter says, it weakens the will, excites the lower propensities, and blunts the moral sense. Dr. Howe, of Boston, reports that, of four hundred idiots in Massachusetts, one hundred and forty-five were the children of intemperate parents. He says further that the transmission of any infirmity is not always direct, it is not always in the same form. It may be modified by the influence of one sound parent; it may skip one generation, it may affect one in one form, and one in another; so in a thousand ways it may elude observation, because it may affect a child by diminishing, and not by destroying, the vigor of its mind and body, almost paralyzing the mental faculty or giving fearful activity to the animal propensity, and so reappearing in the child in a different dress from that worn by the parents.

Dr. Thompson, of England, who had an extended and intimate experience of years with criminals, cites many instances in which several members of a family, running through three generations with alcoholic taints, were imprisoned for various offenses and executed for murders they had committed. We have had in Boston the past year, in the person of a tender youth, a fearful example of mania for the torturing and murdering of children with whom he came in contact. If the mental condition of the mother could be known when she was carrying her child, there would be a possibility of striking at the root of this propensity. He may have been an unwelcome child, and she may have pondered in her heart his destruction; may even have made the effort to destroy him. When asked for his motives in committing such cruel deeds, his reply was, "I could not help it."

In China, when a capital crime is committed, the physical and mental condition of the offender is scrupulously considered; but the investigation does not cease here. The person's antecedents are inquired into from the more distant branch to his immediate family, and sometimes the parents, or even those more distantly related, share his punishment.

I was told recently of a man who declared that the taste for tobacco was a natural one, and proved his assertion in his own case; for he and all of his brothers had chewed it with a relish from their childhood. Upon further inquiry it was found that his father had used it, both his grandfather and grandmother, and so on for generations before. It is not surprising, following the law of development, that this habit had become a natural one.

The use of all the lesser stimuli—tea, coffee, and spices—indulged in by the parent, is not lost sight of in their influence on the child. They prepare the way for the desire for stronger irritants. Aided in our observation by the microscope, we have learned that an especial food is set apart for the development of the queen bee. A careful selection of diet during gestation may add to the finer qualities of cell-growth in the human embryo.

Aversion in taste is also hereditary. I knew a child whose father had an especial dislike for animal food. This boy has never been induced to take it, and avoids going near a market where it is for sale. A distaste for certain foods is so deeply rooted that some are made very uncomfortable by sitting near them at table.

Inherited diseases are so universal that we need not cite far-fetched cases, but rather call to mind many instances in our own circle of friends and acquaintances.

The skillful, careful physician never fails to inform himself, if possible, in forming his diagnosis, regarding the inherited mental and physical predisposition, not only of his patient, but of his forefathers. Since life-insurance has become a legitimate business, this subject has been so carefully considered that, given the health-status and longevity of the ancestors, a very close estimate can be made of one's own life chances. Sudden deaths at a certain age have been known to run through a generation of families. Suicidal tendencies often are inherited. In the beautiful valley of Aosta every third child born develops into cretinism, or is affected by gôitre. The climate, the air, and the water have in turn been considered by scientists responsible for it. I have never seen reference made to the surroundings of the mother during gestation as influencing it, which seems to me exceedingly probable, when we consider the burdens she bears. She gleams from the valleys and mountain-sides, far distant it may be, heavy loads of wood which are carried home on her head. The hay that she cuts with a sickle high up the mountain she takes home in the same way. The water used by the household is poised in heavy buckets in like manner upon the head. To see the bloodvessels in the necks of these women, distended under such long-continued pressure; to go into the ill-ventilated rooms in which they are crowded with their domestic animals; to know that hundreds of years of close intermarriage have been carried on among these diseased and imbecile people,—and one cannot but be impressed with the belief that science need not seek alone among the elements for the source of their degraded condition.

Holmes says of family idiosyncrasies: "It is frightful to see all the hereditary uncomeliness of infirmity of body, all defects of speech, all the failings of temper, intensified by concentration, so that every fault of our own finds itself multiplied by reflections like our images in a saloon lined by mirrors. The lines are very finely shaded that blend into one, idiosyncrasy and insanity. The former, being a less marked deviation from the normal, does not stamp itself in so forcible a degree as an inheritance."

Transmission of the grosser appetites often causes the recipient a lifetime struggle to keep them in abeyance. Sexual abuse in the parents is not infrequently transmitted to the children in the form of idiosyncrasy, or of paralysis. Maudsley, in his Pathology of Mind, says that the descendants of men whose minds have dwelt solely on the acquiring of wealth so degenerate mentally and physically that it leads in a few generations to the extinction of the family. Habit is an acquired disposition. This shows itself in the facility by which languages are learned, in the skilled movements of the fingers of musicians, and in the writing of different nations. An English child, educated in France, very rarely loses the peculiar English chirography. The influence of intermarriage upon heredity cannot, perhaps, be more pertinently illustrated than by citing the close relationship that has existed for so many years among the Jews. Their religion has restrained them from intermingling with other nations, and the love of retaining their worldly possessions in the family line has caused the close intermarrying among those nearly related by ties of consanguinity; and in no other nation do we find mental and physical traits so marked and so definitely transmitted as among them. The late venerable Prof. Opholer, of Vienna, used to say, when a patient came under his observation,—a youth, perhaps, of seventeen, who was married to his niece of fifteen: "These Jews must become a nation of imbeciles." And yet, with it all, they have held their own remarkably well,—in part attributable, I think, to wise observances in the marriage relation, and to their industry and frugality. Nothing else but marrying exclusively among themselves has kept the gypsies a distinct class, a race of vagabonds for generations. Note the civilization of races that have remained isolated, China and Japan, for instance, and we see how much slower has been their growth than among those nations that have intermixed with others. M. D'Aubigny, who has carefully studied the mixing of nations by marriage, says that the products are always superior from a mingling of types. The mélange of degraded races gives a very low order of beings, and here is seen the necessity of educating and elevating the ignorant masses in our own land. By their continuous intermarrying, the evil traits they possess become intensified in their children. The influence they exert cannot be limited, but it permeates as a miasma the whole body politic. Leibnitz said: "Give me the educating of Europe, and I will change the face of it in a century." Only the education that makes honest and pure men and women can be relied upon to perpetuate our liberal institutions and our nation as a republic. Now that we have seen the momentous importance that heredity exerts upon man, what remains to be said of the influence of education as a counteracting force?

Descartes, Helvetius, and others, argued that men were born equal, with equal aptitudes, and that education alone made them what they are. Papillon considers the power of heredity first, and education secondary, in its influence upon the character. In families in which education does everything to make children alike, we see the most marked deviations in character and deportment. Education, no doubt, does much to transform and modify, but it is doubtful if it ever creates. It may make a good musician, but never a musical genius.

If we settle down upon the fact that heredity is all potent, that there is no modification through education, then are we likely to remain in a hopeless condition. There will be no strife with the tendencies of the spirit and of the flesh, and we shall go on from bad to worse, as individuals and as a nation. We all know how the maternal hen has been heart-racked with anguish to see the horde of ducklings that come from under her protecting wing rush into the water, true to the duck instincts that are not to be eradicated by any foster-mother influences.

The experiment has often been tried, and failed, of making the Indian child develop into a civilized individual. The idiot still remains imbecile after years of effort to educate him, but with a condition often greatly ameliorated.

Because there are hereditary obstacles in the way, and we are hindered in the achievement of all we desire, there is no reason why we should relax the effort to approach our ideal. It may be, as we grow wise and more judicious in our educational methods, that, when we learn a system by which the best in every nature can be drawn out, and the worst be thus out-distanced, we shall then be able to free ourselves more speedily and surely from the bondage of inheritance. Emerson says: "Speak to the heart, and the man becomes suddenly virtuous." Science has done so much for us already that we can, to a great degree, escape from the Damoclean sword of disease-inheritance that hangs over us. We know that change of climate, change of occupation and habits, taken before the tendencies germinate to disease, are quite sufficient to hold them in abeyance, and even to eradicate them.

Are the influences of both parents equally potent upon their offspring?

Discrepancy in age between the parents modifies the influence that either may exert. Fortunate for the offspring is it, that a young and vigorous mother usually gives her physique to the child, instead of its taking that of the father, if he be old or infirm. The most of our experience upon this subject must be taken from the observations of careful stock-breeders. The Arab, who after all cannot be cited as an exception, when compared in this respect with other nations, is far more absorbed in the genealogical perfection of his horses than of his own kind, and he greatly prefers nobility of extraction on the part of the mother than on that of the father. When considered in all their varied relations, the scales of influence are evenly balanced between the parents and their children. Neither can shirk the responsibilities resting upon him or her, and be found guiltless. In my opinion, a large share of influence coming to the child from the father is communicated through the mother, by impressions that she receives of him during gestation.

If there is unison of spirit, a harmonious blending of their natures, there is more likely to be an equal mingling of the traits of both parents; while, on the other hand, if the husband is brutal, if her soul loathes his presence, then the child is likely to be stamped for life with his most undesirable characteristics. Likes and dislikes frequently stamp themselves forcibly at this period upon the mind of the mother. Sometimes an inmate of the house becomes odious to her. She carries on a continued warfare with herself to overcome the feeling, and the result upon the child is the inherited peculiarities of the individual.

These instances which have often been observed teach us a very important lesson—the necessity of making the surroundings of the mother as congenial and pleasing as possible, if we will have the child all it may be—bright, happy, and beautiful in spirit.

We have seen that the life and surroundings of both parents before, at the time of, and after conception are conditions that directly affect the child. The importance of physical perfection both in the individual and in the race cannot be overstated, for upon a sound physical basis rests strength of mind and of soul, and all of its multiple outgrowths.

Again, strength of mind, that power which comes from thought, is becoming more and more the great controller of mankind. It is a pressing duty upon those upon whom rest the responsibility of perpetuating the race, to study well the conservation of this force. The sickly in body, the depressed in mind, in becoming fathers and mothers run the fearful risk of multiplying and of intensifying the misfortunes that they, perhaps, have wrestled with through the neglect or ignorance of their parents. It is incumbent upon the parent, then, to make constant effort after purity of body, after culture and strength of mind, that these most desirable qualities may become the birthright of his offspring. Healthful, congenial employment for the mother, whether intellectual or physical, best fits her to transmit a love for the same to her child. Not only this, but it has been proven in more than a few instances that she may bequeath to the little one, lying close to her heart, a love for special pursuits. Let her devote herself to music with zest, and, if it be but a poor weak melody she herself can create, her soul may some day be thrilled with the song of her child. But of all the legacies to which a child has the right, and of which the world has most need to-day in her children, purity is the chief. Look to it, fathers and mothers. How is your child to obtain this? Cleanse ye the fountain, and the stream shall be pure. Yet when they with washed hands would lead the impure from their manner of life, lo! all fingers are laid on the lips, and silence is compelled. But the time has come when, if we should hold our peace, the very hills would cry out. While every other animal of earth is raised with care and foresight, that each separate race may inherit firmer and finer qualities, man alone is not to be reared by chance. The time must come when the God-given and God-like power of creating shall not be prostituted to lust and passion.

Human beings must learn that sexual appetite was originally given but for the perpetuation of mankind. Is the thought startling? Why so? Is man more animal than the animals themselves? Alas, yes; and for the very reason that he has abused his royal powers. Scattered here and there are pure souls, men and women, who have gathered themselves up from the mire of the world, and who are leading lives of continence, and rearing children who can but inherit snow-white souls. And thousands there are who gladly would do this,—patient mothers, long suffering wives, who would rejoice to accept such a doctrine as a glad evangel. But till men, as well as women, the world over, study well these laws of inheritance, and become pure and right in their own lives, we must still grieve over the little ones that come into life deprived of the moral, physical, and intellectual bequests to which they are rightful heirs.

PORTRAIT OF O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Lyric Hall, on Sixth Avenue, opposite Reservoir Park, is chiefly known as the meeting-place of an independent religious congregation of which Octavius Brooks Frothingham is the minister. Its entrance suggests concerts and entertainments of various kinds. Ascending the broad stairway, you enter a long, narrow audience room, tastefully painted and frescoed, with seats set close together facing a raised platform, with a small desk upon it, which is usually covered on Sundays with expensive flowers. The room fills very rapidly. Most of the people seem to know each other. They have cheerful, earnest, intelligent faces, with a certain alertness and expectancy in countenance and air, as though they came to hear something, and not to show their clothes. There is an organ voluntary, and still the people come in, some five or six hundred of them. Presently a man, spare but elegant in figure, of medium height, with thin, earnest, finely-chiselled face, small gray eyes, full brow, and iron-gray hair, apparently fifty years old, appears on the platform and takes his seat. The people look at each other with a significantly pleased expression, which seems to say, "He has come." The choir has sung, and he rises with a gravity and dignity you hardly expect; with a face which seems as though it were just brought from the studio of a sculptor who has done his utmost to express intelligence, refinement, and moral elevation; a Boston face you would say, were you to meet it in San Francisco, or Rome, or St. Petersburg. He reads; the tones suggest Beacon Hill and Harvard College; clear, deep, earnest, but not musical; the vehicle of thoughts, but not the carriage which the affections usually ride in. He prays; it is a prolonged thanksgiving and aspiration that uplifts whoever yields to it, and almost transfigures him.

After the singing comes an address. It begins simply enough, without text or parade of any sort, with the announcement of some fact or principle. Soon it grows like a river fed by invisible tributaries. It taxes the mind. It enchains the attention. It elucidates a theme, instead of driving platitudes like nails into the individual conscience and heart; and it takes history, literature, philosophy, science, and art to do it with. Grand things drop from the speaker's lips, as he stands there without book or paper, speaking out of a fullness that seems to increase faster than it overflows in the choicest words. You forget yourself in admiration, and only fear that he will stop before your mind is full; and when the silver stream ceases, and you catch your breath and come to yourself, it seems as though it had borne you to the gates of the Holy City, and left you just on the outside, with the earth behind you, but with infinity before. You no longer wonder that Lyric Hall is famous, and you ask, Who is this Mr. Frothingham?

He was born in Boston in 1822. His father was a distinguished Unitarian clergyman, a translator of German hymns, and also a poet in his own right. He graduated from Harvard in 1843, and took to the ministry as a matter both of nature and choice. He was to that manor born. After three studious years in the Divinity School, he settled over a rich Unitarian church in Salem, the quietest and most conservative city in Massachusetts. There he studied much and grew more; became absorbingly interested in German critical literature, and the great American humanities; shocked conservative Boston by saying all manner of things counted heresies in those days, and offended Salem merchants by standing up for the slave and defending abolitionists. He went to Europe, and brought the best part of it home with him in broader views, and sounder judgments, and correcter tastes, but was more radical than ever. The Boston exotic was no dainty wall-flower, but an oak that wanted earth for its roots, and heaven for its branches, and more light and air than there were in Salem to grow in. In 1855 he accepted a call to Jersey City, where he preached to a small but devoted congregation till 1859, when he was induced to organize a society in this city. Here he soon made his mark by his pronounced rationalism, his intellectual and highly-finished discourses, his originality of thought and method, and his moral earnestness. Not a popular orator; with none of the rhetorical toys to catch the crowds who are "pleased with a rattle and tickled with a straw"; with little of that personal magnetism which is often physical rather than moral in its origin and composition; scornful to use the arts and descend to the clap-trap with which audiences are often enticed to hear and moved to applaud men of common and even vulgar mould; the teacher of an unpopular gospel,—he addressed himself steadily to the understanding and conscience of his people, and left his teaching to bear its natural fruit in its own time. He had no ecclesiastical accessories and apparatus to work with, disparaged machinery and despised millinery and make-belief; it was sheer personal force, backed by the truth and the ability to state and illustrate it, on which he built. It was a novel experiment, and hard to try. Looked at from the outside, the success has been meagre enough. There is no great church to stand as the monument of fifteen years of splendid endeavor. His congregations are smaller than many others in the city. But thousands have heard his voice, and read his words, and been persuaded of their truth. The air is full of the ideas he has thrown out upon the wide-scattering wind. He is recognized as one of the intellectual and moral forces of the city, and his influence is a confessed element of metropolitan life. While other men have stood for sects and churches, he has stood steadily forward as the representative of humanity and of truth. It is one thing to build a hot-house, but a very different thing to create a summer.

And the scholar has kept pace with the preacher. He is a student by nature and habit, reading wide and deep, hiving honey from every flower and herb he lights upon. His contributions to the best reviews and magazines would fill two or three volumes. His admirable translation of Renan's Critical Essays had a large reading. His Child's Book of Religion, for the use of Sunday-schools, is unique. His two volumes of Bible stories show remarkable skill in reproducing the thought and sentiment wrapped up in the old Scripture legends and parables. His Religion of Humanity is a thought-book which no student of religion or humanity can pass by unread. His Life of Theodore Parker is one of the most attractive and brilliant American biographies, if not the very best. Some hundred and fifty of his discourses have been printed for gratuitous circulation. It is not the quantity but the flavor of the fruit that shows what the sap is made of. The scholar appears in the writings, but they scarcely hint the extent and variety of his studies.

But it is as a reformer rather than a scholar that Mr. Frothingham is most widely known and will be longest remembered. The death of Theodore Parker left him the leader of radical religious thought, and he has sacrificed his daintier tastes and more enticing studies to head the new crusade. At the formation of the Free Religious Association he was unanimously recognized as its president, and has held the office ever since. That Association stands for absolute liberty in religion. It represents Out of Doors. It is the organized exponent of inquiry, criticism, science, speculation, civilization in their religious applications. It is a self-constituted sentinel flinging down its challenge to every party and person for the pass-word of reason.

Perhaps his official position at the head of a Society of Interrogation-points indicates the preponderance of the critical element in his nature. He is a born inquisitor—an Investigating Committee of one. His keen eye and analytic habit of mind appear conspicuously in whatever he does. There is no lack of appreciation; but what is there to appreciate? Is the terrible question he keeps on asking, till it almost seems that there is nothing but blotch and badness. His reviews are terribly searching, and his art criticisms were too true to be quite good. This critical element detracts something from the positiveness and force of his affirmations, and makes enthusiasm impossible. If he would only unsay less and say more, only look sunward and not shadowward, only throw himself out on some magnificent hope in absolute trust, making faith take the place of demonstration till it made the demonstration! But he is too honest for that. The integrity of his intellect is crystalline. His conscience is in every faculty of his brain and every fancy of his rhetoric. Sincerity is the inmost essence of the man who is so impatient of everything that looks like pretence and policy that he finds it hard to make allowance for more flexible and elastic natures, which have a wider swing and easier bend than his own, and think of means as well as ends. This moral element overshadows his sympathies. His idea of justice smothers the effusive sentiments, which expand themselves so often in mere gush, and gifts that do more harm than good. He is often characterized as cold, and doubtless is deficient in the sympathetic qualities which radiate "sweetness and light." Some men are like the big, open fire-places of the old homesteads, which glowed and crackled with their blaze, throwing a stream of cheer across a room, and half roasting one side of a man while the other shivered unless he turned himself about like a turkey on a spit; others are like a furnace, dark, noiseless, unattractive, but sending its heat up through various registers to make every apartment comfortable. It is well that there are men who put their vital forces into great thoughts instead of spending them in mere gush, and glow, and gabble. But he has strong personal attachments, and his friendships, though select, are for life. His kindness amounts almost to a weakness. It carries him into the lowest hovels, into attics, and dens, and jails. A single instance we venture to mention. Last winter a young woman, who had supported herself and mother by her pen, was taken ill, with no one in particular to care for her. The miscellaneous charities of mere acquaintances were soon exhausted, and she was reduced to the last extremity. Her story came to his knowledge, and, though a total stranger to her, he supplied her necessities for months, providing comfortable quarters for her out of the city, and finally paying the costs of her burial. A score or two of such acts dropped along the by-ways of want would be enough to make a marble statue loved. Nobody has ever taken an inventory of the heresies of the Good Samaritan.

Mr. Frothingham's mind is logical in its method of thought, but not in its form of expression, which is discursive, and sometimes florid, occasionally bold, and often beautiful. He excels in vigorous and felicitous statement, and writes better than he reasons. He is sensitive to a fault, as though the nerves were on the outside of his body; and his fastidious and refined tastes isolate him to some extent from the great common life of the world, and invest him with a character of aloofness which somewhat interferes with his popular influences. An aristocrat by birth, constitution, and culture, he is a democrat by conviction; though he associates with reformers, and appears on their platforms, it is from his unflinching moral devotion to ideas, and not from any liking to the persons who represent them, or the methods they adopt. His philanthropy is a principle rather than a passion, and does not satisfy the enthusiasts, who are more moved by temperament than philosophy, and whose quick instincts tell them who are their kith and kin. They may be grateful for his thoughts, and admire his glittering sentences; but they look at him with admiration from afar, as the valleys regard the mountain that breaks the blast, and draws rain from the clouds to make their clover grow and their orchards fruitful, wondering that corn and vines do not cover its sides, and roses do not crown its brow.—Golden Age.

A SUNDAY IN BOSTON.

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER IN THE HARTFORD "DAILY EVENING POST."

BY REV. WM. L. GAGE.

In my childhood, Boston might have been called a Unitarian city. The Orthodox churches were very few, and were decidedly looked down upon, and treated with the greatest odium. Park street was called Bristomoe Corner, and the Old South fared not much better. The Unitarian congregations were large and popular. Almost everybody who was known in the social world was connected with them. But all that has changed; and although Unitarianism has a hold there, and some of the Unitarian ministers, like Edward Everett Hale and James Freeman Clarke, are known and honored far and wide, the churches of the Pilgrims' faith have been steadily advancing; they are now numerous and strong, and Boston is now as distinctly an "Evangelical" city as it was Unitarian a third of a century ago. The little Sunday-school at King's Chapel is of course a rather exaggerated index of the change; for with many of our own largest and oldest churches the schools are small, that of the Centre Church, New Haven, for example, having but about a hundred members. Yet nothing is clearer than that Unitarianism had in it the seeds of weakness and decay, and that the sceptre which it once wielded it was powerless to retain. In other words it is just as might have been seen clearly ten or twenty years ago; the Unitarian movement ripened, and then cast what there was in it that had life and fruitfulness into the churches against which it protested, and then, like all organizations which have done their work, vanished away. Those congregations which I remember in my boyhood to do indeed remain, and bear the Unitarian name; and some of them, Dr. Gannett's and Dr. Lothrop's, for example, have built new and elegant edifices; but the denomination has followed the natural law of ripeness, and has broken into two parts, which are steadily receding from one another. The one which has been faithful to the Bible is of course not far from where a great many so-called Orthodox Christians stand, and you might hear such men as Robbins, and Peabody, and the Ellises preach for a long time without discovering anything peculiar in their sermons, unless it were a solemnity and reverence which, since Dr. Lyman Beecher's day, have grown more and more rare with us. On the other hand, there is that great movement which we see little of here in Connecticut, which we call in a word rationalism, meaning in general the putting of human reason above the Bible, and considering the Bible but as a record of one stage of religious thought. And that, under the names of Pantheism, and Positive Religion, and Absolute Religion, and Free Religion, is the prevalent form of belief among the large number of the Unitarians and those who affiliated more or less with them. And of one of the men who represent this school I wish now to speak.

For in the afternoon, after looking in upon the little Sunday-school at King's Chapel, the question arose where should I attend afternoon service. It is a rare thing for a minister to be able to catch a free Sunday afternoon in Boston; and there was my old schoolmate, Phillips Brooks, at his church, and Professor Barbour, of Bangor, at Park Street, and Mr. Herrick at Dr. Kirk's, and Professor Everett at South Boston, and still others, each one of whom I wanted to hear. But still more did I desire to see and hear Rev. Wm. J. Potter, who was in college with me, and roomed hard by, whose face used to seem to me so singularly pure, and whose repute as a man and a scholar answered well to his face. He has for many years been the pastor of the Unitarian church at New Bedford, yet the same time he has been regarded as one of the leaders of the Free Religionists of Boston. The headquarters are and have for years been at Horticultural Hall, a beautiful room on Tremont Street, accommodating some six hundred listeners. The place has become notorious for the sentiments which give Boston what some think its rather unenviable character, yet which in other eyes give the city its noblest pre-eminence. Here Pantheism, Free Religion, Positivism, Darwinism, Evolutionism, all the fancies of Emerson, and Theodore Parker, and Francis Abbot, and Weiss, have had full sweep. I had read extracts from the Horticultural Hall utterances in all the papers, but I wanted to see the audience, and hear the speaker, and learn just what hold these ideas seem to have, and in what spirit they are presented. The hall was filled, not with that long-haired, half-crazy, and motley crowd which ordinarily make up spiritualistic congregations, but with middle-aged, keen-eyed, and earnest people whom you would not know by any external marks from any other thoroughly-intelligent congregation. At just three Mr. Potter came in, looking not much changed from the college days, the same look of meekness, purity, and high thought which he used to wear. Without a hymn, or a prayer, or a word, save a brief announcement, he plunged into his subject, which was "Names and Things." Beginning with an able dissertation on the origin of speech, he passed on to a study of names as the inevitable condition of language, and then to the degeneracy of names in religion. In the early part of his address, he might have given what he said before the American Philological Society with acceptance, but in the latter part he could only be heard with pleasure by those who share at once his ideas and prejudices. That the old names and creeds have had part in the changes of language, and no longer mean what they did; that words such as "Christian" have quite lost all that was once in them; that now we have a dialect without any meaning but a false one, and that all current religious talk is therefore false or unintentionally deceptive,—all this was put forth in a piquant, plausible style, with abundant illustrations, without sarcasm or bitterness, and in a tone perfectly polite and absolutely unexceptionable. It is true it was the language of a lofty scorn, and of great contentment with itself; but when I recalled Theodore Parker at Music Hall, his bitter denunciations, his sneers, his biting contempt, I could but feel that this was far better, even if it were more insinuating. Mr. Potter spoke in a quiet, subdued earnestness, with little gesture, but with profound effect. It was evident that he believed what he said, even to the very ends of his fingers. And although in his address he indirectly conveyed his assent to Darwinism and Evolution, yet he did not fail to acknowledge God in language so full of reverence, that on the whole I felt that the indirect influence of the address was good. To see a man stand up, arrayed in the garments of purity, having a face full of peace, and earnest desire to do good to his fellows, and lead them out into that reverent frame where he left them, I could not but think was a better thing than some smart, flippant divines, who claim to be sounder in the doctrines, but who lead their congregations along the edge of jocose and unseemly merriment, and dismiss them into an atmosphere hardly more worldly than they have already been breathing in the church. Mr. Potter's allusions to Jesus were all full of a tender homage; yet I half suspected that he did not know how much he owes to our churches for this. These Free Religionists speak of Jesus and of God in tones and in terms which seem to me a great deal higher than their own position. They do not appear to know that they stand on a borrowed pedestal. They use our thought of God and of Christ; and though they profess pure naturalism, they yet unconsciously wear some of the garments of Christianity. And therefore in all this long lecture of an hour and a half I could not think that I was listening to a "heathen" address, but rather seemed to be looking at an altar inscribed "to the unknown God."

PRAYING FOR FRESHETS.

The Right Reverend William Crosswell Doane, Episcopal Bishop of Albany, in this State, recently ordered prayers for rain to be put up in the churches under his jurisdiction. Albany and its neighborhood were suffering from a protracted drought, and the Bishop fancied that the proper thing to do in the emergency was to appeal to God to intervene and cause the clouds to form and rain to pour down. As we all know, it did rain abundantly about a fortnight ago, and the Bishop thereupon, in a letter to an Albany newspaper, delivered himself in this wise:—

"It seems a little short of irreverent trifling with a great mystery, and irreverent ingratitude for a great mercy, to question that the abundant fall of snow, followed by the past gentle and gradual thaw, is truly God's answer to the many prayers—some worded one way, and some another—which have been offered to the Throne of Grace."

The letter is dated Feb. 24. A significant commentary upon it is found in some telegraphic despatches of the same day and the next but one. Here they are:—

"TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Feb. 24.—The Wabash River has risen fourteen feet in twenty-four hours. The steamers Young America and Elk, lying here, were swept down by the pressure of floating ice. The former was caught six miles below in a badly damaged condition. The Elk is supposed to be lost. The steamer Dolly Varden was sunk at the landing by ice. A barge belonging to Prairie City was also sunk."

"PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 26.—The ice in the Schuylkill River at Manayunk broke up yesterday afternoon, and last night the water rose twenty feet above the usual height, and within four feet of the highest freshet. All the houses in the lower part of the town were submerged, forcing the occupants to leave without saving their goods. The gas works were also submerged, leaving the streets in darkness. All the mills except one have suspended work, throwing at least two thousand persons out of employment. The Fountain Hotel was flooded, and the street, which forms a hollow at this point, was submerged, causing the suspension of travel by street-cars this morning."

"RICHMOND, Feb. 26.—The recent heavy rains have swollen the Virginia rivers considerably; in some cases causing much damage. The James River at this point is ten or twelve feet above the ordinary level, and still rising slowly. The wharves and streets of the lower part of the city are overflowed. At Lynchburg the river is up nearly fifteen feet above its usual level. Much damage is reported there, and along the line of the Atlantic, Mississippi, and Ohio Railroad. The Jackson River, at Covington, is higher than at any time since 1861."

"KNOXVILLE, Feb. 26.—The most destructive freshet for years has visited East Tennessee. The bridge over the Hiwassee River, on the East Tennessee, Virginia, and Georgia Railroad, is gone, and no mails were received yesterday. It will probably be a week before the trains are running on that road. The Tennessee River has thirty-eight feet of water, and is still rising. Bridges, mills, barns, and houses have been swept away by the flood. The Knoxville Gas Works are submerged, and the city was in darkness last night. The losses in the city and country are large."

"CHATTANOOGA, Feb. 26.—The Tennessee River is higher than at any time since 1867, and covers the low land around the city. One planing mill on the river's bank was washed away, and a few negro shanties submerged. The Atlanta and Alabama and Chattanooga routes will be a long time in getting repaired. There are five breaks in the latter."

"CINCINNATI, Feb. 26.—The steamer Argosy, laden with twelve hundred barrels of salt, was sunk at Middleport, Ohio, this morning. The river was full of ice from the broken gorges above, and a heavy cake struck the Argosy on the larboard side, just forward of the cylinder. She was backed into shore, and sunk in six feet of water, but as the river is rising rapidly, the water at last accounts was over the boiler deck."

"HARTFORD, Feb. 26.—During a freshet last night in the Naugatuck River, part of the Home Woollen Company's dam at Beacon Falls was carried away, and a man named Flaherty, who was assisting in moving the break, fell into the river and was drowned."

"NEW HAVEN, Feb. 26.—A very serious flood caused by a freshet in the Housatonic River has devastated the country in the vicinity of Zoar bridge, about nine miles above Birmingham. A huge ice gorge has been formed at Otter Rock, and the roads are impassable. Zoar bridge was carried a mile down the stream. The water rose to the second story windows of dwellings in some cases, and a number of buildings and barns were moved from their foundations. A quantity of live stock was destroyed, and many persons had narrow escapes from death."

No doubt it was highly gratifying to the Bishop's flock in Albany to have their wells and cisterns filled as they were, and it is right in them to be duly thankful for it. But what of the people in the parts of the country where "the abundant fall of snow followed by the past gentle and gradual thaw" produced the devastation recorded in the telegraphic despatches we have above quoted? The Bishop did not reflect that the same causes which produced the one result also produced the other; and that if God gave rain to the Albanians, in answer to their prayers, he also, in answer to the same prayers, destroyed steamers, bridges, dams, gas works, and buildings and property to an enormous amount, besides throwing thousands of people out of employment. That is to say, that, in order to bless the inhabitants of the diocese of Albany, he cursed the people of half a dozen States! A more striking illustration of the heathenism involved in this practice of praying for rain could not be presented.—New York Sun.

THE "Dead Sea apple," or "apple of Sodom," is bright and pulpy, but of so horrible a taste that the Bedouins say it is given by Allah to the tormented in hell to suck when they call upon him.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 20.

Phineas Watrous, $3; D. Wright, $3; L. F. Womacks, $3; F. A. Angell, $3; J. A. Creighton, $3.20; Joseph E. Peck, $3.70; F. L. Pope, $3.20; E. L. Saxon, $1; R. Wagner, $1; Louis Knorr, $4; M. E. Munroe, $5; Peter Phillips, $3; C. W. Fillmore, $1.20; Hopson & Sherman, $3.20; W. H. Crowell, $1.20; G. H. White, $3.20; Susan A. Tirrell, $3; Cash, 65 cents; G. H. Foster, $2.05; S. F. Dexter, 50 cents; J. S. Worthman, $1.50; R. F. Weithree, $2; D. B. Dunning, 60 cents; Lewis Whitcover, 50 cents; R. R. Suffield, $6; Wm. Humphrey, $3; H. Bliss, $3.20; O. Martin, $3; G. E. Corbin, $4.50; Julia M. White, $3; Wm. McKenzie, $3.50; C. G. Clark, $4.40; Joseph Haskins, $1.50; Jon. Heistand, $1.50; S. R. Kochler, 20 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

ABOUT A COAT.

WHAT C. SAYS TO A. AND B.

Why raise an everlasting pother
About this thing and 'bout that other?
Who talks about "infallibility"?
It sounds like an incivility.

Says Mr. A. to Mr. B.:
"Your house's on fire! Come out and see."
Quoth Mr. B. to Mr. A.:
"Your fire's a painted flame, I say."

"You prick forth like an armed knight,
And you insist on being right.
Your challenge rings out full and free:
'Release that maiden, Liberty!'"

"When 'Liberty' you name, my brother,
You mean one thing, and I another;
Our stand-point is not quite the same,
You stand outside and your blows rain,

"Forgetting that external force
But rivets chains and makes them worse:
Unless indeed the chain you break,
And so your 'Sleeping Beauty' wake.

"But will you marry her, my friend,
When from the churches' power you rend?
The Church espoused her with a dot;
Gave Christianity for her coat.

"The Church, disclosed in deed and act,
A tyrant husband was in fact.
It owned her conscience, heart, and brains,
And loaded her with heavy chains."

In vain is your appeal to facts,—
The Church's history in its acts;
Be not seduced by history's light,
Interpretations differ quite.

Chameleon that feeds on air
Is type of some things not so rare;
The thing I saw was black last night,
Next morn I looked, and lo! 'twas white!

Your animal turned out to feed
Is just as changeable,—a creed.
Religion is a fashion-plate:
It changes with the place and date.

Now Christianity, please note,
Is but the turning of a coat;
In Paganism you will find
Its doctrines stated to your mind.

The heathen gods were devils well
Made over in the Christian hell;
And Venus, heavenly Venus fair,
Became the Holy Virgin there.

All State religions, you agree,
Must trample on soul liberty.
They dictate how a man shall vote,
Prescribe the fashion of his coat.

The Radical gets mad and tears
His coat, or pitches it down-stairs;
Calls it a badge of slavery worn
By fools whom he will laugh to scorn.

He does insist on being right:
The coatless stumps the coat to fight.
He puts the whole world in the wrong,
Because the world sings not his song.

But B. is otherwise inclined:
"This coat is comfortable, I find;
It has kept warm the human heart;
It's worn by literature and art."

All men of sense, 'tis said, agree
In one religion which none see;
But what it is, not one will tell,—
Said Shaftesbury, and he said well.

Is Christianity a myth?
Or is it Proteus in a with Bound, and escaping still ere long
Organization fast and strong?

When Christians trampled on Greek art,
They took the old barbarian's part;
Till men were glad to welcome home
The "kind old gods" of Greece and Rome.

Now Christianity is made
Ancillary to art and trade;
And churches, like a whitewashed saint,
Flourished by skilful use of paint.

Assault the Church, then, if you will,—
Assault the faith, and you do ill;
Your weapon keen the air not wounds,
There's freedom also within bounds.

The great substantial of our faith
Continue, and no man gain-saith;
While Christian creed 's that duke in song,—
"All things by turns and nothing long."

When jobbery has shocked the nation,
The people shout "Investigation!"
But still the point is left unstated,
The "thing" is not "investigated."

I hear you, friends; but what's the row?
What "liberty" does each avow?
Can I resolve you in a fable,
Though scarce at story-telling able?

A London Jew kept in the Strand,
Who dealt in clothes at second-hand.
He stood the passers-by to note,
His business was to sell a coat.

Two countrymen, both raw and thin,
Father and son, he roped them in;
And, spite of frequent loud denials,
He tried on coats; but all his trials

Were useless, vain,—not one would suit;
They turned to go—but like a brute,
The Jew caught hold the younger one,
And then a coat—he forced it on.

"The coat, I tell you, does not suit."
"You tell me so? then you're a brute,
And he shall wear it to begin:
The coat ish goot—your poys too thin!"

MORAL.

A man's religion, you will find,
Is born to him and suits his mind.
Beware the vendors of "old cios,"
Christians and Jews, and such as those.

J. T.

WASHINGTON, March, 1875.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 25, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.

OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), Editorial Contributors.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of THE INDEX will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

THE Rochester Democrat and Chronicle of February 23 published an admirable and manly plea for the non-exemption of ministers and churches from taxation, in the shape of a sermon by Rev. H. L. Morehouse, a Baptist clergyman of that city. To their praise be it said, the great majority of the Pastors' Union, to whom it was read, emphatically indorsed it.

It is a simple matter of justice to say that the New York Liberal Christian, though standing staunchly by its Unitarianism, is very fair and good-natured in its notices of our strictures upon its favorite religion. It appears to credit us with entire lack of personal bitterness; and we believe this kind judgment is no more than just. Certainly, it would be gratuitous and causeless in the last degree to feel bitter towards Unitarians as individuals; for there is not one among them with whom our personal relations are other than pleasant. So THE INDEX shakes hands cordially with the Liberal Christian, and still "stands to its guns."

THE poet Longfellow recently wrote the following reply to a letter requesting him to become an honorary member of the British National Association of Spiritualists:—

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 15, 1875.

DEAR MISS KISLINGBURY:—Not being a Spiritualist in the usual and popular sense of the word—that is to say, never having seen any manifestations that convinced me of the presence of spirits,—I should deem it almost an act of dishonesty on my part to accept the compliment you offer.

I must, therefore, with many thanks for this mark of your consideration, beg leave to decline it. With great regard, yours truly,

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

NOTHING is more common than the confusion of thoughts with feelings, and it tends greatly to mislead the mind in very important matters. A witness in court, referring to an approaching judicial inquiry, recently said, "I felt that the proceeding would go on;" and he insisted on the word felt as correctly used. Yet the phenomenon in his mind at the time was a definite thought, not a feeling; namely, "the proceeding will go on." This was a proposition, with a subject and predicate conjoined (as they always are conjoined) by an act of the intellect or understanding; it was an inference, and nothing else, drawn from circumstances then perceived or believed to be facts; but because the witness could not analyze all these circumstances, or explain to himself exactly how the inference had been drawn, he jumped to the conclusion that it was a feeling, and not a thought. Now it is precisely in this way that people say, "I feel that the soul is immortal;" and, being unable to analyze or explain all the logical antecedents of this manifest inference, they jump to the conclusion that it is not an inference at all, but a "feeling" or "intuition." The inference may be drawn correctly from real facts, though this is not certain till these facts have been verified, analyzed, and logically connected; but the confounding in this manner of thought with feeling, intellect with "intuition," lies at the bottom of all "intuitionism," as a form of religious belief. It is precisely this confusion, this ignorance of psychological processes, which the scientific school object to; and the reform it proposes is to clear away the haziness which now veils the actual operations of the mind from itself, in order that the real truth, whatever it may be, may be discovered and certified beyond reasonable doubt.

PRIVATE JUDGMENT AND UNIVERSAL REASON.

"Justification by faith" and the "right of private judgment" were the two great principles of the Protestant Reformation. "Justification by faith" was derived from Christianity, and (in the famous formula of Chillingworth) made "the Bible, and the Bible only, the religion of Protestants"; while the "right of private judgment" was derived from the self-assertion of human intellect, but was restricted in its exercise to the mere interpretation of the Bible. These two principles were in reality incongruous, and capable only of an historical, not a logical, combination, since the restriction of private judgment to Bible-interpretation was arbitrary and irrational. Protestantism, therefore, being a mere transition from Christianity in its completeness to Free Religion in its completeness, and uniting as it did the conflicting characteristics of each, has been necessarily at war with itself from the start; it was only a half-protest, which must either be suppressed or extended. As might have been expected, with this internal inconsistency it has developed two opposing tendencies, one forward towards Rationalism pure and simple, the other backward through Ritualism and kindred reactions towards Rome. The endless schisms and sub-schisms which have marked its history from the time of Luther to the present day were only the natural and necessary expression of this inherent logical weakness. The spirit of protest burst the arbitrary bonds of bibliolatry, while the spirit of Christianity shrank back aghast at the havoc that was made. But the general current of the great Protestant movement has been sweeping the modern mind farther and farther from its old Christian moorings; the powerful influences of science and commerce, of industry and democracy, have not only reinforced the predominant tendencies of Protestantism, but also operated upon Catholic Christianity to sap the very foundations of its dominion even over its own adherents. In spite of the most desperate resistance, Free Religion is winning the battle, and its victory is only a question of time. We are living in a period which is pregnant with infinitely profounder changes than the age of Constantine. Christianity is dying to-day as Paganism was dying then; and the world will inherit a blessing far more precious than that which it has lauded so long.

Now the prepotent rationalistic tendency of Protestantism which grew out of its "right of private judgment" has its logical ultimate in absolute Individualism, though nothing absolute ever gets expressed historically in any absolute form. It is perfectly fair to judge a principle by its remote consequences, though this course does not seem fair to those who would limit its proper extent by the actual extent to which they themselves carry it. To what does the "right of private judgment" conduct us, when emancipated from the confinement to mere Bible-interpretation by which it was originally restricted? Simply to this conclusion: that the individual thinker has no criterion of truth outside the action of his own individual mind—that he has no objective standard by which to correct the errors arising out of his own mental idiosyncrasies, his deficiencies of knowledge, his biases of prejudice, his inequalities of general development, his peculiarities in point of circumstance, situation, or education. From such disturbing causes as these no man is wholly free. They enter more or less into all his mental action, and more or less deflect his thought from absolute fidelity to truth. They require that a "personal equation" should be made in the case of every individual, in order to eliminate the inevitable mistakes of his "private judgment." So long as he is satisfied with mere subjective certainty, and, when he has formed his beliefs as conscientiously as he can by the exercise of his own individual faculties alone, conceives himself to have reached the certainty of objective truth, just so long will he be exposed to the peril of great and grievous error. Only the conceit of a practical personal infallibility would explain undoubting confidence in general conclusions thus reached, to the neglect of all objective tests.

Herein consists the unsatisfactory character of Protestantism, when developed on its rationalistic side into pure Individualism. The "right of private judgment," exercised without regard to the necessity of correcting it by universal experience, makes a barren "yea, yea," "nay, nay," the last word of all dialogue or discussion, the baffling issue of all earnest mutual search for truth. The "right of private judgment" has its good side, undoubtedly, as well as its bad side. It thoroughly emancipates the individual from the domineering, overbearing authority which has been usurped by ecclesiastical conclaves or pontiffs or attributed to infallible scriptures. This emancipation is the negative but immense benefit conferred by the Protestant Reformation upon Christendom; at the present day, it constitutes the net result of this Reformation; it marks the limit of the progress actually attained by the fashionable religious radicalism, which is still in the stage of Individualism. But the other side of the "right of private judgment" is not good. The pendulum-swing from the Catholic extreme to the Individualist extreme has caused forgetfulness of the fact that general advancement in the knowledge of truth is the result of general activities, not of individual achievements, that it is due to the combined experiments, observations, and reasonings of the whole race, not to the accumulated insights of any single individual. The cooperating intellects of innumerable discoverers, working in innumerable fields of investigation, have given to the world a vast body of ESTABLISHED TRUTHS, which the individual is not free to accept or reject at pleasure, but is bound to accept on peril of impeaching his own sanity. No truth, of course, can ever be established in the sense that it must not be called in question; if any one can overthrow it, he is at perfect liberty to do so. But very many truths are established in the sense that whoever questions them simply proclaims himself an ignoramus. Established truths of this order may be found in the propositions that the square root of two is a surd,—that the blood circulates in the human body,—that the earth is more than six thousand years old,—that contradictory propositions cannot both be true at the same time,—that cruelty, injustice, and untruthfulness are morally wrong. These are established truths of mathematics, physiology, geology, logic, ethics; and every science will furnish multitudes of similar instances. They are so completely established that to doubt them is simply to remove oneself from the category of intelligent and educated human beings. No "private judgment" in the world can venture to dispute them without branding itself as idiocy.

Now who or what has established these truths on a basis so impregnable? The "private judgment" of anybody? Not at all. No individual has established them, though some individual first discovered each of them. It is a matter of absolute indifference, now that they have been discovered, whether the individual assents or dissents; they stand just as securely as before in either case. He may knock his head against the rock; but he will not hurt the rock, at least. Nay, more than this. Not only has the individual not established these truths of science for others,—he has not even established any large part of them for himself. How many of our readers are able even to state, much less to prove, the grounds on which these scientific truths really rest? Is it not evident that most of us accept them on some other authority than that of our own "private judgment"? A very small portion of the established truths of science, if we have become proficient in the special branch to which they belong, we may be competent to establish for ourselves by obeying the ascertained laws of scientific proof. But the residue we simply "learn"—that is, accept as truths established for us by some other authority than our "private judgment"; and not to do this, instead of arguing in us superior discernment or independence, would simply convict us of the grossest folly. Now what is this other authority? UNIVERSAL REASON. And what do we mean by that?

In the first place, we do not mean a mere "vote of the majority." The consensus of very many minds is always entitled to respect, on any matter which has really called them into vigorous and earnest activity; but not, of course, if it is merely their indolent or indifferent assent to the usurpation of some self-constituted leader. As a general rule, most minds reason well enough, if their passions or interests are not unduly excited. They usually draw correct conclusions from such facts or premises as are fairly before their notice; they chiefly err when their premises are insufficient. Nevertheless, votes should be weighed, not counted, when the question is what to believe. The well-instructed individual possesses a more legitimate influence upon belief than an ill-instructed multitude, as an exponent of the universal reason; in him it has a far better chance to act than it has through them. Again and again, in the history of science and philosophy and religion, the individual has been right as against the world; and by-and-by the world has acknowledged it. Not for a moment should we be supposed to counsel intellectual submission to ignoramuses simply because they happen to be in force, when we maintain the supreme authority of universal reason. Its behests may be transmitted through the unanimity of all minds, the agreement of a few minds, or the solitary insight of one mind; they are not to be learned by the easy process of counting noses. On this point we wish to be well understood. The authority of universal reason is not that of universal suffrage—much less that of mob-law. The “vote of the majority” may be entitled to the profoundest respect, or to none whatever; this depends on their intelligence, their means of knowledge, their freedom from all bias of passion, prejudice, or interest. To determine the amount of weight that should attach to public opinion, public opinion must be itself tested by universal reason, which is by no means a necessary synonyme of it. While public opinion tends more and more to become a fit representative of universal reason through the gradual diffusion of the light of knowledge, it is yet true that there is no infallible oracle of universal reason, whether individual thought or public opinion; and it is only by the assumption that truth wins its own way with the world, that the opinion of a million individuals has any more weight than that of one.

This may be taken as a brief definition: Universal Reason is Reason in harmony with the Universe. It is universal, not necessarily in the sense of being actually expressed at any particular time by public opinion, but in the sense of being conformed to the universal laws of thought and the universal facts of existence. The first test of it is logic; the second is verification. If thought is inconsistent with itself, there is no use in trying to verify it; it is proved false by its own contradictoriness. But it may be perfectly self-consistent, and yet fail to be in harmony with facts; hence the necessity of verifying it before it is accepted as truth.

Here is a simple illustration. What is the product of eight by nine? “Seventy-six,” says X. “Seventy-four,” says Y. They disagree. Each insists that his own “private interpretation” is correct, and stands on the right of “private judgment.” So they carry on an interminable and profitless discussion, until Z steps up with the Multiplication Table in his hand, and proves them to be both in the wrong. This illustrates precisely what we mean by the “appeal to facts.” The Multiplication Table is not the mere “vote of the majority,” though the majority certainly believe in it. Neither is it the decree of any infallible Pope or Sir Oracle. But it is an authority which the individual must acknowledge, or, like Dogberry, “write himself down an ass.” An authoritative tribunal by which the arithmetical disputes of individuals can be finally settled.

Now there is a great body of Established Truths which are just as authoritative over “private judgment” as the Multiplication Table. They represent the net results of human experience down to the present day. This experience has been built up by the contributions of individuals, of course; yet it speaks in the name of no one individual and in the name of no number of individuals, but simply in the name of the universal reason of the race. It leaves free scope for the exercise of individual liberty, which it never restricts; any individual may set himself up in opposition to it, and, if he can prove by logic and verification that he is right and the supposed universal reason wrong, he simply establishes a correction of the general experience, and vindicates himself thereby. But he can only do this by logic and verification; he cannot plead his “private judgment,” or “private interpretation,” or “private intuition.” All these things go for nothing as respects mankind at large; they will do for the individual, but not for the race; they are useless in discussion, unless they can be backed up by logic and verification. The laws of thought and of knowledge which have been discovered and confirmed by the experience of millions and millions of truth-seekers, and proved to be valid by the existence of that vast body of accumulated truths known as Science, cannot be set aside by any one without making himself ridiculous. They are binding upon the individual; he may dispute them if he pleases, but he does this at his own peril; and if he fails to prove that he knows more than all who have gone before him, he loses his case and must suffer the natural penalty.

There is nothing whatever in all this to discourage independence or originality of thought; for whoever knows that he has got hold of hitherto unsuspected truth will also know that in due time he will be upheld and vindicated by the universal reason itself. All he has to do is to stand by his thought, and make the necessary sacrifices in order to secure recognition for it. But in this case he is simply appealing from the universal reason as represented by his contemporaries to the universal reason as represented by posterity; he still recognizes the tribunal by which all individual thought must be ultimately, as it will be justly, judged. So long as man is finite, the universal reason of the human race can only approximate more and more to the universal reason of Nature; and, although this increasing approximation is always secured by the exercise of individual thought which penetrates deeper than the average thought of the age, nevertheless individual thought must in all cases hold its ground by means of logic and verification alone. Personal affirmation goes for nothing in the long run; it is the universal laws of intelligence that govern in the end. And the universal reason we defend, as against the confused claims of merely “private judgment,” has attained its highest expression not in Christianity, Catholic or Protestant, but in Science.

THE HORTICULTURAL HALL LECTURES.

The annual course of lectures in Horticultural Hall, Boston, under the auspices of the Free Religious Association, has just closed. Ten lectures have been given on a wide variety of topics connected with religion, education, and social reform. The plan of the committee, opening the course to a broader scope of subjects than heretofore, so as to include more of social science and philanthropy, seems to have been generally acceptable to the constituency of the Association and to the public. The average attendance at the lectures appears to have been larger than in previous years; and the aggregate number of persons who have attended one or more of the lectures has probably been very much greater than at any previous course; for the variety of subjects has drawn to different lectures quite different audiences, and the wider range of representative names among the lecturers has tended to the same results.

Some disappointment, however, has been expressed by a few persons because the course has had so little of special religious interest,—a fact which only shows, perhaps, how difficult it is to suit all tastes by any course. And, quite amusingly, in another quarter, where the Association has been previously criticised for not giving sufficient attention to social questions, it has this year, because of this admission of so large a number of social topics, been satirized as the “Free Political Association,”—a little straw which only shows that to some moods, let the wind blow in whatever direction it will, it will not blow right.

A more important criticism has been made by a few persons, and one which ought to be noticed for the sake of clearing up a question of responsibility. A few excellent friends of the Association have felt aggrieved because on one question, that of prohibitory legislation in regard to the evil of intemperance, there has been a lecture in opposition to the prohibitory method, while there has been no statement on the other side; and therefore to these persons the Association appears to have taken ground against prohibitory liquor laws, or at least to have given that impression to the public. In reply to this it should be stated that it is an established principle of the Association, incorporated in its constitution and in all its methods of activity, that the Association as such does not endorse the utterances of any speakers it invites to its platform, and that no speaker or member anywhere commits the Association to his views. It offers an opportunity, in its conventions and in its lectures, for free individual utterance only. At the same time it must be admitted that, if on a question where good and true men are so nearly evenly divided as on that of prohibitory liquor laws, the Association’s committees should show a disposition to give only one side an opportunity to be heard, complaint might justly be made that the principles of the Association, however strongly stated in theory, had been violated in practice. Therefore it ought to be known that the plan of the lecture committee as first formed was not carried out entirely. It was intended to have braces of lectures on three or four of the more important social questions, giving on each the two sides of the argument; but this feature of the course failed because of the impracticability of securing suitable lecturers. In accordance with this plan Mr. Weeden’s lecture on “The Evils of Prohibitory Liquor Laws” was to be balanced with a lecture by some equally able and pronounced advocate of such laws. Dr. Miner at first partially promised to give such a lecture, but finally declined on account of his health. Other well-known friends of the prohibitory principle were then applied to, as Judge Pitman and Mr. Garrison, but without success. More labor, indeed, was spent in the effort to secure a statement of this view of the temperance problem than on any other lecture. Yet finally the course had to be made up without it.

In spite, however, of these partial failures in the endeavors of the committee, their plan of enlarging the scope of the lecture course may be regarded as successful. In some people, doubtless, the confinement of the lectures to problems of special religious interest would be more acceptable. But to the community in general, to whom these lectures are now free, the mixed course seems the most useful. But perhaps by another year it may be thought that the time has arrived for reviving and adopting the suggestion made several years ago, by which the scope and usefulness of these lectures shall be still further enlarged, and the wants and tastes of all classes be met. Several successive courses of lectures might be arranged, extending through five or six months of the year, and presenting a variety of topics, religious, social, scientific, and presenting them more systematically. Such a plan, of course, would require more money. But could not money be obtained for the inauguration of such an institute for free Sunday lectures? W. J. P.

A RUMOR CORRECTED.

NEW YORK, March 15, 1875.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Before the interesting item of unintelligence contained in last week’s INDEX obtains a more extended circulation, and ripens into the rumor that I have received and accepted a call to the temple Emanuel, having advanced as far as to Moses and the prophets, let me say that there is not one shred of truth in the statement. I never received an invitation to preach in synagogue or temple; never was waited on by a Hebrew committee; never was “interviewed” on the subject by a Jewish reporter (by the way, I wonder if there are any; for, if there are none, I shall reconsider the matter and apply for a situation among my Israelite friends); never felt in my bosom a yearning after the implied distinction.

About two years ago it did happen that, the temple Emanuel being in need of an English-tongued preacher, and having exhausted ingenuity in the search after one, a facetious member of the—Sanhedrim, shall we say?—in sarcasm probably on the ineffectual efforts of the voters, suggested my name. Possibly he thought I was a bad enough Christian to teach Jews. The moderator of the meeting, after saying a few words disclaiming all personal disrespect, replied very properly that, as Mr. Frothingham was not a Jew, he could not with propriety officiate as rabbi in a Jewish house of worship. There the matter ended. Shortly after the congregation obtained a preacher who could speak both in German and English, and with whom, I believe, they have every reason to be satisfied. There were, however, some, it seems, who took Mr. —’s little joke seriously; for when, on the following October, a wish was expressed that the opening meeting of the Free Religious convention might be held in a Hebrew temple, it met with an unfavorable response, and it was intimated to me that the unlucky joke aforementioned had alarmed the conservative part of the congregation, and put them on their guard against “rationalism.”

The congregations of Jews in New York are, I think, mainly Orthodox. The great temple Emanuel, on Fifth Avenue, represents the liberal tendency, and has among its influential men several who would have no objection to seeing it converted into a grand theistic temple. That would be a noble sight, and would show in the ancient faith a vitality that might justify its venerable promise and hope. But these gentlemen are in the minority as yet, and will be for many years to come. The Israelites are recovering confidence and pride in the chief city of the New World. Their faith is coming to be recognized as a distinction, and no longer as a reproach. They hold up their heads as people who are not ashamed of their lineage, their history, or their sacred tradition. They have the aspect of men who need ask no favor, and need make no apology. Superstitious they are not; their interpretation of their ancestral faith is free and reasonable; they drop observances once deemed indispensable, and explain away dogmas that once were literally held. But they retain enough of the old leaven to distinguish them from the Christians about them, and apparently have no strong desire to be merged in Christian society. Their bond of fellowship among themselves is close; in innumerable ways they make it evident that they preserve and intend to preserve the social customs of their race; and, while they would rejoice in the transfiguration of their religion through an increased fidelity to its rational element and its theistic idea, they would regret a disavowal of its venerable stock. That the next step in the development of Judaism will be a step towards pure, enlightened, undogmatic theism, can hardly be doubted. In fact, that step has already been taken by eminent rabbis, and eventually the religious faith of rationalism will be found intimately associated with the religion of Moses, and "Christianity" will fall behind among the creeds of superstition. But that consummation is far distant. This generation will hardly witness an exchange of pulpits between a Hebrew rabbi and the most attenuated example of a quondam "Christian." A good many barriers will have to be broken down first.

Faithfully yours,

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

HIGGINSON'S "HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES."

Perhaps some notice of this new work in THE INDEX may have escaped our eyes; but it is certainly safer to run the risk of saying good things of it over again than to lose any chance of commending it to the attention of the reading public. It is a most rare and admirable achievement; for the finest literary skill, matured thought, and wide experience of life and men, have been brought to bear upon the history of our own country, to give a true and simple account of it, and yet with all the charm and delight of a real work of art. From the early, mysterious, dim records of the Northmen, or even earlier visitants to our shores, to the prosaic records of the administrations between Jefferson and Lincoln, every epoch is touched with such consummate skill that it takes its place in the drama, and seems to help in the unfolding of the nation. Mr. Higginson has given the development and life of the nation by means of the narration of events rather than a chronicle of events.

Another remarkable quality is the union of enthusiasm with impartiality. There is no paltering with wrong, no want of clear conviction and pronounced conviction; yet we think there is not a passage tending to embitter sectarian or sectional prejudice. By the power of imagination he has always endeavored to paint the acts of each party as they looked to themselves, as well as to try them in the scales of moral justice. The perfect simplicity of style and the moral earnestness of the book save it from the fault, which so mars Dickens' Child's History of England, of flippancy and trifling on historic themes. Children like plainness and sincerity much better, and we rejoice to hear that they take this book and read it from beginning to end with unbroken enjoyment. The references to literature are very good, and will stimulate many a young reader to better acquaintance with our poets and romancers; and the catalogue of books for consultation is very valuable. We trust the book will become a universal text-book for reading and study in our schools, and that its happy appearance at this centennial season will help to deepen the influences which always come from thoughtful remembrances of the great men and great deeds of the past. Its broad, liberal, sympathetic spirit must commend it to all of like tendencies.

As Mr. Higginson must have gathered a great deal of material which he cannot have used in this condensed narrative, we hope he will give us some fuller sketches of leading characters or events in history, which will serve the children who have become men and women. It is a great duty to rescue our history from contempt and commonplace, and illuminate it with the light of imagination and enthusiasm.

E. D. C.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—On Saturday last the body of Sir Charles Lyell was buried in Westminster Abbey.

There were assembled, to pay honor to the illustrious dead, nearly all the leaders of the scientific world. Perhaps never before had been gathered under that august roof such a multitude of men eminent for their services to the enlightenment of mankind.

To give anything like a list of their names would absorb all the space allotted to me, and be a needless waste of time. Suffice it to say that the pall-bearers were the Duke of Argyll, Mr. Justice Grove, Mr. John Evans, Professor Huxley, Sir Edward Ryan, Dr. Hooker, Rev. W. Symmonds, and Mr. I. C. Morse. Professor Tyndall followed close behind the mourners, with representatives from the Queen and the Prince of Wales. Besides the hundreds who were admitted by the orders of the Dean, there was a vast crowd in the nave and aisles of the Abbey.

Two wreaths of white flowers lay upon the bier, to which were added at the grave one from the Queen, and another from Mrs. Cranshaw, whom I had the honor of attending. While waiting for the ceremony to commence, and watching the numerous arrivals of scientific and other celebrities, I could not restrain my thoughts from travelling back to the time when the science of geology was in its infancy, and "Charles Lyell" was manfully shielding it from the bitter storms of theological bigotry which beat about its head. At that time it cost something more than sacrifice of time and toil to be a geologist. Persecution in its varied and subtle forms was ready on every hand to stifle inquiry, to lay under a social ban every one who dared to unfold discoveries incompatible with the cosmogony of Genesis. Of the details of the late Sir Charles Lyell's early difficulties from this source little is now said. Better so; better to drown all such painful memories in the waters of Lethe. The amende has been made. For many, many years "the greatest geologist of his day" has enjoyed the confidence, the admiration, and, best of all, the gratitude of the world. And then, when all his great work was done and he entered into his rest, the nation paid to his mortal remains the highest honor reserved for her noblest sons. What a mighty change is this, and how encouraging a token of the rapid exodus out of spiritual bondage!

Yet more: the very Church whose bishops and ministers were so ready to denounce his early heresies on biblical subjects deems it an honor to lay him to rest in her most venerable sanctuary, and to read over his tomb the service of Christian Burial, although his geological heresies were as naught compared with the fact that he lived and died a Unitarian, and was well known to be a member of our congregation at St. George's Hall. Such a concession would have been impossible fifty years ago! But the late baronet may chiefly thank himself and his beloved wife for this conquest over early opposition. Their social influence was scarcely less than his great renown. Honored, trusted, and beloved were they by every one who had the privilege of knowing them. Still, though this was the chief cause of his triumph, it would be ungrateful to forget two at least out of the honored band whose influence helped to smooth his path to a just recognition.

To the late Prince Consort, we owe untold help in the encouragement of science and in the discouragement of theological prejudice. And after him in time, though not in value, we must place Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, Dean of Westminster, who from his eminent position in the Church has done all he possibly could to stamp out bigotry and to nourish universal charity. Never was man better placed than as the custodian and official dispenser of the nation's highest mortuary honors.

The influence of these musings on the scene around me prepared me for the service, which I expected would be painful and incongruous. On the contrary, the words swept over my ears, leaving unruffled the sweet serenity and peace into which my thoughts had led me. I saw hundreds, like myself, who could not enter into the "form," but who could heartily enjoy the spirit, of the august and solemn ceremony. Beside me stood the Rev. Dr. Martineau, to whose friendship and ministrations Sir Charles Lyell had owed so much. And again I thought—here was another to whom the world will never know how much it is indebted. No wonder that Sir Charles, among other eminent thinkers, attended Dr. Martineau's services while he could. For my part, if I were a layman and had no work of the kind to do, I never should have gone anywhere else, while I could hear him.

As a spectacle, a funeral in Westminster Abbey is most solemn and grand; the greater portion of the service is musical, and of a sort richly in harmony with the occasion and the associations of the place. At times it was a little too weird for me, but then I cannot bear gloom of any kind—in sight or sound; especially over the grave, where one needs everything to inspire resignation and hope.

I trust it will never be forgotten that he whom we mourn to-day, the greatest geologist that ever lived, believed that "the ineradicable basis of religion" was to be found "in the nature and necessities of man"; and contended that "the perpetual adaptation of the organic world to new conditions leaves the argument in favor of design, and therefore of a Designer, as valid as ever."

As one of those who had the honor of Sir Charles

Lyell's friendship, sympathy, and support from the very beginning of my public troubles almost to his last hour, I feel deeply grateful to Dean Stanley for the eloquent tribute to Sir Charles and Lady Lyell, with which he closed his funeral sermon at the Abbey yesterday afternoon:—

"With him science and religion were one and indivisible. From his mind the great religious problems of our time were never absent, and the infinite possibilities of Nature gave him fresh ground for this unshapen hope in the unknown immortal future. With that one faithful, beloved, and beautiful soul who, till within the last two years of his life, shared all his joys, his sorrows, his labors, and his fame, he walked that lofty path which the vulture's eye hath not seen, nor the lion's whelp hath trodden—the pathway of the just, brightening ever more and more towards the perfect day, in which he trusted they were now at last reunited in the presence of that light which they both so sincerely sought."

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, March 1, 1875.

Communications.

SPENCER AND TYNDALL.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your issue of March 4th, you print and indorse a portion of a private letter assailing Tyndall and Spencer; Tyndall for quibbling and cowardice, and Spencer as "having degenerated into a dogmatic fatalist who has just been well handled by Prof. Cairnes."

Prof. Tyndall, it may be, quibbles "and fears the world," as your correspondent has it, or even "juggles," as THE INDEX some time ago told us; but the writer has not been entirely alone in honoring him as an able, candid, and courageous man who has done noble service in the cause of free thought.

And it may be that Spencer, who is handled so much, has just been "well handled" by Prof. Cairnes; but it has seemed to the writer that the handling was a little foul. Because Spencer maintains the domination of law in social affairs, the reviewer mildly charges him with fatalism. Although Spencer has made special studies in history, as a basis for working out the principles of sociology, and has done more than any man who has lived, and is doing more than any other man who lives, to bring history into the service of sociology, the reviewer charges him with ignoring history! Although Spencer has been the first and the only thinker who has written on the sociological history of dying or dead civilizations, as the Egyptian, Hebrew, Mexican, and Peruvian, the reviewer charges him with "completely ignoring the phenomena of social retrogression." "Well handled," indeed! But handled about as fairly by Prof. Cairnes as by most of the critics.

W. D. GUNNING.

[Prof. Gunning has no cause to complain, if he enjoys as much liberty to defend Spencer and Tyndall as others do to criticise them: the word "assail" is unjust. Is there to be free speech only for one opinion? That is not the principle on which THE INDEX is conducted. It is enough to say here that we never are guilty of the impertinence of "indorsing" anything that our correspondents write; that we have repeatedly expressed our own estimate of Spencer and Tyndall with sufficient explicitness in our own language; and that it is identical neither with Prof. Gunning's nor with that of our English correspondent, who indeed stated that we "overrate" Tyndall. But we have no idol too tender to be touched.—ED.]

ABOUT "NEW DEFINITIONS."

LOWELL, Mass., March 4, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

While reading your editorial on "Christianity Notwithstanding," published February 18th, I felt moved to ask a question. I said:—

"Mr. Abbot writes himself outside of Christianity, and opposed to it. Mr. Savage thinks that Mr. Abbot is only outside of 'a new definition' of Christianity. But Mr. Abbot disclaims the framing, or the right in reason to frame, a new definition thereof. The definition is already framed, he says, by 'the collective utterances of the Christian Church,' and by her 'venerable formularies and creeds'; to this he adds only the perceptions of the net influence of these on the course of human progress. But we find that 'THE INDEX aims to increase intelligence with respect to religion.' Mr. Abbot, in a certain essay denominated 'A Study of Religion,' intimates the necessity of a new conception thereof, while yet he seems to admit that religion, with a proper understanding of the word, is desirable. It is the effort of man to perfect himself (I write from memory). I feel moved, therefore, to ask if religion has not been as thoroughly defined as Christianity has been; what is Mr. Abbot's right in reason to frame a new definition of it; why not rather take the collective utterances of religious bodies, the venerable creeds and formularies which have associated themselves with the popular conceptions of religion, attach to these his perceptions that the net influence of them upon the course of human progress has been crippling, retarding, and hostile, and so conclude that his proper attitude towards it is the same as his attitude to Christ-ianity—antagonistic? With leave to define either Christianity or religion as one pleases, one may be very friendly or very hostile to either. Perhaps Mr. Abbot will make one more attempt to be understood in this matter; for just now some of his positions seem inconsistent with other positions."

W. G. HASKELL.

[If Mr. Haskell will consider that all "religious" bodies hitherto have been organized on the basis of some particular religion, and that (so far as we know) the Free Religious Association is the first ever organized on religion in its universality, he will see that there are no creeds and formularies to appeal to in this case. We regard the Constitution of the Free Religious Association as the only collective utterance analogous to the creeds of the sectarian religions; and it yields the very definition we defend, by a fair construction. But the essay Mr. Haskell refers to appeals from the "provincial" definition of religion prevalent in merely Christian countries to the "cosmopolitan" definition deducible from universal human experience; and that is precisely the way in which we define Christianity, appealing from all the special sects to the Church Universal. Neither of our definitions have we taken because it is old or new, but because we think each scientific—framed to express the generic unity, here of all organized religions, and there of all organized Christian bodies. Further thought will show Mr. Haskell that we have followed one principle in the case of both definitions. —Ed.]

THE COMPULSORY SYSTEM OF EDUCATION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In a late editorial entitled "A Social Nest of Snakes," giving some very just reflections on the social organism, in connection with the statistics of Dr. Harris relative to the evils entailed on society through its neglect of that prolific mother of criminals and paupers, "Margaret," you say "that a part of their treatment, at least, will be the requisition that every child shall be educated, whether the parents do or do not neglect their natural duties; and that no child shall be suffered to be brought up in a hot-bed of crime and pauperism." In other words, you would inaugurate compulsory education mentally and morally, not only of pauper children, but of all others, whenever parents fail to exercise the proper control in this matter.

Such opinions are widely prevalent, and yet the subject deserves careful consideration on the part of all, even in its most earnest advocates. Among the strongest arguments put forth in its favor are the following, to wit: the natural right of every child born into the world to be educated, and the right of property to protect itself by the aid of schoolhouses instead of almshouses and jails. It is assumed that society will be improved, whatever the motive by which the result is achieved, and that no deleterious effects will arise therefrom. Let us see.

To reach the disorder effectually, something more than a mere attendance on our public schools, as at present constituted, will be necessary. Society must assume the entire control of them for years, removing them out of the sphere of vicious influences, in order that they may not "be brought up in a hot-bed of crime and pauperism." To do this it must violate the natural relation of parent and child, must invade the domain of the family. In certain cases this would not be so serious an evil, perhaps, were it not for the principle involved, and the tendency to destroy the most enduring basis on which society rests.

By common consent the family relation is the most important factor in our civilization, and without its underlying principles and elevating influences no high moral standard can be reached. Around it every safeguard should be thrown, because on it the safety and happiness of all depend. In the ferment of ideas consequent on our rapid progress and somewhat transitional condition, theories have been advanced looking to its final overthrow, and in its place the substitution of some sort of police authority which shall supersede its use, and take its place in the care and training of the young. Any invasion of the family will directly promote that individualism which ignores the mutual obligations of the part to the whole—the many to the one. It is to the family, as at present constituted, that society is indebted for that harmony of parts, each answering to the other like the strings of a vast instrument, which, brought into right relations, make a harmonious whole. Weaken it, with whatever good intentions, and the very evils complained of will speedily increase.

Certain it is, if we continue to travel the road of easy divorce, making the marriage tie of less and less binding force, and, for light and trivial causes, suffer its disruption, some provision must be made by the State for the care of children. When that situation of affairs shall have arrived, it will doubtless be necessary to enforce education by means of police regulations upon those worse than orphans. Let us meet such exigencies when they arrive; but, in trying to cure minor evils, we must have a care that we do not hasten approach of greater ones. It is frequently asserted that this is the law of progress, and that, even though it does destroy the family, a better state of society will be evolved. In other words, that this is a natural and therefore proper result of the law of evolution. But we must remember that movement is not always progress, and that a circle, however large, always involves the idea of return.

It will not for a moment be maintained, I presume, that the Oneida Community has solved the problem of the highest social organism; and yet compulsory education proposes to do in a general way substantially what the Community does, when its collective authority takes the place of parental care. The right to control the child of one man and woman is the right to control the children of all men and women. Once entered upon this road, no man can forecast the limit of the State's encroachments on the rights of the family. The Roman Catholic will insist on its being carried to its logical conclusion, by including religious training as a part of the State's duties, and the Christian Amendment party will join in that demand.

It may be insisted that the right of compulsion shall only be exercised by the State when the parent's duty is neglected. But human nature is so prone to rebel against what is deemed arbitrary and tyrannical, that the effect of the law will be to increase this neglect. Again, natural affection may be held as a sufficient preventive of the relaxation of parental solicitude; but it allows the Community to deprive the children born there of the wholesome influences of the family relation without a protest. They are educated and restrained, it is said by those familiar with its results, quite as wisely, and compare favorably with children brought up in the sphere of home. But the legacy of a mother's love and a father's care is seldom theirs. In its place stands the Community, the common father and mother of all. Paupers and criminals there are none. In that respect your requirements are met. Is the highest ideal of society then reached? If so, let us manfully acknowledge the fact, and forthwith resolve ourselves into one great Oneida Community; or, if that be unpracticable, labor for the formation of smaller ones.

We have no right to call in force to effect even a good end, if thereby we weaken the foundation of society itself. Better trust the slow but sure influences of the voluntary system under the old order of things, subject to some evils which appear inseparable from the social organism, than resort to any doubtful experiments. Such fears may be groundless; but when I reflect on the insidious nature of the causes which have overthrown older civilizations than ours, the necessity of caution is apparent, when about to lay our hands rudely on fundamental principles. The law of force is as old as history; but wherever most thoroughly brought into play it has proved most inefficient in the production of good results. The influence of the opposite principle has ever proved most beneficent. Time is an element of progress of more value than many of us are willing to admit. In some things we can afford to wait. Can we not in this?

But, granting our right and duty to use compulsion in this matter of reforming and improving the lower strata of society, the question arises how such a result shall most surely be reached. The end sought is a state of society entirely free from such admixtures. Given a "Margaret," and a brood of criminals will be the result. Education may modify, it cannot wholly change, their natures. But observation teaches that the "Margarets" are not alone the producers of these venomous reptiles. They are liable to appear in all walks of life, and no amount of compulsion can eliminate the poisonous blood that runs in their veins. Education may mitigate, but the only radical cure for society is to stop their production. Can this be done? I do not undertake its affirmation, but I insist that compulsory processes were better applied at this point than any other. If society attempts to interfere at all, let it study intelligently and thoroughly the laws of inheritance and reproduction, and, when ascertained, if indeed they can be, apply the remedy. What it should be, and how applied, is not pertinent to the present discussion; but, however complex the problem may be, it would have the merit of striking at the seat of the disease, instead of following that absurd old plan of dealing with effects instead of causes.

M. L. HAWLEY.

MARATHON, N. Y., Feb. 15, 1875.

[The lecture of Mr. Hawkins, published last week, is the best reply to some of the points contained in the above letter. No form of "communism" is logically implied in the principle of guaranteed universal education, which is the phrase we much prefer to the misleading one of "compulsory education." Once recognize the truth that to starve a child's mind is as great a crime as to starve its body, and most of the above objections disappear. The State should simply fulfil its proper function of repressing crime in this matter. It should only require, by stated public examinations of all children, that every child should receive a certain elementary education; but it need not require that it should receive this at school. When it is remembered that over half of the registered children in New York city are growing up in complete ignorance, the failure of the voluntary system in great cities is self-evident. No parents but those who are too ignorant themselves to know the value of the schooling of which they deprive their offspring, or too vicious to care about it, would be affected by the proposed system. Where there is really a "family" deserving of the name, you will find a decent appreciation of the worth of knowledge. The State should simply protect the child's rights in this respect; and it is a great mistake to consider this protection as an infringement on parental rights. A father has no more right to make his child an ignoramus for the sake of what the child may contribute to the family expenses, than he has to starve it for the sake of economy. Let the State only protect the personal rights of children, and all that is sought will be gained. There is no wish or danger of running into Oneida communism. Keep the question clear, if possible, from all such logical extravagances.—Ed.]

DO WOMEN WANT TO VOTE?

MY FRIEND ABBOT:—

In THE INDEX of Feb. 11, I find an article with the above caption, which I wish to notice, and place the subject it moots in what I deem a correct point of view.

In starting, the writer tells us that of his "female friends," "intelligent," "cultured," "not one in ten wants to vote." "It may be possible," he says, "to make a clear case in their favor as to their right; but if they will not have it, what then? Women have never asked anywhere to share with men their political privileges and duties; they do not ask it now, and it is his belief they never will." Now, he is vastly mistaken. Not a few women of superior character have earnestly asked it, and are urging it now.

He tells us, forsooth, that politics is not their sphere. It is against Nature. The "peculiar womanliness of the sex" is against it. "Some noble women," he admits, "ask for the ballot." "They speak for their sex, but they are self-appointed, and their acts are repudiated." "If nine-tenths of the women demanded suffrage," he believes, "they would get it." But he tells us "if women voted as men, he cannot see one good reason to believe that results as to parties and measures would be materially changed. Such full vote," he thinks, "it is obvious could never be obtained. It would take years before women would overcome their innate repugnance to voting, if they ever would. They would meet at the polls a much larger number of women their opposites in character, while the great mass would remain quietly at home." He thinks "it requires no acute discernment to see what vital interests would suffer from the preponderance of this element at the polls." He tells us that men "are almost to a man qualified to vote understandingly, and would speak, if at all, for good government and good morals. If women were voters, this class would ever be very much larger among them than among men. Thus the aggregate effect would be very bad." How is this? The only construction appears to be, that women are not capable of exercising the wisdom and discretion he awards to men! His low estimate of the sex is therefore apparent. This is confirmed by what follows: "Why shall we take this risk? Why not 'let well enough alone'? Women suffer no peculiar hardships. They are subject to the same laws as men, and their property is taxed neither more nor less than men's." One fact, however, which appears to have escaped him, stands out in prominent relief. They are made the victims of the infraction of a most vital clause of the Constitution of our country—TAXATION WITHOUT REPRESENTATION.

He continues: "The proposed change is far-reaching and fundamental, and I am firm in the conviction would not be justified by a wish to give the ballot to the comparatively few women who desire it. The possible good would not nearly equal the probable evil." Again: "It seems hard that an intelligent, educated young man twenty years old is forbidden to vote. But it is the best we can do," etc. This little problem is easily solved. An intelligent, educated young woman of the same age would be equally qualified, and it would be no less hard in her case. The rule to be adopted is plain and simple—whatever age is prescribed for one sex, should be prescribed for the other.

The important point remains. "F. H. G." seems to think that women should not have the right to vote till the whole of the sex are agreed. The argument would be just as fair in regard to the men. It is, of course, just as proper and reasonable that every woman who desires should use the elective franchise as men do under similar circumstances. Must she lay aside her most sacred conscientious convictions of personal duty, and wait till all other women are ready to join her in the work? The proposition is no less absurd than if applied to every other religious, social, and civil duty.

T. M. C.

PHILADELPHIA, 2d mo. 27, 1875.

A CHEAP AND BEAUTIFUL amusement is within reach of all. But little trouble is all that is needed to enable one to enjoy the delightful music of the æolian harp. The following is an excellent method of constructing such an instrument. Take a box of thin board, five inches deep, six inches wide, and the length of the window in which it is to be used; place on the top at each end a little strip of wood a quarter of an inch thick and half an inch long, glue these pieces on as bridges for strings. Fasten across each end inside a piece of hard wood an inch square for holding the pegs. Into one of these fix as many pegs as there are to be strings, and into the other as many small brass pins. The instrument is then to be strung with small catgut or silk strings, one end of which is attached to the brass pins, and the other around the pegs. The strings should not be drawn tight, but must be tuned in unison. A thin board should then be placed over the string, about three inches above the sounding-board. Then place the box in the window, partly open, so that the draft of air shall play upon the strings. On a moderately windy day the most delightful and fairy-like sounds will be given off by the strings.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " " 6 " "
 " 52 " " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School, A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig, and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its Training and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts, Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMBERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unhappy Eger.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticism on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection, and Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES'S Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	3.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	.75
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.50
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Psychology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theistic, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Cracklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations,—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHÉLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy. Science, Philosophy, Society, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	.50
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARLET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.00
The Newcomes.....	1.00
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.00
The Virginians.....	1.00
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.00
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Shing and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Gave a Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.
At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

NONPAREIL Farm Feed, Bone,
Drug, and Hand-grinding MILLS. Ten Sizes. Also Cotton-Seed Hullers. Illustrated pamphlets free. Address SEDGEBER, SHEPARD & MILLER, 181 East Front Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

PREMIUM CHESTER WHITE
PIGS.—$15 each, $28 a pair. Chester County MAMMOTH CORN, and Imported BELGIAN OATS. 4 lbs. by mail, $1; peck, $2; one-half bushel, $3; Circulars and Sample Packages of Seeds free for two Stamps. Address N. P. BOYER, Parkersburg Chester Co., Penn.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,
NEWSPAPER
Advertisement Brokers,
Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.
Complete files for inspection of advertisers.
☞ Lists sent upon application.
☞ Send for estimates.

TWO NEW BOOKS.
MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dume Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REASONS FOR USING THE EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

— AND —
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY,
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co's Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

☞ On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION. Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers,
P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER.
A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPEER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

— OF —
THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vo's., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
MORSE'S NEW BUST OF THEODORE PARKER.

Cabinet size. Price 50 cents.
Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston
Also for sale at the office of THE INDEX.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FREE

SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,

256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full gilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City

FRED GRANT & CO.
A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION.
By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS AT BELFAST.

Seventh Edition,
Containing the First and Second Prefaces replying to his Critics, an extract from the Manchester Lecture, and the paper on "Scientific Materialism" in full. 120 pages. Price 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

SCHOOL MUSIC BOOKS.

Commence your instruction with AMERICAN SCHOOL MUSIC READERS.

IN THREE BOOKS.

Book I. [35 cts.] has a charming course for Primary Schools. Book II. [50 cts.] has one equally attractive for Grammar Schools, and Book III. [50 cts.] is fitted for higher Grammar classes and High Schools. The very practical, interesting, and thorough course in these books was constructed by L. O. Emerson and W. S. Tilden.

For a companion book use
Cheerful Voices. A large collection of genial School Songs, by L. O. Emerson. A popular book. 50 cts.

Afterward take up
THE HOUR OF SINGING, CHOICE TRIOS, or THE SONG MONARCH.

These books are for HIGH SCHOOLS and ACADEMIES. The Hour of Singing [$1.00] by L. O. Emerson and W. S. Tilden, is arranged for 2, 3 or 4 voices. Choice Trios [$1.00] by W. S. Tilden, for 3 voices, are choice in every sense, and The Song Monarch [75 cts.] by H. R. Palmer, assisted by L. O. Emerson, unexcelled as a book for Singing Classes, is equally good for High Schools.

All books sent, post-paid, for retail price.
OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

NOTICE TO THE LIBERAL PUBLIC.

M. ALTMAN & Co., }
301 & 303 6th Ave., N.Y. }

I have during the last six years kept my name and business constantly before the readers of Liberal papers, and have during that time supplied most of them with merchandise from my establishment, orders in most cases coming through the advertisements published by me.

But the limited space necessarily occupied in a newspaper makes it impossible to enumerate or specify accurately the many articles required by the public, and I have been, and still am, in receipt of many letters begging for a more detailed Price List or Catalogue. I have determined to issue the most complete Price List of Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Ladies' and Gents' Undergarments and Outfits, Suits, Costumes, Hosiery, Gloves, and the thousand small articles in Millinery, Notions, and Haberdashery, that has ever been circulated, free of cost, to all who may send stamp and address. The matter is now in the hands of the printer, and by the time this is read will be ready to mail. Send on your addresses, with stamp for return postage. Liberals who may not be able, or who hesitate to send stamp, may simply send their address, and I will mail a few for distribution among their friends.

Fraternally yours,
MORRIS ALTMAN.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1875.

WHOLE No. 275.

CHURCH TAXATION IN MASSACHUSETTS.

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, Appointed under the Resolve of 1874, C. 70, "to enquire into the expediency of revising and amending the laws of the State, relating to taxation and the exemptions therefrom."

COMMISSIONERS.

THOMAS HILLS, Esq., of Boston,
Prof. JULIUS H. SEELYE, Amherst College, }
JAMES M. BARKER, Esq., Pittsfield. }

AMHERST, MASS., Oct. 14, 1874.

My dear Sir,—Will you do the Taxation Commission the favor to lay before them in a written form, such as you would be willing to have them embody in their report to the Legislature, your views respecting the present exemption from taxation, of property used for religious, educational, and charitable purposes? If you will do this at as early a date as possible, e.g., before the first of November, the Commissioners will gratefully receive it.

Very truly yours,

J. H. SEELYE.

MR. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, BOSTON.

BOSTON, MASS., Oct. 26, 1874.

PROF. JULIUS H. SEELYE, Amherst College:

My dear Sir,—Enclosed please find the statement of views you were so good as to ask for the Taxation Commission. As it is unlikely that the views of the petitioners to the Legislature will be fairly brought before it except through the Commission, I thank you for the justice and impartial spirit which prompted your suggestion that this paper might be embodied in the Commission's report. Though not so short as I hoped it might be, I think you will perceive how condensed it is; and many will be grateful if it can be laid in full before the Legislature.

Very respectfully yours,

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

BOSTON, Oct. 25, 1874.

THOMAS HILLS, Esq., Boston,
Prof. JULIUS H. SEELYE, Amherst, } Taxation
JAMES M. BARKER, Esq., Pittsfield, } Commission:

Gentlemen,—In compliance with your request, contained in the letter of Professor Seelye of the 14th instant, to lay before you in written form, such as I should be willing to have you embody in your report to the Legislature, my views respecting the present exemption from taxation of property used for religious, educational, and charitable purposes, I respectfully submit the following condensed statement, which you are at liberty to employ in such manner as you may deem most useful in the discharge of your highly important and honorable function. I make it, of course, purely as an individual citizen, and do not desire for it any other consideration than such as its intrinsic truth may warrant; but I believe that I express substantially the views of the Boston Liberal League, of which I have the honor to be President, and the petition of which to the last Legislature occasioned the appointment of the Joint Special Committee whose report led to your own appointment as State Commissioners on this subject.

1. The tenth article of the first part of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts explicitly declares the only principle on which just taxation can rest: "Each individual of the society has a right to be protected by it in the enjoyment of his life, liberty, and property, according to standing laws. He is obliged, consequently, to contribute his share to the expense of this protection." The great fundamental principle that protection is the only just ground of taxation is thus recognized unqualifiedly in our State Constitution, and I need not say a word to sustain it.

2. All just taxes being assessed and collected for protection alone, all expenditure of State funds should be for the same purpose. Otherwise the public money is raised under false pretences.

3. There are two modes of expending State funds at present: direct expenditure by appropriation, indirect expenditure by omission to collect actual dues, i.e., exemption from taxation, which is indirect appropriation. The right to exempt presupposes the right to tax; and exemption in every case is omission to collect money actually due to the State. All property is protected (theoretically), and all property is therefore justly liable to pay the cost of this protection. If the State exempts any property from taxation, it does but excuse it from bearing its proportion of the burden of taxation, which burden must be borne in full by non-exempted property. The State, like a private citizen in business, must average its loss by bad debts upon its solvent or honest debtors, on pain of bankruptcy. Hence the effect of all exemption is to collect from each tax-payer more than the actual cost of his protection, for the purpose of paying back in full the taxes on all exempted property. Exemption, that is, is indirect appropriation; and, unless the money thus appropriated is spent for the public protection, exemption is a fraud by the State committed against every tax-payer. I mean that the State has no right to appropriate money which it has raised avowedly for protective purposes alone, whether the mode of appropriation be direct or indirect, unless protection be the exclusive object of appropriation.

4. All public funds appropriated to private parties should be solely for services rendered by them in securing the general protection. Appropriations or exemptions on grounds of favor, partiality, or privilege, are not only unjust but (as I have shown) fraudulent. Nothing can be honestly paid out of the public treasury, whether directly or indirectly, except for the purpose of defraying the expenses of that protection for which, by the State Constitution, all money is paid into it; and this self-evident principle requires that the parties to whom it is paid shall have earned it by services rendered.

5. If exemption from taxation, therefore, is granted to any species of property, it should be such property alone as might with equal justice receive a direct appropriation. I would lay the greatest possible emphasis upon this principle. Exemption from taxation is a violation of public faith in all cases where a direct appropriation would not be equally proper and just.

6. For many and weighty reasons I believe that direct appropriation would be a wiser policy than exemption from taxation in all cases. The public ought to know exactly for what and to whom the public money is paid, and also to what amount; whereas the effect of exemption is to conceal these facts. Abuses and corruption always attend such concealment; which is another strong argument against exemption. The recipients of public money will be stimulated to render the required services more faithfully, if they know that no such concealment is possible. Various other reasons might be enumerated.

7. At the same time, however, I admit the right of the State to exempt rather than to appropriate, when exemption is in return for services rendered, and when direct appropriation would be equally justifiable. If public economy can be increased by exemption under these provisos, or if any other advantage can be secured by it to the State, then I should approve the exemption. But I greatly doubt whether direct appropriation is not always preferable. Even if exemption is retained, all exempted property ought to be regularly assessed, to the end that the amount of exemption may be precisely known.

8. A special Board, so constituted as to ensure the maximum of character and ability in its members, might be permanently organized to take cognizance of all claims for appropriation or exemption on behalf of applicant institutions, and to report them to the Legislature annually, with favorable or unfavorable recommendations, and the reasons therefor in full. If all applications were first submitted to such a Board, and rigorously scrutinized, there would be little danger of the evils apprehended from "special legislation." At any rate, it should not be forgotten that exemption from taxation is special legislation as things are, and is accompanied with very great and grave abuses. A change as here intimated would probably be a change for the better, at least.

9. Passing now to consider the claims of certain classes of property to exemption, I would make a broad distinction between property used for charitable or educational purposes on the one hand, and property used for religious purposes on the other.

With reference to the former class, the State must to some extent support charities and schools in order to give the protection which it is organized to secure, and to save still greater expense from neglecting them. This is universally admitted, and I need not argue the point. Charitable and educational institutions which are in part or in whole owned or controlled by the State have, therefore, a just claim upon the public treasury. But those in which the State has neither ownership nor control ought not, in my judgment, to receive either direct appropriation or exemption from taxation. Such aid makes unjust discrimination in favor of corporate as against private property which is used for the very same objects; exemption, in particular, appropriates the largest amount of public money to the wealthiest and least needy of such institutions, many of which are only partially or nominally charitable or educational in their objects. Certainly no public aid, whether by direct or indirect appropriation, ought to be given to any private institution except on the ground of services rendered to the public; and wherever profession of public service is made the ground of a claim for public aid, the State should share in the control of the claimant institution, so far at least as to make sure that the profession shall be carried out in good faith. If any institution prefers to be under purely private management, it ought not to ask or receive either appropriation or exemption.

10. With reference to property used for religious purposes, there are conclusive reasons, in my judgment, why it should neither receive direct appropriation from the State nor be exempted from taxation to any extent.

In the first place, twenty-three of the States of the Union provide expressly in their Constitutions that no one shall be taxed for the support of any religious society of which he is not a member; and this State makes the same provision in the sixtieth chapter of the General Statutes. Referring to the time of the Revolution, it is said in Tyler's American Ecclesiastical Law, page 177: "All land-holders, resident and non-resident, Christian and unchristian, were taxed [to sustain public worship], though they never saw the minister or entered the meeting-house; and all corporations holding lands within the parish were also taxed, upon the principle that, so far as the community were concerned, public religious and moral instruction was intended for the prevention of crimes, and not for the salvation of souls." I would call especial attention to the fact that the principle upon which direct taxation for the support of public worship was then justified was the good moral influence of the churches in repressing crime; the identical argument now urged to justify the exemption of church property from taxation. Now what was the sequel? In 1833, the people of this Commonwealth amended their Constitution so as to abolish this practice of direct taxation for the support of religious worship; and they thereby condemned the principle upon which the practice rested. If, then, the rule is a correct one that tax-exemption is unjustifiable wherever direct taxation and appropriation would be unjustifiable, it is clear as noonday that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is pledged to a principle which forbids all exemption of church property from taxation. It is to-day illegal to tax any man for the support of any religious society in which he is not a member; to exempt church property from taxation is to tax everybody for its support, whether members or non-members; and it follows that the exemption of church property violates the General Statutes as they now are, at the same time that it rests on a general principle already emphatically condemned by the amendment of the Constitution in 1833. I therefore claim that the exemption of church property from taxation, even to the smallest extent, is an illegal practice, judged by the Constitution and General Statutes as they exist to-day; and that the statutory exemption of such property is in flagrant contradiction of both. It is a practice which, if justifiable at all, justifies direct taxation for the support of the churches; but, this being declared unjustifiable in 1833, consistency and justice alike require the total cessation of church-exemption.

In the second place, the exemption of church property from taxation is equivalent to a direct subsidy from the State to the Church; which is a violation of the principle, well recognized in this country, that Church and State should be totally separate. It is a subsidy which can in no way be justified under our republican institutions, until the National and State Constitutions are so amended as to recognize Christianity as the National religion. The advocates of that measure are the only ones who can consistently uphold the present exemption of the churches from taxation.

In the third place, the practice under consideration is fraught with the gravest dangers to free institutions, by fostering the accumulation of wealth in ecclesiastical hands, especially in the Roman Catholic Church. The designs of this body upon the public school system are so hostile and perilous to its very existence,—they are so open and undisguised in many localities, and have already done so much to precipitate religious dissensions of the worst character,—that the simple instinct of self-preservation ought to determine the people of Massachusetts, as of all the States, to put an end to the growth of this cancerous organism in the body politic, so far as granting it any special privilege is concerned.

In the fourth place, the exemption of the churches from taxation presses heavily on some consciences, and ought to press heavily on all. By exempting all churches from taxation, the entire community is taxed for the support of each: that is, each tax-payer is made to contribute to the support, not only of the beliefs he himself cherishes, but also of the beliefs which contradict them. The Protestant is obliged to pay for the support of Catholicism, the Catholic for the support of Protestantism; the Christian must help support Judaism, the Jew Christianity, the free-thinker both. Whoever has a conscience against being compelled to support beliefs which he considers false and pernicious, ought to see that he is thus compelled by the exemption of the churches from taxation. The State, which he is taxed to support, today practically supports a host of conflicting faiths by indirect taxation of the whole people; and the consciousness of this wrong is becoming deep and widespread. In a country where conscience and thought are supposed to be free, it is a public iniquity to continue such a wrong in the light of increasing knowledge of its character; and, regardless of private opinions, all honest citizens ought to favor reform in this direction. Contrary to the General Statutes, every citizen is now forced to pay tribute to religious societies in which he is not a member; and the only way to avoid this is to tax the churches equitably at their actual market value, exempting none to any extent.

In the fifth place, the churches themselves would gain in self-respect to be no longer pensioners on the public treasury, supported by contributions levied upon thousands who would not pay except on compulsion. What they might lose in some directions they would certainly gain in moral dignity and self-respect; nor is it likely they would lose financially in the long run, so long as their supporters retained a sincere faith in their usefulness. Many eminent divines among the various denominations, many religious journals, and an increasing number of the laity, are coming to see the justice of taxing the churches, and to favor this step. The movement to secure it is a thoroughly honest one, by no means confined to so-called "infidels," and by no means having its root in mercenary or sordid motives, as has been very inconsiderately charged by heated opponents. The motives of the Liberal League, so far as I am qualified to bear testimony on that point, are a strong love of religious liberty, a desire for justice, a wish to be relieved from a grievance which galls conscience and wounds self-respect, and a hearty devotion to the fundamental principles of republican institutions. It is not the amount, but the fact, of the tax now indirectly imposed for the support of religious societies in which they are not members, which constitutes the evil that is opposed by the Liberal League. The spirit of their petition is well expressed by Rev. Alvah Hovey, D. D., speaking with reference to "Baptist usage" in his little book entitled Religion and the State, pages 138-139: "It has protested, even to imprisonment, against direct taxation for the support of religion, but has winked at indirect taxation for the same purpose. It is charitable to believe that this inconsistency has not commonly been perceived; but it is now manifest to all, and the only proper course is to bring our practice as soon as possible into agreement with our theory."

11. In conclusion, may I express the hope that your honorable Commission, if unprepared to report in favor of the principle we contend for,—namely, the right of American citizens to be wholly untaxed, either directly or indirectly, for the support of religious worship,—will at least not report in favor of a compromise, by exempting only a minimum of church property from taxation and taxing the rest? Such a course could not possibly meet the point of conscience involved; and a point of conscience is most certainly involved in the exemption of a fixed minimum of church property as much as in the present state of things. The exemption of property used for charitable and educational purposes does not wound conscience; but the exemption of church property does, and no solution of the question can possibly be final, which still leaves the community taxed to never so small an amount for the support of religious worship. It is not a question of dollars, but of rights; and I earnestly hope that the Commission and the Legislature will so regard it.

With high respect, I am

Very truly yours,

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

President of the Boston Liberal League.

The Claims of the Church on the State for Partial Support.

EXTRACTS FROM THE REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS ON "TAXATION AND EXEMPTION THEREFROM," SUBMITTED TO THE LEGISLATURE OF MASSACHUSETTS IN FEBRUARY, 1875.

By existing statutes the following persons and polls are exempt from taxation by this Commonwealth.

First. The property of the United States.

Second. The property of the Commonwealth, except real estate of which the Commonwealth is in possession under a mortgage for condition broken.

Third. The personal property of literary, benevolent, charitable, and scientific institutions incorporated within this Commonwealth, and the real estate belonging to such institutions, occupied by them or their officers for the purposes for which they were incorporated.

Fourth. All property belonging to common-school districts, the income of which is appropriated to the purposes of education.

Fifth. The Bunker Hill Monument.

Sixth. The household furniture of every person, not exceeding one thousand dollars in value, his wearing apparel, farming utensils, and mechanics' tools necessary for carrying on his business.

Seventh. Houses of religious worship and the pews and furniture (except for parochial purposes), but portions of such houses appropriated for purposes other than religious worship shall be taxed at the value thereof to the owners of the houses.

Eighth. Cemeteries, tombs, and rights of burial, so long as the same shall be dedicated for the burial of the dead.

Ninth. The estate, both real and personal, of incorporated agricultural societies.

Tenth. The property to the amount of five hundred dollars of a widow or unmarried female, and of any female minor whose father is deceased, if her whole estate, real and personal, not otherwise exempted from taxation, does not exceed in value the sum of one thousand dollars.

Eleventh. Mules, horses, and neat-cattle less than one year old, and swine and sheep less than six months old.

Twelfth. The polls and any portion of the estates of persons who, by reason of age, infirmity, and poverty, are, in the judgment of the assessors, unable to contribute fully towards the public charges.

Thirteenth. Beet-sugar manufactories, for ten years from 1872.

Fourteenth. So much of the income from a profession, trade, or employment as exceeds the sum of two thousand dollars. . . .

But, as many persons claim that the third class ought no longer to be exempted, we have given to this question very careful attention, and, as the result, we recommend that the existing laws of the Commonwealth relating thereto remain unchanged.

Briefly stated, the following positions upon this point seem to us to be sound:—

Taxation is a certain requirement which the State makes upon its subjects for the public welfare. Though nominally and technically levied upon property, it is really laid upon persons, and is a lawful demand that they use their property not solely for their own good, but also for the good of others. It is not, indeed, a demand for property as such, but only for a particular species of property, viz., money. As already remarked, taxation is not a payment to society for certain social privileges and immunities, but it is the enforcement of the right, and the fulfillment of the obligation, revealed in the very existence of the State and its subjects. Like all the service which the State requires, this involves the righteous surrender or subjection of the individual will to the will of the community. When this self-surrender is free and complete, there is nothing more to be desired, either on the part of the individual or the State. The perfect individual and the perfect State would both be found in the free and full surrender of every individual to the welfare of every other. Whatever favors this most desirable attainment, should receive every encouragement. All gifts, whereby an individual shows any true self-forgetfulness for the public good, will not only be welcomed, but the disposition to make them will be encouraged and fostered by every wise State. As a general rule, all such gifts are in the exact line of what the State seeks to secure by its taxation, and there is really just as great an absurdity in taxing them as there would be in re-taxing the taxes themselves. Instead of taxing such gifts, the State might more profitably encourage them by bounties. She should encourage all acts of every sort whereby a man is disposed to render an unselfish service to his fellow-men, always indeed superintending such acts and repressing whatever would be injurious, but always fostering that self-forgetfulness, in the free and full exercise of which, by every individual, consists the highest well-being, both of himself and the State. Property, which passes out of private hands a free-will offering for public uses, and which loses thereby its entire power of reproducing itself for private gain or emolument, deserves very different treatment; for it must ever stand in a very different relation to the State from that which private parties can still control for private ends.

The only proper question in such a matter is, whether the gifts are really for the public good. An individual may be truly unselfish, and yet not wholly wise, and might generously, but ignorantly, direct his gifts in a way for the public injury. But in such a case the proper course for the State would be, not to tax such gifts, but to refuse or prohibit them.

It is very possible that the property given to our charitable, educational, or religious institutions, may, at any time, find itself directed, either by the will of its donors or its managers, into channels not favorable to the public welfare; and it is very clear that over all such matters the State should exercise her wise supervision and just authority. We believe that the machinery for such an exercise is already provided by our courts; but if not, we recommend the enactment of statutes by which, even if individuals or corporations devote property, ostensibly for charitable, educational, or religious purposes, but in a way not favorable or even prejudicial to charity, education, or religion, such mistakes may be lawfully corrected.

It would be a singular contradiction, not only to the treatment of education, which has given this Commonwealth such glory in the past, but also to the entire educational system for which Massachusetts has such eminence at the present time, if we should put the slightest bar upon, or fail to give every encouragement to, any efforts for the promotion among our people of knowledge in every department of literature, science, or art. The original constitution of the State still remains unaltered in its declaration that,—

"Wisdom and knowledge, as well as virtue, diffused generally among the body of the people, being necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties; and as these depend on spreading the opportunities and advantages of education in the various parts of the country, and among the different orders of the people, it shall be the duty of legislatures and magistrates, in all future periods of this Commonwealth, to cherish the interests of literature and science, and all seminaries of them; especially the university at Cambridge, public schools and grammar schools in the towns; to encourage private societies and public institutions, rewards, and immunities, for the promotion of agriculture, arts, sciences, commerce, trades, manufactures, and a natural history of the country; to countenance and inculcate the principles of humanity and general benevolence, public and private charity, industry and frugality, honesty and punctuality in their dealings, sincerity, good humor, and all social affections and generous sentiments among the people."

This is, to-day, the fundamental rule for the guidance and control of the Legislature in its dealings with the subject. Before and since its formal announcement, in 1780, the practice of the State has been uniform and unbroken to obey its commands and encourage religion, science, and charity, by giving the property donated to those objects immunity from the burdens of taxation. Were not the donors of such funds justified in believing that our legislatures and magistrates, in all future periods of the Commonwealth, would observe their duty in cherishing and preserving these immunities? Would not their repeal, so far as it would bring under taxation funds heretofore donated in the belief that the immunity would be permanent, savor of a breach of the public faith? . . .

The same line of argument which applies to the third and fourth classes in the list, would also continue the present exemption to the seventh.

We have received from Messrs. Francis E. Abbot and Charles W. Eliot valuable contributions to the discussion of the general question relating to the exemption of property devoted to literary, charitable, and religious uses, and solicit the attention of the Legislature to their papers, given in the Appendix.

Houses of religious worship are public works for the public service. If they ever become used for any other purpose than that of religious worship, while the property thus used becomes taxable under our present laws, it never can be converted to any private emolument. No religious society can sell its house of worship and put its proceeds into the pockets of its members. Having once been consecrated to the public advancement of religion, it can never be alienated from this use. The advantages of having these houses thus employed are, in the eye of the State, somewhat different from the advantages sought by the individuals who thus employ them. To the individual, religion is an end which he seeks for its own sake; but to the State, it is a means to be used for the promotion of its highest interests. The State uses religion and favors its advancement, because it is a means of civilization,—because it helps the State forward in its own line of highest progress. Our own State Constitution aptly expresses this when it declares that "the public worship of God, and instruction in piety, religion, and morality, promote the happiness and prosperity of a people and the security of a republican government."

Institutions of religion are therefore just as properly objects of State favor and patronage as institutions of learning, or any other institutions wherein private property has been alienated from private ends, and has become devoted exclusively to the public welfare. In fact, State favor may more properly be granted to institutions of religion than to any other, since all the prosperity of any State—its culture, its freedom from crime, its social order—will rest ultimately upon the religion of its subjects, and will be perfect in exactly the degree that this religion is perfect and completely prevalent. What religion will do for the next life, or whether there is any future life, or whether religion is anything other than a superstition or delusion,—these are questions which the State properly leaves to the individual judgment and conscience. The State has to do with the present life, and finding here so potent an auxiliary in religion, every State in the history of the world has thus far not only availed itself of religious influences, but has contributed more or less prominently to their support and extension. Our own history offers no exception to this universal rule. The absolute dependence of the State upon Christian influences for the perfect peace, purity, and freedom of its subjects, was not only affirmed by our fathers, in the earliest history of Massachusetts, but has been repeated by their children in every generation to our time. The declaration above quoted from the Massachusetts Bill of Rights illustrates this conviction; and the exemption from taxation, which from the beginning has been accorded in this State to houses of religious worship, is one of its practical consequences.

[Several pages of historical matter are here omitted.]

The foundation which religion furnishes for national prosperity may be seen from the relation which it has always borne to education and public virtue. The course of education among any people will have its direction and character ultimately determined by that people's religious life. The university, which is the mother of the common school, is herself the daughter of the church. The motto upon the seal of Harvard College, "Christo et Ecclesie" (for Christ and the Church), not only indicates the lofty and sacred purpose of its founders, but points us also to the source whence have issued all the streams of modern education. A religious quickening always precedes and gives birth to the intellectual quickening of any people; and where the religious impulse grows weak the intellectual impulse also begins to decline. Judging from the whole history of modern education, we should expect both our common schools and our colleges to decay, if the same religious impulse by which they were undoubtedly produced should not remain to preserve them. "I have always despaired," said the superintendent of schools in Ohio, "of establishing even a good common school, where there was not a working church to sustain it." Not only will the education of any people always be shaped in the long run by their religion, but their practical morality also will never rise higher than their religious faith requires. It is very easy to overlook the actual facts which demonstrate this. Many think that because there is a natural light of reason which reveals virtue, men need only open their eyes to this light in order to shape their conduct accordingly. That this ought to be the case, no one will deny; but the lamentable fact remains otherwise. Men do not do their duty simply because they know what it is. It is only by the love of virtue that men become virtuous; but the sad fact shows itself to every open eye, that the knowledge of virtue does not awaken a love for it in the actual human nature. No matter how pure or lofty it may be, no instruction in morality, if it went no farther than this, has ever sunk deeply into society, nor been able to change widely the action of men. It has never had any power to mould society internally and from the centre. The great forces which move men, by which, when we go to the bottom of it, all changes in individual character, and all revolutions in society are ultimately controlled, are religious forces; and to suppose that these are to be any less potent in the future than they have been, or any less necessary to the State, is not only to close the eye to all the lessons of history, but to be blind to the most obvious truths of human nature itself. Any treatment of Christian churches by a Christian State which would curb their influence, would be just as disastrous to the State as to the Church. "If these churches," said Dr. South, "were not used as preaching places, we should soon need them as prisons."

The only question, therefore, which accords with the spirit prevailing through our whole history, and, we do not doubt, equally so with the temper of our times, is whether the exemption from taxation now granted to houses of religious worship is really favorable to the churches and to the healthiest Christian influence. This question, we think, may be safely left to the churches themselves.

That the system of exemption should be exchanged for a system of bounties, will not long be argued; for why be at the expense and the loss of levying and assessing a tax, only to pay it out again to the same parties from whom it is taken? The advantage of having every appropriation made by the legislature annually scanned by the public, which it is thought this method would secure, does not seem to us very noteworthy, when we consider the small proportion of these exemptions as compared with the taxable property of the State, and the fact that their actual amount is at any time easily ascertainable. From the returns which we have carefully collected, and which will be found in the Appendix, it appears that the property thus exempted is only about one and a half per cent. of the total taxable valuation of the Commonwealth.

That the system of entire, should be exchanged for one of partial, exemptions, by which a religious society should be allowed to hold (in its house of worship) a certain valuation and be taxed for the remainder, is not, in the opinion of the Commission, advisable. From this view one of our number dissents, for reasons given at the close of the report. In the opinion of the Commission this method would be attended with too many practical difficulties to permit its success, even if its success were desirable. Houses and lands have such different values at different places, that to exempt the same sum in all would be neither reasonable nor proportional; while to exempt different sums, on whatever principle these differences should be determined, would lead, in our judgment, to disputes difficult to adjust and impossible to terminate.

The objection that costly churches are not favorable to religion, and that the property which their construction has consumed is thus permitted to escape taxation without any compensating benefit, easily admits of two answers. Without discussing the question of their religious bearing, costly and beautiful temples, as works of art, may have ends of education to subserve sufficiently important and desirable to warrant the expenditure of all that they have cost. It would be a strange utility, even in this age, which should grudge the place which a structure like the Milan Cathedral holds in the midst of a busy city, or which should undertake to estimate in money the worth of the sentiments which its presence is calculated to inspire. In the second place, it is quite unwarranted assumption to claim that the property put into these costly churches escapes the tax-gatherer without furnishing him any return in kind. The taxable property of the neighborhood is augmented thereby to a degree often much greater than the amount which the churches have cost, and if it be a question of exact equivalent, the builders of these churches, instead of being called upon to relieve tax-payers of a part of their burden, might much more justly claim from them a compensation beyond the exemption.

It is not easy to see the force of the difficulty which some persons feel respecting these exemptions on grounds pertaining to conscience. I am conscientiously opposed, one says, to an exemption which goes to the support of any religion; while another objects on the same ground to the exemption which favors some views of religion foreign to his own. But till those who urge these objections are directly and solely responsible for this procedure of the State, we are unable to see how their conscience should be troubled about it. If they disapprove of this procedure, their conscience may constrain them to all proper steps to change it; but here their responsibility ends. If their efforts fail, they will, of course, regret the fact, but the action of the State, still continuing in this direction, will hardly give them any remorse. A man pays his taxes because the State compels him to do so. If the State is wrong in its exactions, she will assuredly, in the long run, suffer for them; but right or wrong, the man pays them without hesitation, unless he chooses to try titles of strength with her. He may feel that he is unjustly oppressed, but as long as this is not his fault, and as long as he has not come to the solemn point where "resistance to tyrants is obedience to God," his conscience ought not to ruffle him because he pays his taxes. For the use to which the State appropriates his taxes he is not responsible. The State uses the taxes it collects in many expenditures which one may think unwise and wrong; but the conscience of a man which allows itself to be put, on this account, as a screen against the payment of taxes, is as different, to say the least, from ordinary consciences, as is the intellect which puts it there different from that of ordinary men. We, at least, fail to understand it.

It should be clearly understood that the only church property now exempted from taxation by our State is "only such houses of religious worship as are owned by a religious society, or held in trust for the use of religious organizations."

If there are any houses of religious worship in the Commonwealth not owned by a religious society, and not held in trust for the use of religious organizations, but owned in a way which would permit them to be legally alienated, so that neither they nor their proceeds could be used for places of religious worship, these houses are clearly taxable by the laws of the Commonwealth existing to-day, and clearly ought to be. There is a broad and clear distinction, quite independent of any question of religious freedom or toleration, between the claims for exemption of the property which is consecrated forever, by our own statutes and courts, to religious uses within our own borders, and that property which might at any time be sold, and the proceeds either be devoted here to other uses than those of worship, or even transported entirely beyond the dominion of the State.

We recommend no change in the present treatment of the eighth of the classes named in the list.

THE QUESTION OF TAX EXEMPTION.

One of the appendices to the report of the Taxation Commission contains two interesting papers on the question of the exemption of churches and literary and charitable organizations, by President Eliot, of Harvard, and Mr. Francis E. Abbot, editor of THE INDEX. These papers give, in a very clear and felicitous way, the strongest arguments which have been urged on both sides of this much-vexed question; and, taken together, they constitute the ablest and most intelligent presentation of the matter we have had. Mr. Abbot's paper has the advantage of brevity, but no one, we are sure, who may read President Eliot's argument, will regret its length. It is impossible for us to present an adequate analysis of either of these papers, within reasonable limits; and we shall attempt nothing more than to outline some of their leading positions.

Mr. Abbot's argument proceeds on the principle that protection is the only just ground of taxation; and, as all just taxes are assessed and collected for protection alone, all expenditures of State funds should be for the same purpose. Exemption is indirect expenditure, and unless it be for the public protection, it is a fraud committed by the State against every tax-payer. The State must to some extent support charities and schools, in order to give the protection which it is organized to secure, and the institutions controlled by the State have a just claim upon the public treasury. As to property used for religious purposes, Mr. Abbot finds no reason why it should receive direct appropriation from the State, or be exempted from taxation. Such exemption he regards as equivalent to a direct subsidy from the State to the Church; and it imposes a heavy burden on some consciences, as it compels citizens to pay tribute to religious societies to which they may be radically opposed. The point at which Mr. Abbot's argument, as it appears to us, is most open to criticism, is in regard to the question as to what measures may justly be classed under the head of protection. This matter he takes no pains to define. If, for instance, schools are necessary to the protection of society, why not colleges, from which the schools are supplied with instructors, and without which they would be greatly deficient in means of culture? If certain charities, such as almshouses and reformatories, are necessary, why not hospitals? And if colleges and hospitals render such substantial benefits to society as to entitle them to exemption from taxation, why may we not exempt the churches, to whose influences we are indebted in a large majority of cases for the establishment of colleges and hospitals, and the propagation of those principles of enlightenment and humanity which underlie such institutions? That is to say, if the influence of a religious faith, of whatever sort, tends, as a rule, to make men better, to supply new motives for virtue, and to contribute to the amelioration of misery and vice, ought not the churches, which thus relieve the State of a large share of its protective work, to be encouraged and assisted by exemption from taxation, especially as no discrimination is made between conflicting sects, and all fare alike? By the "protection of society" something more must be meant than the establishment of police, fire, and sanitary regulations; why may we not include among the effective agencies in that direction the establishment of colleges, hospitals, and churches?

President Eliot's argument is, briefly, that the State needs churches, colleges, and hospitals, and that the cheapest and best way to get them is to encourage benevolent people to provide them by promising not to divert to inferior public uses any part of the income of the money which these benefactors devote to this noblest public use. The function of these institutions is a public one; the capital sunk in them is irrecoverable and unproductive; and if they did not do the work which they do, the State would have to do it, at its own charge. They add to the prosperity of the towns or cities in which they are located, and so increase the amount of taxable property. So far from its being true that their exemption is a burden to the people, there is almost always exhibited an eagerness to secure their location, different communities vying with each other for this purpose. If these institutions undertake to hold property for income or investment, it is taxed on the same terms as any other property. The argument that the presence of exempted institutions, in a town or city, diminishes the amount of taxable property therein is not only incapable of proof, but in the vast majority of cases is manifestly untrue. The enhanced value of contiguous territory, and the benefits, direct and indirect, which spring from these institutions, much more than compensate for their exemption from taxation. These points, and several kindred ones which we have not space to enumerate, President Eliot supports with an array of argument and illustration which, if not conclusive, are so nearly so that it must be difficult to meet them.

These two papers are such interesting contributions to the discussion of the question of tax exemption that we wish they might have a general reading. The matter needs to be examined in all its aspects, and is not to be settled by any easy assumptions. If our consciences are being violated in the way Mr. Abbot suggests, we certainly ought to be awake to the fact. If President Eliot's positions are correct, the exemption of these institutions from taxation is a public benefit rather than a burden. One thing is noticeable; viz., that both the parties to this discussion oppose the theory of limited exemption; Mr. Abbot on the ground that it does not meet the point of conscience involved; and President Eliot for the reason that it would be impossible for a legislature to determine just how much money it was expedient for a church or hospital or college to have, or that if it could acquire this knowledge to-day it would be outgrown to-morrow. There is therefore no compromise possible between the views which Mr. Abbot and President Eliot represent.—Boston Journal, March 4, 1875.

TAX EXEMPTIONS.

The question of the justice and propriety of the usual exemption of the property of churches and literary and charitable organizations from taxation is one that, although not of recent origin, has been more seriously and intelligently discussed in late years than ever before. The practice is common to all, or nearly all, of the States, and has continued for so long that only a very earnest and persistent opposition could now abolish it. Nevertheless, there is undoubtedly a feeling of increasing strength that it is not founded on equitable principles, and that in fairness to the tax-paying masses no property should be released from bearing its proportionate share of the burdens of taxation. In the large cities especially the possessions of the churches and the benevolent institutions have grown to be of very great value, while in the rural districts such property bears an almost equal ratio to the basis of taxation. So long as lands and buildings so owned are not subjected to assessment, it is argued that the property which is taxed has to bear a proportionately increased rate, and it is this apparent injustice which the opponents of the present custom desire to redress. In Massachusetts the problem presented has been exhaustively considered by the Tax Commission of the State, to whose report is appended two interesting papers on opposite sides of the controversy. One is from Mr. Francis E. Abbot, a ready writer and deep thinker on such topics. He is altogether opposed to exemption, except in certain cases hereafter mentioned. His argument is that protection is the only just ground for taxation, and as all just taxes are assessed and collected for the protection and benefit of the public, all expenditures of State funds should be for the same purpose. From this premise Mr. Abbot draws the conclusion that exemption from taxation is indirect expenditure, and, unless it be for the public protection, is a fraud upon the tax-payer. He recognizes that the State must to a certain extent support charities and schools in order to give the protection to society which it is organized to secure, and the institutions controlled by the State have a claim upon the public treasury. But this, as the writer points out, may be admitted without rendering it wise or necessary to exempt the property of charitable organizations composed of private individuals, or that of the Church. As to property used for religious purposes directly, Mr. Abbot not only finds no reason why it should be exempted from taxation, but he also argues against the right of its receiving any appropriation from the State. In either case he regards it as a violation of the great American principle of the separation of Church and State, because it is equivalent to a direct subsidy from the State to the Church. Moreover—and here Mr. Abbot touches on a point which is one of the strongest his side of the question presents—it imposes a heavy burden on some consciences, as it compels citizens to pay tribute to religious societies and denominations of which they are not members, and to whose doctrines they may be radically opposed. This argument is peculiarly attractive to people who live under a republican government; but with the need of colleges, churches, hospitals, and asylums, and considering the benefits which they confer generally, it is one of those apparently incontrovertible theories which are impossible of application in the existing condition of affairs.

The opposite view from Mr. Abbot is ably urged by President Eliot, of Harvard College. The argument of his paper is that, as the State requires churches, colleges, and hospitals, the cheapest and best way to get them is to encourage benevolent people to provide them by promising not to divert to inferior public uses any part of the income of the money which these benefactors devote to this noblest public use. The function of these institutions is a public one; the capital sunk in them is irrecoverable and unproductive, and, if they did not do the work which they do, the State would have to provide for it at its own charge. They add to the prosperity of the towns and cities in which they are located, and so increase the amount of taxable property. So far from its being true that their exemption is a burden to the people, there is almost invariably an eagerness exhibited to secure their location, different communities competing with each other in offering inducements for their location. In Massachusetts, if these institutions undertake to hold property for income or investment, it is taxed on the same terms as any other property. The argument that the presence of exempted institutions in a town or city diminishes the amount of taxable property therein, Prof. Eliot says, is manifestly untrue. The enhanced value of contiguous territory, and the benefits, direct or indirect, which spring from these institutions, much more than compensate for their exemption from taxation. The paper is lengthy, and each of the heads which we have briefly indicated is argued out very fully, and supported with a mass of practical illustration. Prof. Eliot has made an excellent defence of the common usage; but he does not touch upon that really strong point of Mr. Abbot's article to which we have alluded.

It has doubtless occurred to many persons who have revolved the question in their minds that a scale of limited taxation might be applied instead of the present sweeping exemption. Many churches and charitable institutions are perfectly able to pay the assessment which would be made on their property if it were subject to taxation, while others would be swamped by such a load. This solution was suggested in the Massachusetts Commission, and both Prof. Eliot and Mr. Abbot refer to it, but only to repudiate it—Mr. Abbot on the ground that it does not meet the point of conscience involved, and President Eliot because it would be impossible to determine just how much money a church, hospital, or college might have or need, and that, if such knowledge were acquired, it would be speedily outgrown. There is, therefore, no compromise possible between such radically diverse views, but in a public question of this kind the course most frequently taken is the middle one, and for that reason, if a change is ever made from the present custom of general exemption, it will in all probability be through a scaling plan of taxation.—Baltimore American, March 8, 1875.

GOD IN POLITICS.

The recent action of the North Carolina Legislature, published in another column, in expelling one of its members, Mr. J. W. Thorne, a sort of Quaker, on account of his alleged disbelief in the existence of God, along with other historical incidents in the same State, should commend North Carolina as a place of residence to the people who advocate the doctrine generally known as "God in the Constitution," but which might be more accurately defined as "God in Politics." Up to the year 1848 the God in the North Carolina Constitution was not only a Christian God, but also a Protestant God. Under the organic law of the State up to that period, all persons who denied "the truth of the Protestant religion" were excluded from holding office. This provision debarred Catholics and Jews, as well as Deists, Atheists, and Infidels. In the Constitution of 1848 the political notion of Deity was modified, and the new restriction was limited to a general belief in God; this idea was retained in the new Constitution of 1868, which has a clause disqualifying from holding office, "First, all persons who shall deny the being of Almighty God." This general disqualification, however, seems to be subject to the special interpretation of the Legislature; for Mr. Thorne was expelled on the ground of disbelief in the being of Almighty God, though he made the following explicit declaration of faith in his speech before the Legislature: "There is but one living and true God; everlasting, without body, or parts, or passions; of unlimited power, wisdom, and goodness; the maker of all things, visible and invisible." To a layman and non-believer in the doctrine of "God in Politics," this would seem to be a sufficiently strong declaration of belief in Almighty God to warrant a man, otherwise unobjectionable, in holding a seat in the Legislature to which he had been chosen by the suffrages of the people. In addition to this declaration, Mr. Thorne also presented a number of letters showing that he was a member in good standing in the Progressive Order of Friends, a sect of Quakers; that he had been a trustee in the church of that society in Pennsylvania, his former home; and that he was a man of good moral character. But he had written a pamphlet in which he had spoken of the Trinity and Resurrection as mythical or superstitious, and said that he did not regard God as a Being whose chief purpose is to torture mankind after death. He also stated in the presence of the Legislature that, while he believed in God, he did not believe "in all the characterizations attributed to him." Thereupon a member declared that it was clear Thorne did not believe in the "God of our Constitution," and it was on this ground that Mr. Thorne was expelled by a majority vote of the House sitting as an Ecclesiastical Court.

From this instance it is plain that when God is introduced into politics it is necessary to define exactly what kind of a being is intended. It is doubtful whether a Jew, or Unitarian, or even a Universalist, could pass muster in the North Carolina Legislature.

But, suppose some future Legislature shall interpret the attributes of God to be like those believed in by the Quaker Thorne, and expel members who have faith in the Trinity, and who look forward to bodily resurrection. The succeeding majority may be Protestant and Orthodox, and expel Catholics upon alleged idolatry, because they believe in Transubstantiation and the Real Presence in the sacramental bread and wine. The complications likely to grow out of "God in Politics" are countless, and the action of the North Carolina Legislature shows that, whenever the Deity is made a part of a party platform or constitutional project, it is necessary to define his attributes; and it is probable that such a definition would involve a discussion stretching from the Council of Trent to the latest Spiritualistic Convention.—Chicago Tribune.

THE INIQUITY OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The congregation of St. Lawrence's Roman Catholic Church in Eighty-fourth Street, which has been accustomed to the refined preaching of men like Glackmeyer, Beaudevin, Thebaud, Gocklen, Moylan, and Archambaud, was somewhat startled yesterday by a strikingly original sermon on the public schools by the Rev. Father Walker, a very zealous Irish Jesuit priest, recently transferred from the South. Father Walker has a very vigorous, direct way of speaking. There is no mincing matters with him. He talks right out in the very plainest and frankest style; but it is very doubtful whether his style will prove either popular or effective in his present field of labors.

In announcing yesterday that next Sunday's collection would be for the benefit of the parochial schools, he took occasion to denounce the public school system of New York in the most bitter and injudicious manner. "Woe be to the parents," shouted he, in the manner of one hurling anathemas, "woe be to the parents who send their children to these public schools! Woe be to those who secretly favor them in their hearts! I would not like to be in their places on the day of judgment. The public schools are the nurseries of vice. They are Godless schools, and they who send their children to them cannot expect the mercy of God. They ought not to expect the sacraments of the Church in their dying moments. I hope you and I will live to see the day when it will be understood that parents who commit this great sin will be refused the sacraments of the Church. 'What! let them die without the rites of the Church?' you will ask. Yes, I say so. I would as soon administer the sacraments to a dog as to such Catholics. Did not Jesus Christ suffer one of his apostles to die without the rites of the Church in despair? So would I let these wretched Catholics perish. Catholics! They are no Catholics. They are Catholics of the pothouse politician stripe—men who deceive and betray the poor, ignorant, innocent Irish emigrants when they arrive in this country; men who make their poor countrymen, when they are only a few months in this country, perjure themselves to become citizens; men who have no faith or charity in their hearts. You may say, 'Ah, but I know good men and women, good priests and bishops, good fathers and mothers, who were brought up in the public schools.' True, but they are the rare exceptions, one in a thousand or ten thousand. You will say also, 'But some of the teachers are Catholics.' What of it? What do they know about the vice all around them, the contamination and villany? They don't know it; they never see it. But we priests know it. Go look at the water-closets in some of your public schools, and see the vile scribbles and markings on the wall, and you will realize the vice and infamy that prevail at these nurseries of crime. I tell you, Catholics, you do not realize the dangers to your children. The great effort of the enemy of God's Holy Church in these days is to get control of the education of the youth in the hope of thus counteracting the blessed influence of the priests of God. The enemy has abandoned every other effort. Look to it, then, that you fall not a victim to his insidious arts."

The preacher then alluded to the wonderful growth of the Church, and the iniquity of taxing Catholics for the support of schools they did not want and could not send their children to. He said there were six hundred thousand Catholics in this diocese alone. Four hundred thousand more in Brooklyn diocese, and hundreds of thousands more in Albany, Buffalo, and Ogdensburg. If all these banded themselves together valiantly to demand their rights, think you they could fail? No; they could not. They would soon show their strength, and triumph like their fellow Catholics in Ohio.

The remarks of Father Walker made a profound sensation among those who heard them, and opinions differed very much as to the wisdom or soundness of such radical utterances.—New York Herald, March 15.

PRECOCIOUS SAINTS.

PROTRACTED MEETING TO CONVERT SINNERS OF FOUR AND FIVE YEARS OLD—REVIVALIST HAMMOND'S OPERATIONS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The children's revival meeting in Calvary Church was not very extensively attended yesterday morning. The seats in the body of the church were not even filled. Many recent examples of conversion to grace were related by Mr. Hammond and other clergymen. One story was about two young ladies—one a Methodist, the other an Episcopalian—who ten years ago prayed for a young man from Holland. This young man was converted, though he knew nothing of their efforts in his behalf.

A gentleman testified that he had spoken to a large number of youthful persons, not one of whom gave answers to his simple questions, but only cried.

Seventy requests for prayers were sent up. Mr. Hammond read the list. Prayers were asked for the only son of a widow, for an infidel whose wife is a praying woman, a Catholic lady whose eyes are opened—who has left idols to seek the Saviour,—our four boys, a professor of religion who has not the joy of God in her heart, an only brother, a number of Christians who stand aloof from this work, one who does not believe that the Bible is the work of God, a young man who says he cannot pray for himself, a business man—a leading banker in this city,—a young boy who made light of these meetings when asked to attend them, the Mission Sunday-school that all its members may be converted, a little girl out of Christ, a little boy eight years old out of Christ, but whose conversion is looked for every minute.

The Howard Street Methodist Episcopal Church was crowded yesterday afternoon. The audience was composed mainly of adults, with a heavy battalion of children in the front seats. The platform was occupied by prominent ecclesiastical lights of the city.

HALF AN HOUR OF SONG.

The services opened at 3.15 with the song, "When I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies," accompanied by the organ. For nearly half an hour the time was taken up with the vocalization of popular missionary melodies, the principal burden of the refrain being the love of Jesus. During the musical exercises a fresh assortment of covenant cards were brought in and laid upon the platform, and the children greeted their arrival with sparkling eyes. As the singing continued the revivalists warmed to their work. Mr. Hammond strode up and down the platform, emphasizing the staccato portions of the music with a vigorous clapping of the hands and an occasional stamp of the foot, a la G. F. Train.

At the close of the song, "I am weak and weary, and hopeless and deified," Mr. Hammond advanced, and remarked that the Bible taught that we were all sinners, but a love for Jesus would wipe out the stain. As he continued to dwell upon the hopeless state of iniquity into which the human race had fallen, the faces of the innocents upon the front seat, who ranged from five years to twelve, became flushed with recollections of their past depravity, and at times they shrank back at the picture presented them.

The Rev. Dr. Burroughs offered up a prayer, and after another song Dr. Stone took the platform and severely condemned the action of some of the public school-teachers who had attempted to influence the children against the grand work of revival, calling it all nonsense, and that it interfered with their studies. If a teacher did this in an official capacity he should repent before his God in sackcloth and ashes. Dr. Stone concluded by urging upon the children to obtain written permits from their parents to attend the revivals.

The Rev. Dr. Dunn rose and stated that not all of the teachers were to blame in this matter, and he hoped that the Board of Education would not expel the teachers who were disposed to help the revival. [Laughter.]

AN INTERVIEW WITH A SINNER OF SIX.

Mr. Hammond then took the platform and opened by complimenting the children on the quietness which was noticeable throughout the church. Yesterday, said he, a gentleman came on the platform and went up to a little boy of six, whom he took in his arms and said:—

"How old are you, my boy?"

"Six, sir."

"Have you signed the covenant card?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you love Jesus?"

"Yes, sir."

"Why do you love him, dear?"
 "Because he first loved me."
 "Were you a great sinner, pet?"
 "Yes, sir."
 "And you felt very sorry for your sins?"
 "Yes, sir."
 "What sins did you commit?"
 "Sir?"
 "What did you do that was so wicked?"
 "I forget, sir."

You see, dear children, the little boy could not remember all of his sins, but by his intelligent answers showed that he fully understood the great plan of salvation. The children say that they all pray harder now than before the revival. [Laughter.] Why, this same man asked a little shaver of six a number of questions, and if I had trained myself six weeks to answer them I could not have done better.

STORY OF THE LITTLE DUCK.

And there was a little wee bit of a duck, only two days old, and its mother was a hen. As soon as the little duck saw some water it began to toddle along to it just like this. [Here the reverend speaker imitated the waddling of a duck across the stage, amid loud laughter.] Now, children, the little duck knew what was good for him. And now, my dear children, you should take to Jesus like ducks to water.

THE EFFICACY OF CONVERSION.

Some had said that a conversion did not last long; but the fact that ninety-five out of every hundred of the people that he had converted were leading Christian lives to-day ought to be enough to stop the mouths of carpers.

A man once bought a watch, but when he came home to dinner he was three-quarters of an hour behind time, and instead of a nice boiled codfish found nothing but bones on the table, and he found his watch would not go because one of the wheels was bad. Now all it wanted was a new wheel, and all you want is a new heart to make you go right and not be behind time in working for the Lord.

THE LITTLE BOYS AND THE OLD WOMAN.

Two little boys playing marbles in a back alley heard an old woman dying in an attic, and lamenting her dreadful life. One of those boys procured a ladder, and, climbing up, put his mouth to a broken glass, and said, softly, in a silvery voice, "Jesus loves you, and if you love him you will be saved." That old woman died happy, because she thought it was an angel.

THE PRAYERFUL BOY WHO GOT WHIPPED.

Once there was a little boy who prayed so much that it almost drove his father crazy, and the old man said, "If you ever pray again I'll whip you awfully," and that afternoon the boy got off by himself to pray. His father caught him at it, and told him to pack up and leave. But just as little Benny was bidding all his sisters and mother good-by the old man relented, and said, "Pray for me," and now the sweetest music in that household is little Benny's prayers.

THE MAN WITH THE BIG WHIP.

Once a man had a little daughter four years old who was very naughty. So one day he tied her hands together, and taking a big knotted whip lifted it to strike. The little girl screamed with terror, and said, "Papa, this will kill me." Then he said, "If Lucy, your big sister, takes this whipping instead of you, will you love her?" "Yes, I will love her all my life." Now, children, Christ has taken upon himself the punishment of your sins, and you must love him, too.

SIGNING THE COVENANT.

The exercises then closed by the children crowding on the platform and singing, while the newly-converted signed the printed covenant. After considerable more singing and prayer the meeting was dismissed.—San Francisco Chronicle, Feb. 27, 1875.

THE WHOLESALE CONVERSIONS IN RUSSIA.

Tracy Turnerelli writes to the editor of the London Standard: "We live in a wonderful age, and the account the papers are giving us of the conversion in twenty-four hours of fifty thousand Uniates in Poland to Russian Orthodoxy would alone prove it to be so. I happen to know something of these matters myself, having personally assisted, notens volens, at the 'edifying' conversion of about two thousand Tchouvash peasants in the government of Kazan, made Christians, not in twenty-four, but in less than four hours. The Tchouvash—whose customs and religious ceremonies I have described in my work on Kazan—were pagans. The Emperor Nicholas determined to convert these unbelievers to Russian Christianity; so on a given day, a regiment of Cossacks, armed with whips—the governor-general, the high clergy, and other great officials presiding—and a sufficient supply of cannon, muskets, pikes, and bayonets in the rear, the task of 'conversion' began—id est, the task of scourging; and so effectually were these Christian arguments applied, ad hominem, that on bended knees, full of zeal, fervor, and gratitude, the Tchouvash peasants kissed the cross, signed their names with a 'cross,' also; ca va sans dire, and went to their homes with bleeding backs, blessing 'the white tzar' for the benefit done them and heaven. But that I had better not touch on. A few months later, when they had received full instructions in Christian doctrines, I chanced to visit one of the 'converted' Tchouvash Christian villages. A crowd of hirsute Christians of the race were gathered round me. 'You believe in Jesus, God the Son?' said I. 'Oh, yes, master, we do, indeed—indeed, we do,' and the Cossack whips floated before their eyes when they answered my question. 'And in God the Father also?' I inquired. The crowd were puzzled, bewildered, terrified at the answer they had to make. At length one gray-beard, evidently an authority among them, came forward and said gravely and solemnly, 'What, master? Is the old man still alive?' not being able to persuade themselves that the Son could reign even in heaven until the Father had ceased to live and breathe there. This was 'Russian conversion' and 'Russian instruction,' and as these fifty thousand converts will no doubt find a place in history it will be well if the 'methods of conversion' adapted were coupled with it."

A YOUNG GIRL'S MADNESS.

EXCITED ON RELIGIOUS TOPICS, SHE ERECTS A FUNERAL PYRE AND BURNS HERSELF TO DEATH.

HONESDALE, Penn., January 15.—The country around here is greatly excited over the unparalleled affair that has just been brought to light in the case of Crissy Hacker, an intelligent and beautiful young lady, at White's Valley, sixteen miles west of this place, who deliberately burned herself to death on Wednesday, while under the influence of extraordinary religious fanaticism. She was the daughter of William Hacker, a wealthy and prominent farmer of the county. For some five or six years past she has at times been subject to temporary insanity, during which lapses she imagined that she had committed sins against "her Immanuel" which could only be absolved by the making of burnt offerings.

While laboring under this mental hallucination, she would erect altars in the fields of her father's farm, and sacrifice lambs to appease the wrath of her offended Deity, and also burn clothing and household articles of different kinds. Her father (a widower), fearing that she might, during one of these intervals, do herself bodily harm, kept a strict watch on her movements.

On Wednesday Mr. Hacker had occasion to go to a neighboring village, and, as his daughter manifested signs of the recurrence of one of her insane intervals, he charged his hired man to watch her during his absence. At noon the man went to his dinner, leaving the young lady in the kitchen reading the Bible. For some reason he did not return to the house until Mr. Hacker came back, which was about two o'clock.

When the latter entered his kitchen he was paralyzed with horror at the sight that confronted him. On the coals and ashes of what had evidently been one of Miss Hacker's altars, lay the body of his daughter, literally burned to a crisp. The face was the only part not burned. Notwithstanding the intense agony that she must have endured, her features were not distorted in the least, but wore an expression calm and peaceful, her lips being parted in a smile, as if she died believing that through that fiery ordeal she was to pass into a joyful eternity.

It appears that while the hired man was absent Miss Hacker had formed, out of a set of quilting frames, a pyre or altar. On this she had spread some carpet, and made herself a pillow. When found she lay on her right side, with her cheek resting on her hand. Everything seemed to indicate that this was the position she had taken at first, and from which she had not moved. At one side of the altar she had piled up a quantity of combustible wood, and when all was in readiness had fired it, from which the flames soon spread and enveloped the altar.

In the family Bible, which was found open at the book of Job, the following note was found in the handwriting of the deceased:—

DEAR FATHER,—My Immanuel appeared to me to-day. He reveals to me the fact that I have committed the unpardonable sin, which I can only obtain forgiveness for by passing through the cleansing of fire. I will intercede for you, my dear father. You will find my purified body in the northeast corner of the house. I wish to have my ashes buried in my Immanuel's ground, at the northwest corner of the house. Good-by. Meet me on the eternal ground. CRISSY.

Mr. Hacker went to the corner of the house indicated in the note as the spot where the remains were to be buried, and found that his daughter had staked out there a space for her grave.

Martin Prentiss, Esq., summoned a jury who held an inquest on the remains. A verdict in accordance with the above facts was rendered.—Pittsburgh Commercial.

A COMPETENT WITNESS.—"William Look—tell us, William, who made you?"

William, who was considered a fool, screwed up his face, and looked thoughtful and somewhat bewildered, and answered, "Moses, I s'pose."

"That will do," said Counsellor Grey, addressing the Court. "The witness says he supposes Moses made him. That is an intelligent answer; more than I thought him capable of giving, for it shows that he has some faint idea of Scripture. I submit that it is not sufficient to entitle him to be sworn as a witness capable of giving evidence."

"Mr. Judge," said the fool, "may I ax the lawyer a question?"

"Certainly," said the Judge.

"Wal, then, Mr. Lawyer, who d'ye s'pose made you?"

"Aaron, I s'pose," said Counsellor Grey, imitating the witness.

After the mirth had somewhat subsided, the witness drawled out, "Wal, now, we do read in the book that Aaron once made a calf, but who thought the critter had got in here?"

The Judge ordered the man to be sworn.—National Baptist.

Poetry.

LIBERTY.

BY JOHN HAY.

What man is there so bold that he should say,
 "Thus, and thus only, would I have the sea?"
 For whether lying calm and beautiful,
 Clapping the earth in love, and throwing back
 The smile of heaven from waves of amethyst;
 Or whether, freshened by the busy winds,
 It bears the trade and navies of the world
 To ends of use or stern activity;
 Or whether, lashed by tempests, it gives way
 To elemental fury, howls and roars
 At all its rocky barriers, in wild lust
 Of ruin drinks the blood of living things,
 And strews its wrecks o'er leagues of desolate shore;—
 Always it is the sea, and all bow down
 Before its vast and varied majesty.

So all in vain will timorous men essay
 To set the metes and bounds of Liberty;
 For Freedom is its own, eternal law.
 It makes its own conditions, and in storm
 Or calm alike fulfills the unerring Will.
 Let us not, then, despise it when it lies
 Still as a sleeping lion, while a swarm
 Of gnat-like evils hover round its head;
 Nor doubt it when in mad, disjointed times
 It shakes the torch of terror, and its cry
 Shrills o'er the quaking earth, and in the flame
 Of riot and war we see its awful form
 Rise by the scaffold, where the crimson axe
 Rings down its grooves the knell of shuddering kings.
 For always in thine eyes, O Liberty!
 Shines that high light whereby the World is saved;
 And though thou slay us, we will trust in thee!

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 27.

Chas. T. How, $3.20; Chas. Garrison, $3; I. W. Bealey, $2; James Underhill, $1.60; Edwin Bean, $1; N. B. Ruppleye, $1; Geo. B. Nichols, $1; H. B. Martin, $3.20; C. J.
 Hamblen, $1; Ensign & Clifford, $1; D. H. Hale, $1; A.
 L. Chamberlain, 75 cents; Geo. D. Broomell, $1.60; G. L.
 Watson, $3.20; J. Watson, $13.20; W. H. H. Crowell, 80 cents; E. W. Eastman, $1.60; Cornelia Rose, 80 cents;
 Eliz. Butterworth, $3.20; Mary Westphal, $13; S. L. Shaw,
 $2; H. B. Peckham, $3.20; H. P. Nicholson, $3.20; Henry
 Lantz, $1; M. E. Sawyer, $3; C. A. Greenleaf, $10; S. B.
 Clark, 75 cents; J. T. Reid, 75 cents; Simon Ocho, $1.50;
 J. W. Frank, $4.10; E. Stow, 10 cents; M. H. McKay, $1.50;
 Chas. H. Merrill, $3; Edgar Brown, $1.50; H. N. Winslow,
 $1.20; Wm. Campbell, $4; J. W. Bartlett, $23.20; E. J.
 Hamet, $5; Wm. A. Abbot, $3; Mary A. Turner, $2;
 James Jefferson, $3; Hiram W. Moore, $5; F. Melluish,
 $1; E. F. Horton, $3.20; Cash, 50 cents; T. H. Stewart, $1;
 A. J. Davis, $8; G. H. Foster, $2.30; T. H. Callahan, 20 cents; L. F. Gardner, $10; B. F. Chapman, $15; Morris Einstein, $5; Hiram Day, 35 cents; American News Co., $4.85; J. E. Emerson, $2; W. D. Corken, 50 cents; Will.
 Kennedy, $1.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Books.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED TO INQUIRE INTO the Expediency of Revising and Amending the Laws Relating to Taxation and Exemption Therefrom. January, 1875. House Document, No. 15. Boston: Wright & Potter, 1875.

THE GLOBE DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, Etymological, Explanatory, and Pronouncing. Illustrated by 500 Engravings on Wood. Boston: Estes & Lauriat. London and Glasgow: William Collins, Sons & Co.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF MAN. A Course of Elementary Lectures. By A. De Quatrefages. Translated by Eliza A. Youmans. With an Appendix. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875. [Popular Science Library.]

THE SCIENCE OF MUSIC; OR, THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF MUSICAL HARMONY. By Sedley Taylor. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875. [Popular Science Library.]

RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By the author of "Fibrilia and Fibrous Manufactures," etc. Boston: James Campbell, 1875.

THE RAINBOW CREED. A Story of the Times. Boston: William F. Gill & Co. 1875.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

TAXATION OF WOMEN IN MASSACHUSETTS. By William I. Bowditch. Cambridge: Press of John Wilson & Son. 1875.

NORTH CAROLINA IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. The Great Ecclesiastical Trial of J. Williams Thorne, Expelled for Opinion's Sake by the House of Representatives, Feb. 24, 1875. Ridgeway, N.C.: J. Williams Thorne. Price, 25 cents.

CAN CHRISTIANITY BE MADE TO HARMONIZE WITH SCIENCE? An Essay Read before the Liberal League, at Minneapolis, March 7, 1875. By T. D. Hall, of Hudson, Wis. Published by the League.

SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, at St. George's Hall, London.—Religious Enthusiasm: Feb. 7.—Lent and Fasting: Feb. 14.—Comfort and Consolation: Feb. 21.—Importance of Right Opinion in Religion: Feb. 28.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY, for April. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

THE PENN MONTHLY, for April. Philadelphia: 506 Walnut Street.

THE HERALD OF HEALTH, for April. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

THE SANITARIAN, for April. New York: 234 Broadway.

MORTON'S MONTHLY, for March. Louisville: J. P. Morton & Co.

M. ALTMAN & Co.'s PRICE LIST, Containing an accurate and detailed Description of a $250,000 Stock. Address Morris Altman, 301 & 303 Sixth Avenue, New York City.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 1, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), Editorial Contributors.

TO CONTRIBUTORS.—Please do not ask whether your articles will be printed; we cannot tell on receiving them, but must be guided by circumstances. Many more are sent than the paper will hold, and somebody has to be disappointed; but we always mean to print from week to week the best on hand. Also, please do not ask to have the manuscripts returned. Either keep a copy, or do not send at all. Notwithstanding our regularly published rule on this point, we are constantly annoyed by requests to return articles not used. It will be a great favor if occasional contributors will attend to this notice.

It is pleasant to find our contributors appreciated: "What capital and soul-bracing letters," writes a correspondent from California, "are those from Mr. Holyoake!"

THE Moral Education Association hold a meeting next Friday at 3 Tremont Place, at 3 P. M. Paper by Harriet Clisby, M. D., on "Some Thoughts in Connection with Crime."

THE FREQUENT CHANGES of the French ministry distress Aunt Tabitha. She says: "I never had much opinion of them French people anyway, and nothing could save them but good, stated, regular preaching."

THERE WAS at least one amusing circumstance connected with the horrible tragedy at East Boston. A peripatetic agent of the Bible Society is said to have been arrested at one time on suspicion of being Mrs. Bingham's murderer!

PROFESSOR MAX MUELLER is reported as about to leave England for the Continent, in order to make the necessary arrangements for the translation of all the Oriental Bibles into the chief languages of Europe. This herculean task is to be executed by the coöperation of all the great Orientalists, if this can be secured.

THE Joint Special Committee of the Legislature on tax-exemption in Rhode Island have just made their report. They recommend, as a compromise, to tax the land, but not the buildings, of religious, charitable and educational institutions. The Committee held four public hearings, and their report fills nearly three columns of the Providence Morning Star of March 25. We may refer to it again.

THE CHILDREN of California are on the revivalist's gridiron. Rev. Mr. Hammond is at work making Christians of them. At one of his meetings a little girl of eight thanked Jesus for dying a cruel death on the cross for her sake. Another of seven thanked God for giving her a new heart. And another of five thanked Jesus for wearing a crown of thorns for her. There ought to be a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Little Innocents.

A VENERABLE friend in Maryland inquires what is meant by the "personality of God." There are a great many meanings of that phrase. Some mean by it the possession of a form like that of man, which can be conceived by the imagination; and, when they think of God, they perhaps unconsciously picture to themselves a majestic figure as "the Father." Others mean by it simply the possession of moral and intellectual attributes, without forming any imaginative conception at all. Everything depends on what is meant by the word "person" as applied to man, and the degree of analogy supposed to exist between man and the Sole Power of the universe. In our reply to Mr. Savage we did not presume to define what Unitarians understand by the word; we only pointed out that they expect a professed belief in that doctrine in some sense from all their ministers.

REFERRING to Mr. Potter's recent discourses on "Some Aspects of Unitarianism," the Golden Age says: "The ism must be distinguished from its organizations, and all that was ever true and vital in Unitarian principles remains intact, and has not been cancelled by the timidity or narrowness of sectarian managers." There is a curious fallacy in all such reasoning as this. What are "Unitarian principles" but the principles of Unitarian "organizations"? Either individuals or organizations must decide what the "ism" is: which shall it be, good Golden Age? We take the ground that Unitarian organizations, by their collective votes, define Unitarianism; and that Christian organizations, by their collective votes, define Christianity. Does the Golden Age really mean to say that any man can set aside these votes, and in their stead impose his personal views upon the denomination or the world as the veritable "ism"? What is true is one thing: what is Unitarian is quite another. It is a violation of good sense to declare that the denominational belief is anything else than what the denomination itself, as such, affirms it to be. The sect alone defines the ism; the individual members of it are guilty of great presumption, if they individually put forward their irresponsible views as its true definition.

CASES of encroachment on religious liberty in this country are multiplying with disturbing rapidity. A witness has lately been denied the right to testify in the courts of New York City,—a member of the legislature has been summarily ejected in North Carolina,—and now, as described by Professor L. in another column, an applicant has just been refused his naturalization papers in Philadelphia,—all because of religious opinions. Such cases are continually occurring, these being only illustrations that are fresh in our memory; and yet radicals see "no use" in the Liberal League. How much longer are they to be publicly trampled on before they betray their discomfort? Or don't they care unless the insult and outrage are inflicted upon each and every individual radical in the country? If a British subject is insulted anywhere, the whole empire flames with wrath, and reparation is exacted forthwith. Would that American free-thinkers had a spark of the same spirit! We are thoroughly mortified that such things as these can happen, while yet the indignities insolently put upon the rights of free thought call forth no determination to protect these rights by some general measure. Yes, radicals, we are shamed by your tame, mean-spirited indifference, when your reply to one such outrage ought to be a thousand Liberal Leagues, starting up like Roderick Dhu's clansmen from the heather.

THE New York Herald recently reported a sermon delivered in that city by Rev. Father Walker, of the St. Lawrence's Roman Catholic Church in Eighty-fourth Street. He is said to be a very zealous Irish Jesuit priest, recently transferred from the South. In announcing that a collection would be taken for the benefit of the parochial schools, he burst into a tirade on the public school system of New York. "Woe," said he, "woe be to the parents who send their children to these public schools! Woe be to those who secretly favor them in their hearts! I would not like to be in their places on the day of Judgment. The public schools are the nurseries of vice. They are Godless schools, and they who send their children to them cannot expect the mercy of God. They ought not to expect the sacraments of the church in their dying moments. I hope you and I will live to see the day when it will be understood that parents who commit this great sin will be refused the sacraments of the church. 'What! let them die without the rites of the church?' you will ask. Yes, I say so. I would as soon administer the sacraments to a dog as to such Catholics." "And so this fanatical preacher went on at length, winding up with the boast that the Catholics in the State of New York were strong enough, if valiantly banded together, to control the public school system, or to be relieved from taxation for its support." Shall the State continue to exempt from taxation the rapidly accumulating possessions of a church which is determined, if possible, to keep the people in ignorance in order to assure its own control over them? No doubt, Father Walker is conscientious; but when the conscience for despotism prompts direct assaults on the only safeguards of republican institutions, the conscience for liberty can make no compromise with it. One or the other must go to the wall. The Catholic only asserts the right to govern us all! Shall tenderness for his "conscience" cause us to submit, and become his obedient servants? That is the whole question in a nutshell.

THE TAXATION COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.

The "Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the expediency of revising and amending the laws of the State relating to taxation and the exemptions therefrom" was published a few weeks ago, as a bulky volume of 577 pages; but so great was the demand for copies that we have been unable to obtain one till very recently. The Commission was authorized by a Resolve of the last Legislature passed June 18, 1874; and under it Messrs. Hills, Seelye, and Barker were appointed commissioners by the Governor and Council on July 22. Liberal extracts from their Report, bearing on the question of exempting from taxation property used for educational, charitable, and religious purposes, will be found on preceding pages of this number of THE INDEX. The majority of the Commissioners recommend that the existing exemptions be continued; while Mr. Hills made a minority report recommending that the property of literary and charitable corporations be taxed in certain cases above a fixed amount, and that "exemption from taxation for any house of religious worship be limited to twenty-five thousand dollars." We propose to consider at present some of the chief arguments of the majority Report in favor of continued exemption.

1. The grounds of the State's right to tax its citizens asserted by the Report are not those of the Constitution of the State. The Constitution requires the Legislature to impose taxes "for the public service, in the necessary defence and support of the government of the said Commonwealth, and the protection and preservation of the subjects thereof." [Art. IV., §1, ch. 1.] By this provision the sole object of taxation is to protect and preserve the citizens, and, as a means to this end, to defend and support the government which protects them. Again, the same principle is laid down with even greater explicitness in Article X., which derives the citizen's obligation to pay taxes to the State from his right to be "protected by it in the enjoyment of his life, liberty, and property." Nothing could be more unequivocal; nothing could be more necessary, in order to prevent the most grievous oppression and tyranny. Yet the Report declares that "taxation is not a payment to society for certain social privileges and immunities, but it is the enforcement of the right, and the fulfilment of the obligation, revealed in the very existence of the State and its subjects." What is this "right"? What is this "obligation"? The very next sentence of the Report explains: "This involves the righteous surrender or subjection of the individual will to the will of the community. When this self-surrender is free and complete, there is nothing more to be desired, either on the part of the individual or the State." To such desperate shifts are the defenders of tax-exemption driven! Individual liberty and individual rights as against the State must all be swept away, to avoid admitting the justice of the demand for the cessation of this great wrong. It is not necessary to do more than point out the flat contradiction given to the State Constitution by the Report; surely there is enough sagacity in the Legislature and the public to comprehend the audacious sophistry by which the most despotic principles are thus invoked to bolster up a self-evident violation of the fundamental liberties of the citizen. It is the Christian Amendment movement, of which Commissioner Seelye is a well-known advocate, which has captured the Report, and ventured to deny openly the first principles of republican institutions. That the State is nothing but a permanent corporation, whose rights are strictly limited, and which has no right whatever to levy taxes except in return for protective services rendered to its members, is a truth completely recognized by the Constitution; and there is no need to comment further on the glaring denial of it by the Report.

2. But not only is the Report in direct contradiction of the State Constitution as to the grounds of the State's right to tax; it is also in direct contradiction of itself as to the State's relation to religion. "State favor may more properly be granted to institutions of religion than to any other, since all the prosperity of any State—its culture, its freedom from crime, its social order—will rest ultimately upon the religion of its subjects, and will be perfect in exactly the degree that this religion is perfect and completely prevalent. What religion will do for the next life, or whether there is any future life, or whether religion is anything other than a superstition or delusion,—these are questions which the State properly leaves to the individual judgment and conscience." Now these two successive sentences flatly contradict each other. The first sentence declares that all social order rests on religion, and depends on the perfection and complete prevalence of it; and it infers correctly enough from these premises that the State must favor and support religious institutions. Very well; those are the premises of the Roman Catholic Church, and justify the absolute control of the State by the Church. But the second sentence declares, with astonishing unconsciousness and coolness, that the State has nothing to do with religion—does not even care whether it is all a superstition or not—and leaves it wholly to the individual! Very well; those are the premises of Free Religion, and demand the absolute separation of Church and State. Was ever a contradiction more patent? Because the State cannot possibly get along without religion, it is argued that the State has nothing to do with religion! It is idle to attempt to reply to such reasoning as this; a general smile is its merited response.

3. From the assumed principle that religion is necessary to the State, the Report innocently argues that "any treatment of Christian churches by a Christian State which would curb their influence would be just as disastrous to the State as to the Church." Hence it justifies exempting them from taxation. But religion is not synonymous with Christianity; and nothing would follow from such arguments but the conclusion that Christianity is the Established Religion of Massachusetts. Are the people prepared to admit that Massachusetts has an Established Religion, or an Established Church, which is precisely the same thing? Yet that is exactly what church-exemption means, so far as it goes. Our whole history has been a continual curtailment of the peculiar privileges claimed by the Church from the State; and the process has not yet come to an end.

4. In one point we are satisfied with the Report. It rejects the idea of a compromise by which a minimum amount of church property should be exempted from taxation, and the rest taxed. Mr. Hills favors such a compromise, which would equally violate both of the opposing principles and complicate the whole question. Let things be as they are till the people are ripe for a thorough reform in this matter. The original movers for the repeal of church exemption are actuated by a regard for principle; and the principle they stand for is one already recognized and adopted in substance by the people of the State in 1833. All they want now is a more consistent application of this principle; and they deprecate above all else the miserable device of a compromise like Mr. Hills', which would satisfy nobody. Sooner or later the abolition of all church exemption in this country must come, and it had better come now. Why make two bites of a cherry?

5. There is something melancholy in the manner in which the Report treats the whole subject of conscientious objections to the practice of supporting the churches by indirect taxation of the whole community. The objectors are not responsible for what they cannot help,—therefore the Commissioners "are unable to see how their conscience should be troubled about it." Well, it is not necessary that they should see; the fact is not changed by their blindness. But they would see with great celerity, if the case should be reversed—if the Catholics should get control of the State and tax these comfortable Commissioners for the support of the Catholic Church, or if some inconsistent free-thinkers should get control of the State and tax the Commissioners for the support of Atheistic Institutes. The scales would immediately fall from their eyes. Is it no injustice to exact taxes for the propagation of religious opinions which are offensive and false in the judgment of those who pay the taxes? Have we no consciousness of wrongs done to us as well as of wrongs done by us? Does not conscience protest against anything but its own sins? Has it no protest against injustice perpetrated against itself? The history of Massachusetts proves that the people have not been so insensible to the rights of conscience as their Commissioners now are; the abolition of direct taxation for church-support in 1833 was but one of a long series of measures designed to relieve conscience from the unnecessary and felt weight of public injustice in these very respects. It remains to be seen whether the people have become as callous as their Commissioners to the appeals of protesting consciences. Sooner or later, the movement of 1833 will be carried forward to its logical completion by abolishing all forms of compulsory church-support; and we hope to live to see that day, despite the disappointing Report now rendered to the Massachusetts Legislature by Commissioners who think it very unreasonable that any one should have a conscience not precisely like their own.

LITERATURE AND BELIEF.

We cannot be too thankful, I think, that the tendency to scientific studies has prevailed so largely in these modern times; since the result is that our minds have been recalled from the realm of mere speculation and fancy, and brought down to the terra firma of those solid facts and substantial realities which it is the ambition of science to present to us. We too long, perhaps, had been soaring on pinions in the upper air of imagination, dreaming all sorts of wild dreams, believing anything and everything we wanted to, and having our heads turned with whatever kind of superstition that came along; and no doubt we needed the wholesome experience of being landed on our two feet, and made to use our prosy legs for a while as our only means of locomotion. One fact, I suppose, is worth for all practical purposes more than fifty fancies, and in this everyday world knowing is a surer way of getting along than guessing. So that, for one, I am heartily rejoiced that the literature of science is as abundant in these latter days as it is; that scientific studies are being more and more elevated to a place of importance in our schools; that science is being popularized for the million by so many able writers and scholars of true scientific renown; and that the thought of the people is becoming so discriminating between fact and fiction, appearance and reality, truth and error. Mill and Spencer, Darwin and Huxley, Tyndall and Maudsley, Agassiz and Youmans are glorious benefactors of their race; and long may and must their memories be green and dear in the minds and hearts of all who have read and been instructed by them!

Nevertheless, though I give in to no man in the degree of gratitude which I feel for what the literature of science has done for us,—in respect of clarifying, pruning, and strengthening the belief of our time,—I yet am decidedly of the opinion that one may too exclusively devote himself to scientific reading and study, to the extent of hardening and stiffening his mind in one direction, drying up other sources of instruction to be found in his own being, and narrowing his whole view of the truth of things in general.

The old Scripture has it, that "as a man thinketh so is he." With as much correctness may it be said, that as a man readeth so he thinketh. The literature which a man reads inevitably colors and moulds his thought; and if that literature be of one kind only, then his thought flows but in one channel, and is stamped with but one characteristic. The broad reader is the broad thinker. He who pursues a liberal and varied course of reading cannot well be narrow and dogmatic in his thinking. Our minds need more than one kind of diet in order that they may preserve a healthy tone and appetite. That culture is wisest and best which provides for the education, not of one faculty of our being only, but for all; which allows the reasoning powers and the imagination, the intellect and the emotions, the head and the heart to have equal scope and play, well-proportioned use and opportunity.

It is a danger to which radicals and free-thinkers especially are liable, when they break away from the authority of Church and Bible, and launch out into untrammelled thought, that they betake themselves solely to that kind of literature which feeds the logical faculties of the mind, and sets in motion the keenest powers of reasoning. They have an appetite for scientific studies sharpened by long denial; and hence they almost invariably become mere devourers of scientific books, constant and insatiable pillagers in the realms of physics and logic. They are almost incensed at the man who ventures to suggest that there are some books worth reading other than those bearing the names of well-known writers in science; and it is quite as much as they can do to refrain from calling him a fool, who spends a little portion of his short time on the earth wandering in the beautiful fields of poetry and romance, and culling gems from writers on art, history, philosophy, and religion. Such radical colts who take the bit between their teeth, and refuse to be directed any whither but to an investigation into the facts of the external world, or to partake of any fodder but such as is cut up in some scientific treatise, are pretty sure to fetch up in bald atheism and materialism; since, from looking so long and hard at things only, they somehow appear to lose the power of deep insight into the soul of things. They forget that there is some real truth and beauty still remaining in what they have left behind them,—even in the grand old forms and litanies of the Church, the psalms and prophecies and beatitudes of the Bible; appealing, as these all somewhat do, to the æsthetic and religious emotions of man.

No one is whole-minded or whole-hearted, no one is thoroughly sane throughout, who does not nicely balance himself between all the powers, faculties, and wants of his nature; who does not look within as well as without for his knowledge; who does not put his ear close to the ages to hear the complete story of the upward and onward struggle of man for self-expression—close to Nature to hear the full articulate word of God, as it is uttered in things visible and invisible. We need to cultivate an acquaintance with the prophets and seers, no less than the scientists and savans of the world. We need to read that literature which speaks or sings the language of the heart, as well as that which formulates the logic of the head. Our culture is incomplete and one-sided, if it leave out such writers as Carlyle and Emerson, Shakspeare and Wordsworth, and include only such as Darwin and Spencer, Mill and Lewes.

There would be fewer atheists and materialists, I think, if all radicals would take counsel somewhat of the inner as well as the outer voices of the world. It would be hard, indeed, for any man to be either atheist or materialist, when his soul were filled with the resonant meaning of such poems as Wordsworth's "Ode on Immortality" and Tennyson's "In Memoriam." For who will be so foolish as to scorn even a feather's weight in any real deliverance of our being, when he comes to make up his conclusion about the deepest problems of the hour? A. W. S.

A POINT OF GOOD MANNERS.

This broad hint is contained in the Christian Register of March 20:—

"The American Unitarian Association has decided that persons who wish to be released from the responsibility of being life-members of that body can have their names taken from the list by making their wishes known. Probably Bishop Huntington, F. E. Abbot, and G. H. Hepworth will be equally ready to avail themselves of this way of escape from a false position."

Let us have a clear understanding on this point. In 1868 we publicly announced our withdrawal from the Unitarian denomination, formally notified the Secretary of the American Unitarian Association of the fact in person, and requested him to strike our name from the Year Book denominational register. By this we intended to withdraw from connection with all Unitarian organizations, so far as any action of ours could accomplish it; and this was perfectly understood at the time by all concerned. Nobody has ventured until now to intimate even by innuendo that we had any "false position" to "escape" from; and we consider the above intimation a most extraordinarily cool one.

It is true that, without so much as consulting us on the subject, we had previously been made a life-member of the Association by a college classmate and friend, who paid thirty dollars to them for the purpose. But we know of nothing in the constitution or by-laws of any association which provides for a dissolution of such life-membership; and there are obligations of delicate courtesy in the case which no gentleman would disregard. We should not dream for an instant of availing ourselves of any rights or privileges which membership may be supposed to confer; we disown emphatically all obligations or "responsibilities" which it may be supposed to entail; the membership is a merely technical connection which means absolutely nothing, and carries absolutely nothing with it.

But this year, for the first time, the Association have published a list of their life-members; and they may possibly be disconcerted that the above names should be even technically entitled to a place in their list. This is their own affair, not ours. It may be that they have so amended their constitution as to provide for the dissolution of life-membership connections, though the above is the first suggestion of it that has reached our notice. But it is to be presumed that the officers of the Association have a sufficient knowledge of good manners to notify directly those who may be affected by their action; and in the absence of such notice we shall pay them the compliment of considering the above slur to be a piece of newspaper impertinence for which they are not responsible, and which would be acted upon only by one quite ignorant of the proprieties of the case. We are willing to take it for granted that, if they are themselves uneasy at the continuance of our merely technical life-membership, they will have courage enough to say so, and honestly enough to refund the money to the gentleman who paid it. It would be the height of discourtesy towards him for us to do anything in the premises. But we shall be extremely happy to gratify the apparent "wishes" of the Association in any way which he and they can mutually agree upon. Meanwhile we shall take no further notice of the matter until we have been properly and respectfully notified of any action they have taken or may propose to take.

FREE-THOUGHT NOTES.

BY A VETERAN ENGLISH FREE-THINKER.

MR. EDITOR:—

As a rule, we English people do not wonder. Wonder solves no difficulties, adds little to our information, is rather a waste of time; and, therefore, being a practical and business people, we are very little engaged in wonder. But I, not being a wholly practical person, do wonder; and what I wonder at is the scant and precarious support rendered by friends of free-thought to the advocacy of their principles, as compared with that the advocates of superstition can command. The reason, no doubt, is that the immediate value and importance of secular interests are not seen. The belief that supernatural agencies are to be propitiated by gifts to the churches has much to do with it. When it comes to be understood that the unknown powers which surround this world are to be propitiated, not by gifts for their use who need them not, but by the service to humanity in which they take, or must be assumed to take, generous interest, the case will be very different. Then men will give to whatever things are calculated to advance human progress. Giving for such purposes will be a well-understood policy of self-defence. When life becomes uncertain, the most parsimonious will pay liberally the ablest physician who may restore. When men come to see that science is the only available providence of man,—that free-thought is the source of all our improvements,—that truth is the only position that can save us and give us dignity and power,—they will regard the cost of it as the best investment they can make. Men have never been moved by convictions as to unseen things as they will be, when they come to discern the influence of a real life. What passion, what fervor, what picturesque language, what boldness and ardor, what dramatic conceptions, what fiery exultations, will one day animate pulpit and platform, when the day in the belief of realities succeeds to the fluctuating and uncertain, though powerful, belief in unseen things!

It is quite ludicrous the way in which free-thought papers are commonly supported. Mere pride should, if common sense did not, dictate that they should be well sustained. A mere steam-engine won't go, unless the stoker pays it due attention. Men who keep horses or hounds know that the best work cannot be got out of them, unless the best kind of sustentation is put into them. The old slave-owner fed his slaves from policy, if he did not do it from humanity. A wise English manufacturer, when lately asked why he gave higher wages to his men than his neighbor, answered: "I cannot afford to pay them badly." It is wonderful that the same thing does not occur to those who desire a free-thought advocacy to be maintained in their defence. It would pay them better to compensate well than poorly those who represent their interest. If I read a paper at a scientific society, it would be upon the "Influence of Diet upon Style." Let any reader observe the quality of the editorial style at Christmas time in England, and he will find much better composition proceeds from tables well supplied with partridge and grouse. It is an abstract literary fact that articles produced under such inspiration have a choice, succulent, and excellent flavor. Most readers know well enough what a lean, insipid, consumptive style, with no flesh upon the bones of its sentences, is that which proceeds from ill-supplied trenchers. It is clear that the partridge-style is quite the contrary, and their ratiocination of pheasant and grouse is a most conclusive reasoning to be found at Christmas time. Indeed, then may be seen sentences excellently rounded by turkey and geese of good substance. I believe I could tell the rate of payment the editorial chest was able to make, by an examination of the style of the contributors, the subjects they write upon, their order of thought, the alacrity or heaviness of the movements of their minds, the character of their smiles, the fulness or exhaustiveness of their treatment; all have their pecuniary sign about them, which no ardor can evade, no generosity conceal, no philosophy efface.

When I was engaged in conducting the Fleet-Street House, the business and propagandism of which I spoke came under my notice in many ways; but the relation between means and service was a very obvious one, though much overlooked. On one occasion I remember saying: "It seems desirable that those who engage in Publicism should accept for such services the smallest amount necessary to enable them efficiently to discharge their duties—to educate their children—and keep themselves free from private debts. Where this cannot be afforded, they must of necessity seek such income by some other profession; and where adequate means are denied, they have a right to seek the indispensable means of good citizenship elsewhere. For it is not good in ordinary cases to die with the reputation of having taken such great care of all mankind, that family and creditors have been left to take care of themselves."

At first there was difficulty in getting our new organization to work. Some friends unintentionally, and, of course, opponents wilfully, frustrated it. Deficiency of funds compelled such incessant labor to supply them, by personal efforts of the conductors, that there was no time for proper explanations of the nature of the work being attempted; and in the absence of such explanation many withdrew all aid, and some misconstrued the objects and discouraged others. Some, looking at the completeness of the arrangements, withheld aid, thinking none wanted: others, knowing how much the cost exceeded any possible returns for a long period, declined to help, believing the whole must break down. Others who had asked loudly for respectability of position, that their cause might stand proudly by the side of that of the priest, denounced the position when attained as a "compromise" of principle. It was in the midst of this cross-fire, kept up during three years by enemies within and enemies without, that the work of construction was carried on. Actual contest with the actual enemy was a far lighter task than combating with the misapprehensions which in democratic societies arise, or are sown, in the minds of friends. Mazzini, notwithstanding his incorruptible life and perilous devotion to his country, was subjected to them. Kossuth, who, if he had had but a thousandth part of the insincerity imputed to him, might have worn a ducal coronet, had to encounter them. Who, then, can hope to escape? The Church, Established and Dissenting, which has no habit of republican publicity, and conceals all it can, has something to complain of in this way as well as free-thinkers. Sir Walter Scott, in Old Mortality, tells an instructive story of the heroic days of the Old Covenanters. While Morton, at the peril of his head, was negotiating recognition and safety for the Puritan party, and shedding his blood in their defence, they were plotting against him as a traitor and coward. The selfish and ambitious Burley was preferred before him. The impractical lunatic Macbriar was believed against him, and the mad Mucklewrath had sufficient credit to sentence him to death. In the hour of mortal struggle they leave him on the field of battle, unsupported against the common enemy, and retire themselves, under the burden of their virtues and jealousies, to dispute on trifles, and calumniate in safety. This is the experience of many popular movements. Men who do nothing but stand aloof and make imputations get credit, and those who take the place of peril and do the work sometimes die under suspicions. But there are no serious discouragements in these contingencies. There are always enough honest and sensible men in every just party to sustain it, who are above personal envy or distrust—who act only upon the facts of the case—whose confident, frank service will sooner or later win: and the good opinion of such is the highest reward of life. And if in the battle of Democracy you miss this, no matter, if you have done your duty.

There are some current topics among us for which I have not left myself space to treat; but you have an able correspondent who will doubtless include them in his "London Letter." Mr. Gladstone has published another remarkable book on the "Vatican Decrees." Mrs. Girling still troubles us; and we have now a George Francis Train of our own. Dr. Kenealy, who has got himself elected member for Stoke, is a perfect monster of egotism. He publishes Prayers and Devotional Songs, and abounds in more vicious Billingsgate than any other public man of the day. He came into the House of Commons like the Sairey Gamp of Stoke, depositing a fat umbrella on the Speaker's table. In your country the Irish are very angry with England, and say bitter and offensive things against us; whereas we in England treat the Irish with Imperial distinction. We give up the Chartist agitation to them; and no sooner does an Irish candidate appear for any constituency than we go mad to elect him. Had Dr. Kenealy not been an Irishman, he would not now be member for Stoke.

Very faithfully yours,

GEO. JACOB HOLYOAKE.

{ NEWCASTLE CHAMBERS, 22 Essex St.,
{ Temple Bar, London, Feb. 28, 1875.

Literary Notices.

HIGGINSON'S "CHILD'S HISTORY."

This history, recently published, marks an epoch in the manner and matter of American historical reading and study for the future.

It heaps in one vast funeral pile the names and dates of hundreds of discoveries, settlements, battles, and military heroes; and the writer spreads the pages, which these dry facts have hitherto monopolized, with poetic descriptions of daily living, striking characteristics of men and women, romantic accounts of early settlers, scientific speculations of their origin, and instructive talks concerning the causes of war, the justice or injustice of nations, and the beauties of peace. Perhaps the time has only just arrived, when this sifting of facts and mere statistics should begin. Perhaps two hundred and fifty years were necessary in which to hold these records of dates and names up before the people. Be that as it may, their day of parade has set. The masterly pen of this writer has bowed them out, and ushered them with great reverence into quiet corners of museums, where they will repose for coming ages with other antiquated relics.

No one knows at what date Homer recited his Greek histories, nor how much besprinkled with dates they were. We only know that dates had vanished before the Iliad and Odyssey were immortalized in written language; and it is probable that it took many centuries to clear them of this rubbish. Surely, it would seem ridiculous to-day to read the date of Patroclus' death, or the year of Hector's funeral; and the Iliad would not have one reader where it now has a hundred, were it thus encumbered.

So, I think, we should all be glad to bid adieu to these temporary necessities which have been outgrown; and I am sure the boys and girls of America will rejoice, and shout glad tidings of great joy!

Sufficient names and dates are preserved, to secure to the reader a clear and definite thread of connected narrative; and, whenever a date appears, it comes in so naturally that the memory grasps and retains it unconsciously, and without any apparent effort.

The first three chapters of the book—"The Earliest Inhabitants," "The Mound-Builders," and "The American Indians"—contain not a single date. But how they glow with information and picturesque description! How they tempt the school-children into scientific speculation, and fire their curiosity to plunge into further research! The style is strong and dignified, yet so simple that it explains itself without any interpreter. Take, for instance, the chapter on Delaware. How such a sentence as this wins the heart of a boy: "It happened once that an Englishman," etc. At once he takes the author's hand, and walks into the compact account of the Swedes' settlement of this territory, with eager delight; and, when he has passed through the chapter, he can state what he has seen and heard.

The landing of the Pilgrims, and their early life in the colonies, is as fascinating as a fairy tale. On one page is an engraving of a Meeting-House, which the pioneers are entering with their muskets on their shoulders. Then follows a vivid description of the church-going customs: "The old men sit together in one part of the church, and the women in another; the boys on the pulpit-stairs and gallery, with a constable to guard them." We not only visit them in church, but at home: "If we should see the people occupying their houses, we should find the men wearing jerkins, small-clothes, ruffs around their necks, and, when in the open air, short cloaks. We should find the young women wearing plain homespun clothing when about their work, but appearing on Sunday in silk hoods, lace neckerchiefs, slashed sleeves, and embroidered hats." Washington, as he takes command of his army, is "dressed in a blue coat with buff facings, buff small-clothes, an epaulet on each shoulder, and a black cockade in his hat."

Still farther on, we are introduced to the habits of society, when Washington was President. He "held levees, or receptions, once a fortnight, in his own house. At precisely three in the afternoon, the doors of the great dining-room were thrown open; and the guests who were admitted saw the President standing before the fireplace, with members of his cabinet or other eminent men around him. On these occasions he was usually dressed in black velvet, with white or pearl-colored waistcoat, yellow gloves, and silver knee-buckles and shoe-buckles. His hair was powdered, and gathered into a small bag behind."

Laws and religions that were tyrannical and illiberal are very wisely exposed, by being stated in a clear and truthful manner, with very little moralizing from the pen of the writer. In fact, the entire history seems free from personal prejudice. Facts are foremost, and the author at all times is behind the scenes, an animated and enthusiastic student and observer with his readers. He says: "The laws of the Puritans were in many ways more severe than wise, as we should now think." "Those who had done wrong were often publicly whipped; . . . a woman who scolded her family might be silenced by a cleft stick applied to her tongue, or by being ducked in water." The Quakers "were whipped publicly through the streets, and four of them hanged on Boston Common. All this was very wrong and cruel; but we must remember that such severity was the practice of those days in most countries, and that men had not learned to tolerate freedom of opinion in one another. Indeed, they have not entirely learned it even now."

The French and Indian war—which is a severe tax to a child's constitution in most histories, and probably has helped to ruin more intellects than it ever helped to create—is treated in a remarkably pleasant and interesting manner. A fine illustration of Washington fording the Ohio River, on his way to treat with the French, induces the boys to pursue the journey with him and find out what it is all about. The cause of the war is told them in a single sentence, as plain as a, b, c. The French, Indians, and Colonists all move on through the taking of forts, the massacre of families, and capture of Quebec, like some grand panoramic scene. Instead of a bomb-shell, a beautiful little poetic gem is thrown in here: "As Wolfe rowed along in his boat, he spoke to his officers of Gray's Elegy in a Country Church-Yard, and said that he would rather have written that poem than taken Quebec." Then follows a stanza from this poem.

A wonderful spirit of charity and good-heartedness tones all the pages. There is no brandishing of clubs in the faces of the British because of the Revolutionary War, or rapping the Southerners on account of the Civil War. "There were some reasons why it seemed just that the Americans should be taxed. The debt of the British government was very great, and part of this debt had been incurred in defending the American colonies from the French and Indians." The origin of slavery, its growth and final overthrow, are powerfully told. As the events of this rebellion appear and disappear in the pages of the history, they are never forgotten; but the mind recalls them by force of the strong feeling in which each one is related.

I believe no history ever has suggested before that suffrage for woman has any claim upon the attention of the world. But the justice that inspires this author compels him to look over the entire field of human rights, and not lift his pen till the whole truth has been told. "There are many questions that are important, or claimed as important,—currency reform, civil service reform, revenue reform, woman suffrage, the rights of labor, and matters pertaining to temperance, education, and religion. It is impossible to see just what shape these questions may take in the future; which of them will prove most prominent, or which will lead to lasting reforms."

The book closes with a list of over two hundred different works, that the author advises to be read or consulted in reference to the history of our country; works not only of history, but of poetry and fiction.

It is to be hoped that this valuable book will be introduced speedily into our schools; but, meantime, we are sure it is being introduced into the heads and hearts, not only of children, but of readers everywhere, as fast as it comes within their reach. L. S. H.

Communications.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY PLATFORM.

1. No sectarian teaching in public schools.
2. No Sabbath laws.
3. No chaplains of legislatures or other public institutions.
4. No incorporation of sectarian institutions.
5. All clauses in private contracts granting temporal advantages on sectarian conditions to be null and void in the eyes of the law.
6. All property at present owned by sectarian societies to become, on a day to be fixed by law, the absolute civil property of the members of each such society, irrespective of religious conditions.

[The Constitution of the United States provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." As shown in our proposed "Religious Freedom Amendment," we favor the extension of this restriction to the separate States. We do not see the justice of discriminating against religious corporations, or forbidding them as such to hold property. Is not that "prohibiting the free exercise" of religion? When no special privilege is granted to religious corporations, we shall be satisfied, because that seems to be all that justice demands; and we mean to stop scrupulously where justice stops. Perhaps Bishop Ferrette will explain the grounds on which he bases this apparently invidious prohibition to religious corporations of rights and privileges universally conceded to all other corporations.—Ed.]

NATURALIZATION REFUSED ON THE GROUND OF "INFIDELITY."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—The championship for "Liberty and Light," which you claim for your paper, encourages me to hope that you will find space in it for the facts I herewith submit to you and your readers' attention, as a significant sign of the times, and an earnest of the condition of things we may look for, if the efforts of those should prove successful, who aim at introducing their God into the Constitution of these (as yet) free United States.

On the sixth of this month, Julius Nieland, a member of the Freie Gemeinde, applied at the naturalization office in this city for his "second paper," accompanied by Franz Brilefeld, another member of the same congregation, as his voucher. Having proved his right to full citizenship under the Constitution of the United States, the necessary papers were made out and handed to him. He then went in company with his voucher to Court-room No. 2 to have his paper legalized by Judge Pratt, who was then and there sitting in Court of Common Pleas, with Judge Hare as presiding Judge. Mr. Nieland stated the object of his application. Judge Pratt examined his paper, and, finding it all right, offered him a Bible with the invitation to swear upon it. Mr. Nieland said he would "affirm." Judge Pratt asked him why he objected to swearing. He asked in return, Why the Judge objected to his "affirming," as was his plain right under the laws which give to every one the option of swearing or affirming, according to his conviction. Instead of answering this question, however, Judge Pratt entered upon an inquisitorial cross-examination of Nieland's motive for objecting to swear; and, finally, elicited from the latter the frank admission that he did not believe in the revelation of the Bible. Whereupon Judge Pratt grasped the paper, denying the application, to which denial Judge Hare nodded his gracious assent, ringing the bell for the adjournment of the Court; and the paper was endorsed by the clerk in these words: "Refused on account of being an infidel."

These are the facts as obtained from the persons directly concerned in this remarkable transaction, who stand ready at any time to vouch for their truth. It requires no additional word on my part to point out the far-reaching significance of this "small beginning," and the interest it involves for every liberal-minded citizen of these United States. But in the interest of the hundreds of thousands of our citizens whose welfare would be gravely jeopardized, if the example of these "Christian" judges should be followed by their professional brethren throughout the land, I ask you to carry the matter before the court of public opinion, in order to bring the question to a fair and decisive test, how soon and how far, in spite of all glittering generalizations of Fourth of July speeches on "American Freedom and Independence," we are to be carried back to the times of Mediæval Inquisitions and its Torquemadas; and whether American citizens may yet awhile hope to enjoy the rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution, without the meddlesome interference of petty judges of common pleas, who, on the rather "uncommon" plea of their papal infallibility, claim the right to decide what special creed entitles its holders to the full benefit of constitutional liberty. A. L.

PHILADELPHIA, March 25, 1875.

[It is enough to make a proud-spirited radical bite his lip with shame, when he reflects that the scorn thus visited by arrogant Orthodoxy upon the most sacred rights of reason and conscience will only call forth from his brother-radicals a lazy "Don't agitate! Don't agitate!" Who wonders that they are despised, when he sees the spirit they manifest? Let the Freie Gemeinde join the new Philadelphia Liberal League en masse, and defend the rights of free thought in some bold, practical way. It is about time that Liberalism should stop hibernating in America.—Ed.]

THE YEAR OF JUBILEE, 1876.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:—

I see that your Philadelphia correspondent, Mr. Kilgore, favors my proposal to hold "A World's Convention of Liberals" in 1876.

The interest in the coming Centennial steadily increases, and I believe it will be a success beyond the expectations of its most sanguine supporters.

What is to be celebrated in 1876? The declaration of the rights of man,—of political and religious liberty. Have liberals no interest in this celebration? May not their religion be defined as liberty? To my thinking, no class of men are so much interested in the celebration and perpetuation of liberty, as liberals. Shall we, then, let its Centennial Anniversary pass unnoticed? I hope not. Let the liberal leagues and individual liberals, then, at once, signify their desire for and willingness to participate in a convention of liberty-lovers. Invitations to meet with us should be extended to the liberals of Europe; and a special and pressing one to that noble man—Gibaldi.

You may be sure, Mr. Abbot, that the churches of the United States will make all the capital they can out of the Centennial, and that the Christianizers of the Constitution will make specially strong efforts to advance their schemes in 1876.

Shall we remain idle spectators of the efforts of our enemies—we who love liberty more than they? For one I say no!

Issue a call of certain sound, clear and ringing: one that shall be heard throughout the land and across the ocean, calling the lovers of liberty, of free thought, of the human race, to their festival at Philadelphia in 1876.

Yours for 1876, E. C. ALPHONSE.

[We stand ready to help forward this suggestion, which has occurred to many, to the utmost of our ability; but it cannot possibly be carried out by any "ringing call" alone. There must be preliminary organization. For this we have been working for more than two years. Start a Liberal League at once in your own town, if you mean to have a Centennial worthy of the liberal movement. There is no time to waste.—Ed.]

THE WONDERS OF SPIRITUALISM.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your brief comment upon the communication of John Wetherbee, pointing out the inconsequentiality of his argument (so far as knowledge of the cause of spiritual manifestations can be postulated from the fact of their occurrence), is both timely and pertinent, inasmuch as it is the logical objection to the acceptance of the theories of Spiritualists as a sect, as well as an appropriate reply to the communication aforesaid.

The writer has had, perhaps, as startling experiences in "Spiritualistic phenomena" as Mr. Wetherbee, but has arrived at very different conclusions as to their origin, while no less impressed with the fact of their occurrence. Without, however, pretending to any assured knowledge upon the subject, it suffices to state that no skilled mesmerist, clairvoyant, or student of the peculiar effects of "animal magnetism" (so called) need to have recourse to the agency of disembodied spirits to account for effects similar to those produced by the "psychic force."

Certain individuals are possessed of magnetic or electric powers which give them command over the will-power of other persons, and even over inorganic substances. Until all the properties of electricity are understood—until the law governing the chemical affinities of matter is reduced to its ultimate analyses,—it is the audacity of ignorance alone that will limit the universal application of natural laws by asserting the crude theories of modern Spiritualism. One hundred years ago, if one had asked the wisest men of the eighteenth century whether an individual could be at one and the same moment in the middle of the broad Atlantic, and in communication with all Europe and America also, so that information of any event, transpiring on either side the ocean, could be instantaneously transmitted to the voyager hundreds of miles away from land,—the question would have been regarded as proof of lunacy, and mankind would have voted, with entire unanimity, that only supernatural beings, or the unholy magic of diabolical agencies, could account for such an event. Yet Cyrus Field, having laid the second ocean cable and picked up the first from the depths of ocean, was able to and did actually accomplish this wonderful achievement of being simultaneously in communication with both continents; and, now that we partially comprehend the means, we think it no miracle. One hundred years hence, doubtless, this feat will be surpassed by the better understanding of natural forces subject, not to capricious "disembodied intelligences," but to the unchanging law of cause and effect. At least, such is the opinion of

Yours very respectfully,

A. WARREN KELSEY, of Saint Louis.

March 14, 1875.

"PHENOMENA" FALSE AND TRUE.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., March 14, 1875.

MY DEAR INDEX:—

I have just read John Wetherbee's article on Spiritualism, with your added comments, and am delighted to read sensible remarks on the subject pro and con. I have seen "manifestations" in my own house, and in the houses of my friends, where I know there was no trickery; with every public medium, I believe I have discovered added trickery, but the latter, though observed, never vitiated the genuine phenomena. But now why must these things remain "phenomena"? They must be an outgrowth of natural law. We have seen tables moved without visible power. We have received intelligent answers to questions, but I have yet to get information not possessed by some person present in the room where the manifestations were given. We have never received reliable prophecy. We have never received information concerning lost ships, missing people, or present unknown quantities (so to speak), that has ever been substantiated. Can these manifestations, then, be from departed spirits? If they could come and communicate with us, would they spend our time in talking such bosh and twaddle? Is it some unknown law of mental reflex, a propulsion of mind into matter? We know that in mesmerism one mind can influence another; and if that be possible while both minds are yet in the body, surely when the spirit is freed from muscular restrictions—after shuffling off the mortal coil,—it would be less difficult. What is the power, the force, that lifts tables and pianos? Can it not be utilized? It is no use shutting our eyes to facts and denying them, because we cannot explain them.

There is a motive power; what is its source?

There is objective intelligence; whose is it?

S. N.

MONCURE D. CONWAY, who holds public services, and delivers scientific, literary, or religious discourses, as he pleases, to an independent congregation in London, on Sundays, and who is best known as a facile and entertaining writer for literary periodicals, both in Great Britain and America, is proposing to visit his native land on a lecturing tour. His subjects, as announced, are characteristic: "London," "The Devil," and "Oriental Religion." Twenty-five years ago, or thereabouts, he left his place in the Baltimore Conference to enter the theological department of Harvard. He was a graduate of Dickinson College. He met Bishop, then Rev. Mr. Foster, at the Marlboro' House, where both happened to stop over the Sabbath, and surprised him with the announcement of his intentions. The advice to return and submit his religious doubts to such intelligent friends as Dr. McClintock and others, was of little avail. Conway attended, on the Sabbath, the services of Theodore Parker, in Music Hall, and came back to his hotel greatly distressed and disgusted. He was so shocked by what he heard that he was quite inclined to pack up and return home again. The Bishop intimated that if he kept on the line he had marked out for himself he would probably astonish Mr. Parker himself before his course was ended. The event has proved the prophecy to be true. Some of the talks in the London chapel would give the Mr. Parker of those days, if he were living, as decided a sensation of pain as anything Mr. Conway heard in Music Hall. When a young man cuts himself loose from certain fundamental moral truths there is no determining beforehand into what seas he will drift.—Zion's Herald, March 11.

REV. AZEL BACKUS, D. D., was a graduate of Yale, and became President of Hamilton College. It was in the good old days when they had prayers and recitation before breakfast, so that early rising was in order. The chapel-bell was moderate in size and feeble in utterance, and it became a standing excuse for "sleeping over": "I didn't hear the bell." At last, one morning, the President himself was late at morning prayers; and, as he opened the Bible to commence the service, he delighted the boys by indorsing their own old threadbare excuse: "The fact is, young gentlemen, that I didn't hear the bell. And no wonder; for it scarcely makes more noise than would the shaking of a fur cap, with a sheep's tail for a clapper!"

A PERSIAN aphorism: "None but God knows the inside of the heart; for when it is open to other eyes, then that which was the inside is the outside."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS.

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Broviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. Twelve Discourses. Edited by his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. 3 vols.....	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gothold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Edelweiss. Translated by Thomas Wilhelm Meister.....	1.25
Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Swiss Scenes.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies in Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.80
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics, or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy. Its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	3.00
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. C. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, Statics of Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDIOT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canaan. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Tainian. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....	1.25
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unre-printed Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canaan.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. II, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.

At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PREMIUM CHESTER WHITE

PIGS.—$15 each, $25 a pair. Chester County MAMMOTH CORN, and Imported BELGIAN OATS, 4 lbs. by mail, $1; peck, $2; one-half bushel, $3; Circulars and Sample Packages of Seeds free for two stamps. Address N. P. BOYER, Parkersburg Chester Co., Penn.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

☞ Lists sent upon application.

☞ Send for estimates.

TWO NEW BOOKS.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dume Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REASONS FOR USING THEEUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY, 335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent interest annually, or 10 per cent semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co's Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent, till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

☞ On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION. Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers, P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A finelikeless of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER

LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," &c., &c. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vo's., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEXIN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

MORSE'S NEW BUST OF

THEODORE PARKER.

Cabinet size. Price 50 cents.

Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield Street, Boston

Also for sale at the office of THE INDEX.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The New York TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FREESUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fredk Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,

256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY

BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full tilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN

HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.

Send for Circular.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A capital Store for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION,

By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10 A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESSAT BELFAST.

Seventh Edition,

Containing the First and Second Prefaces replying to his Critics, an extract from the Manchester Lecture, and the paper on "Scientific Materialism" in full. 120 pages. Price 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

NEW MUSIC BOOKS.

OSGOOD'S GUIDE

TO THE

ART OF SINGING.

Price $4.00.

This fine book has been compiled after careful study of all existing systems, and is intended to be plain, exhaustive, and thorough in its course, which has been well tested by its talented author. Probably no one is better fitted to make "the best" book than a successful American singer and teacher, familiar with European methods.

GERMAN FOUR PART SONGS. For Mixed Voices. Just published. Is an unusually good collection of entirely new music, by the best modern German composers. Just right for Musical Societies. Price $1.50.

ORIGINAL HYMN TUNES. By H. K. OLIVER, the veteran composer of "Federal Street," and other favorite tunes. Contains 100 Tunes, Chants and Anthems, all original and of the best quality. Price, Boards, 80 cts.; Cloth, $1.00.

SEVEN PART SONGS. For Mixed Voices. By J. C. D. PARKER. Contains new Glees which were successes when sung by the "Parker Club." Price 60 cts.

All books sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

NOTICE TO THE LIBERAL

PUBLIC.

M. ALTMAN & Co., }
301 & 303 6th Ave., N.Y. }

I have during the last six years kept my name and business constantly before the readers of Liberal papers, and have during that time supplied most of them with merchandise from my establishment, orders in most cases coming through the advertisements published by me.

But the limited space necessarily occupied in a newspaper makes it impossible to enumerate or specify accurately the many articles required by the public, and I have been, and still am, in receipt of many letters begging for a more detailed Price List or Catalogue. I have determined to issue the most complete Price List of Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Ladies' and Gents' Undergarments and Outfits, Suits, Costumes, Hosiery, Gloves, and the thousand small articles in Millinery, Notions, and Haberdashery, that has ever been circulated, free of cost, to all who may send stamp and address. The matter is now in the hands of the printer, and by the time this is read will be ready to mail. Send on your addresses, with stamp for return postage. Liberals who may not be able, or who hesitate to send stamp, may simply send their address, and I will mail a few for distribution among their friends.

Fraternally yours,

MORRIS ALTMAN.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1875.

WHOLE No. 276.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN celebrated his seventieth birthday on April 2. The blessings of countless children, some of them no longer such, crown him in his green old age.

THE NEW YORK Sun gives a startling account of the increase in this country of the consumption of opium, declaring that "we consume more opium than the Celestials in proportion to our population."

THE Springfield Union thinks that "Rutism is worse than Ritualism," and instances various "ruts" into which rigidly Puritan congregations have fallen, such as turning their backs on the minister during the singing of the last hymn.

REV. J. W. CRACRAFT is handsomely rebuked by "E. D. S.," in the Cleveland Leader, for declaring that "an unbeliever is always a sensualist." Such reckless libels will deprive any minister of the "grand old name of gentleman."

REV. ROBERT PARVIN, a Methodist minister of Louisiana, thinks it "will never do to make the preachers live on hard tack and without vegetables." Then why do they make their audiences live on hard tack? It is a poor rule that does not work both ways.

THE RELIGIOUS papers have been full of Moody and Sankey for a long time. But it is questionable whether their evangelical revivals will bring a tithe as much solid good to the world as the great orthographic revival going on in the spelling-matches now so fashionable.

THE INFAMOUS hoax practised by the Chicago Times in announcing the burning of a theatre in that city, when no such burning occurred, killed the mother and crazed the wife of one gentleman whose name was published in the fabulous list of the burned. Is there no punishment for such a crime as the Times committed?

THE Milwaukee News is of the opinion that "a lot of pop-corn balls hung all over a Christmas tree will create more interest in a Sunday-school than twenty miracles could possibly do." There is a great deal of pop-corn Christianity, for children of a larger growth, in the fashionable churches of to-day. Operatic choirs and histrionic ministers might properly be classed under that head.

ACCORDING to his letter in the Morning Star, Mr. Oliver Johnson is about as "Evangelical" as nineteenth-century of those who bear that title. He does not believe in everlasting punishment, is "unable" to accept the Deity of Christ, and receives spirit-communications; but he finds the Bible "inexpressibly precious, as containing a revelation of the Divine will." This is gruel of the thinnest kind to a Radical appetite.

MRS. M. E. BERRY is the editor and publisher of a new monthly journal of sixteen pages called the Note-Book. It is "devoted to the interests of suffering humanity"—especially to the consideration of crime and insanity, the abuses attendant on overgrown institutions for their treatment, and the proper remedial measures to be adopted. The subscription price is $1.50 a year, and may be sent to A. Williams & Co., 135 Washington St., Boston.

MR. BOWDITCH's elaborate pamphlet on the "Taxation of Women in Massachusetts," reviewed on a subsequent page of this issue by Rev. John T. Sargent, can be had from this office on receipt of the very low price of twenty-five cents. It is a very handsome pamphlet with light repped covers and tinted paper, comprising over seventy pages full of statistical, legal, and historical information—altogether a most instructive document to all who are interested in the "woman question."

THREE OF THE principal dignitaries of the Catholic Church in Chili have excommunicated the President of the republic, the Senate, the Chamber of Deputies, and all others who refuse to obey the Church in preference to the laws of the land. In Ecuador the Catholics have forced the State to submit; but in Chili they have not yet succeeded. It is impossible not to connect these overt attempts to subordinate the State to the Church with the "Vatican Decrees" against which Gladstone has so boldly protested.

PRESIDENT MARK HOPKINS, in a recent lecture at Vassar College, said: "It is to be lamented that the present agitation concerning the rights of woman is so much a matter of 'rights' rather than of 'duties,' as the reform of the latter would involve the former." If Dr. Hopkins means that woman's rights are man's duties, and woman's duties are man's rights, we agree with him. For instance, if it is woman's duty to obey, it is man's right to command; but if it is woman's right to be an individual, it is man's duty to respect her individuality. But why this Christian repugnance to the discussion of rights? Simply because Christianity scarcely recognizes rights at all, although natural morality is built upon them. There is a great reform to come in the science of ethics.

THE Liberal Worker, a Unitarian paper of Sharon, Wisconsin, had this item in its issue of March 10: "The old-time editor of the Radical, Sidney H. Morse, is dealing THE INDEX some pretty hard blows. Mr. Abbot has planted himself on too narrow a platform to withstand a vigorous movement against him." Whether the platform of Universal Reason is a more "narrow" one than that of Individualism, or even than that of Unitarianism, is a question which we willingly leave to the consideration of the patiently thoughtful. The Worker, like some of our critics nearer home, seems to think that platform the "broadest" which tempts the greatest number of people to stand upon it, rather than that platform which lays down the broadest principles. The platform of perfect liberty and perfect fellowship (and we have no other) will probably "withstand" any movement that can be brought against it—at least by the Liberal Worker.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Observer thus gossips about affairs in Toledo, Ohio, where THE INDEX had its birthplace and where it still has noble and sterling friends; though, if he blunders about events since the paper's removal to Boston as he does about events before that time, the gossip is only half history: "The five leading Protestant bodies in this city are so nearly equal in strength, that it would take close counting of sittings, contributions, and communicants, to tell which was the stronger. But they are all small in proportion to the population, for the census of 1870 gave only a third of our people as from American parents. Two-thirds were recorded as foreigners or of foreign parentage. Then, among the third that are purely American, there has always been a large element anti-Christian, and comprising families of position and influence. These were able to bring Francis E. Abbot to Toledo, to establish THE INDEX. They maintained the enterprise until a business quarrel arose, and THE INDEX was moved to Boston. Since that they have been leaderless, but exert still no slight influence against the Christian churches. An instance of this has been seen in their warfare upon the Bible in the schools. This began in Mr. Abbot's time, when a public controversy was carried on between him and one of the Protestant pastors. The issue was made in the school elections, and finally, this winter, it has been pressed to a vote. To the gratification of Christians, the anti-Christian element so offended the Romanists and politicians on the Board, that the resolution to exclude the Bible was killed by a three-fourths majority. Much praise in connection with this is due to Gen. Wager Swayne, eldest son of Justice Swayne of the Supreme Court [and a Vestryman of Trinity Church.]" Further echoes of this action may be heard in an article which we copy elsewhere from a Catholic paper of Louisville.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BELLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Free Religion Notwithstanding.

BY DAVID H. CLARK.

It is remarkable as well as significant, in view of the opposite demonstrations there have been in the world, how common is the praise of liberty,—how disposed religious teachers of every name are, regardless of the inconsistency, to speak of the importance of intellectual freedom, the fearless and untrammelled pursuit of truth. Indeed, it is impossible for the human mind, though it consent to lose itself in the maze of a bewildering bondage,—though it resort to ingenious quibblings and subterfuge to fortify a false position,—if it thinks at all, to think otherwise.

At the beginning of the Reformation, the cry arose of the sacredness of the private judgment and conscience; nor has it ceased since, despite the impediments to its practical recognition, the direct or indirect denials of it that have intervened.

All intelligent persons are familiar with these words of Milton: "Give me the liberty to argue freely according to conscience above all liberties. . . . And though all the winds of doctrine were let loose to play upon the earth, so Truth be in the field, we do injuriously by licensing and prohibiting to misdoubt her strength. Let her and Falsehood grapple; whoever knew Truth put to the worse, in a free and open encounter?" Hooker, Chillingworth, Jeremy Taylor, and others, reiterated with scarcely less vigor and eloquence the same sentiments. This was upwards of three hundred years ago. They are still heard in our day, not unfrequently from the most unexpected quarters; and so natural is it for the heart to quicken into enthusiasm at their utterance, that we frequently forget, for the time, they have been heard before, and almost think the era of universal emancipation has come.

In the opening of his recent address, Mr. Savage renews the strain, and though, in the vesture of his vivacious and sparkling style, it assumes an air of captivating novelty and freshness, it needs but a moment's reflection to remind those who are conversant with Unitarian thought and teaching, that it is one which has long been familiar in his communion. Unitarians have long insisted on the right of free inquiry in religion, upon freedom of investigation and opinion, upon science as something to be followed and welcomed rather than feared. It would be an easy task to cull from its literature an indefinite number of citations corroboratory of this, sufficiently unqualified and positive to satisfy the extremest rationalist. Indeed, to make use of hackneyed phraseology, so much has been said on this subject, and so well said, that it would seem there is nothing more to say. Nor are such sentiments peculiar to Unitarians, but proceed from even the most creed-bound of the sects. Two or three examples, taken at random, will make this apparent.

"God has written upon our minds the ineffaceable law that they search after the truth, whatever, wherever it be, however arduous the toil for it, whithersoever it may lead. Let it come; even if it should promise nothing to the utilitarian, there are yet in us the mirabiles amores to find it out. A sound heart is alive with curiosity, and will not retain its health while its aspirations are rebuffed. It gives no unbroken peace to the man who thwarts his reasoning instincts; for amid all its conflicting demands it is at times importunate for a reasonable belief. When it is famished by an idle intellect, it loses its tone, becomes bigoted rather than inquisitive, and takes up with theological fancies which reduce it still lower. When it is fed by an inquiring mind, it is enlivened, and reaches out for an expanded faith." [Edward A. Park, D.D.]

"Mental freedom is the only true freedom, the foundation of all other liberty, without which an immortal creature is a degraded slave, and not the less a vassal because his chains may chance to be made of gold."

"For what is freedom but the unfettered use Of all the powers which God hath given?"

"The intellectual power of man proves that there must be an object suitable for its exercise, and demanding its study. This object is truth, the knowledge of something real, and consists in the exact understanding of the highest realities that exist." [E. L. Magoon, D.D.]

"We trust that the time will come when, in all departments of history and philology, men will write, not for denomination or party, but for the truth; when the inquiry will not be what will this or that sect say of this, but what will God say of it, to whom all suppressing of the truth and all pious fraud is an abomination." [Edward Beecher, D.D.]

An eminent European representative of Roman Catholicism repels with scorn, in a recent number of the New York Tribune, the charge which Mr. Gladstone makes that his Church is hostile to liberty. Thus the principle of freedom has been, and is, more or less approved and celebrated in the Church, from the most conservative to the most progressive of its divisions. Unitarians, both wings, and one scarcely less earnestly or broadly than the other, have spoken in its praise; and those with whom they have little agreement, in terms as strong.

Now what has been the purport of all these admirable deliverances? Were they simply uttered in a Pickwickian sense? Were they but clever rhodomontade? Do we not know that they have never been practised by any of the sects from which they have proceeded,—not even by Unitarians? Nor are there signs that they are likely to be at present. Do we not know, on the other hand, that, whenever there has been such an effort, liberty has been coolly, if not rudely, rebuffed and forced to retire as an insufferable and presumptuous intruder? And thus the Church, while it has "spoken the word of promise to the ear, has broken it to the hope."

Setting aside, then, these "glittering generalities" of Mr. Savage's essay in regard to freedom, the right of free inquiry, the fearless pursuit of truth, the acceptance of the demonstrations of science, and the like,—in which Liberal Christians, as we have seen, in common with those who are reckoned of the illiberal sort, have been wont to indulge in their more fervid moods, and which, were it not that there is constant need of their presentation (and were it not also for the attractive manner in this instance), would seem commonplace,—we are conducted to this conclusion: that the alleged hostility between Free Religion and Christianity is imaginary rather than real—an idea that results from an indiscriminate or narrow definition of the latter. It arises from the error of confounding perverted or spurious Christianity with unperturbed or pure Christianity. Against the former, or Orthodox Christianity, we, as Unitarians, Mr. Savage says, "are all arrayed."

Just here, it seems to us, in his initiation of the discussion, he betrays confusion in respect to the points at issue that greatly impairs all that follows, and causes him to appear somewhat like one talking at random.

It is evident that he fails to apprehend not only Unitarianism, but also Free Religion. It is easy for him to see why Free Religion should be hostile to Orthodoxy; but he cannot see why it should be to Unitarianism. If he understood Free Religion better, he would perceive that it is irreconcilably opposed, not to a special phase, or to special doctrines of the Church, or a single portion of it alone, as he thinks, but to certain cardinal or distinguishing principles that pervade the whole system in all its forms. He would see (what "Free Religionists" see) that, if Orthodoxy is a religion of authority and supernaturalism, so is Unitarianism also, though it is confessedly of a milder kind. The one, through the force of its circumstances and the influence of the past, necessarily inclines to an adherence to the Church method of looking at religion, while the other partially adopts that of rationalism and science. It is thus that Unitarianism and Free Religion, quite to the contrary of what the essayist supposes, are not synonymous, but constitute distinct modes of thought. They cannot coalesce. It is necessary to stand outside of the one to stand inside of the other; and the sooner this is clearly recognized, the better for each.

Taking up Mr. Savage's argument from this point, it logically falls into the following syllogism:—

Pure Christianity, or the Christianity of the New Testament, is compatible with absolute intellectual freedom.

Unitarianism is pure Christianity.

Therefore Unitarianism is compatible with absolute freedom.

Let us examine these propositions. Let us go back to primitive Christianity, to the Christianity of Jesus, and see if the above statement with reference to its relation to freedom is true. What was its paramount idea? What was then essential to be a Christian? If it is said, as Unitarians have been accustomed to teach, simply a good life—the love of God and man (a representation, by the way, which they have refused to abide by again and again), it will need but a critical glance at the New Testament to see that this is a very false definition of it,—is in fact no definition of it at all. It will be seen that the first requisite to be a Christian in those days was not one of the life or character, but what it has ever been since, belief—to acknowledge Jesus as the Christ, the long-expected Messiah. There was no encouragement to freedom of thought apart from its relation to this conception. Thus Christianity began, and thus it has been perpetuated, and will remain so long as it is regarded as a final religion. The uncompromising free-thinker, though possessed of the good life, though his character had been never so exalted or unexceptionable, without the prescribed belief would have been as much outside of it then as now.

But not only was primitive Christianity not free, but Unitarianism is not; nor has it ever been primitive Christianity. Indeed, Christianity has never been in any two centuries alike. It was different in the first from what it was in the second, and it has never been since precisely what it was in either. There is nothing clearer in the New Testament than that Jesus never cherished such a conception of himself, or such a general purpose, as the Church has entertained. There were different conceptions of the Messiah, and the mind of Jesus appears to have passed through a transition in the course of his career in this particular. But the central idea of his mission at all times was the exaltation of the Jewish people, the restoration of their departed glory, the supremacy and purification of their worship. This idea gradually assumed a more spiritual character. Perceiving that his dream of Messiahship was not likely to be realized, he at length conceived, in accordance with the conception (common to his age) of periodic destructions and renovations of the world, an approaching transformation of the then existing order of things into "a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness," in which his kingdom should be established, Jesus passed away in that belief. He announced in definite terms the time of his reappearance as before that generation had expired. He depicted in vivid language the manifestations of that coming, the aspect it would present. This was the general expectation among his followers, both before his death and after it for some time. What has become of that expectation? Is it not plain that the first form of Christianity and all forms of Unitarianism diverge at this point?—that their conceptions of the Messiahship, in this particular at least, are dissimilar rather than identical?

Nor is this the only point in respect to which they disagree. The religion of Jesus, like that of every great religious reformer or teacher, was much intermixed with the ideas and moulded by the influence of his time. It is quite certain that he shared in the common belief in a personal devil, the formidable rival and irrepressible antagonist of God in the universe; in spirits of evil, in demoniacal possessions, and in a place of future punishment for the wicked and disbelieving. Even his idea of God, though mainly that of a father, is at times that of a stern, wrathful, and vindictive Being. Does Unitarianism include these beliefs in its view of Christianity? Does it agree with them? If not, is there any reason in assuming that primitive Christianity and Unitarianism are the same, because they possess a special historic connection, or are allied to each other through certain distinguishing characteristics?

But there are other points of contrast or divergence between the Christianity of Jesus and Unitarianism beside those we have noticed. Some of the inculcations of Jesus, distinctive of the first Christian community, are strikingly unpractical and radically at variance with the conditions of modern society and the first principles of existing civilization. Take, for example, the doctrine of non-resistance, which has never been to any considerable extent accepted in theory nor exemplified in practice in Christendom: which would be impossible in the present stage of human development. With the exception of a comparatively insignificant body of Christians, numerically speaking, and an isolated eccentric individual here and there, it has been repudiated in every division of the Church, among Unitarians as well as others. Another distinction of original Christianity was the renunciation of property. "The multitude of them that believed had all things common." They were told that "whosoever forsaketh not all he hath cannot be my disciple,"—the promise being that he should "receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting." Wealth was discountenanced. It was hard for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven. Poverty was especially in favor. Those who became his disciples were to take no thought for the morrow. As they went forth to proclaim the new religion, they were to dispense with all clothing beyond that upon their persons. They were to take no money or provisions for their journey. They were not to consider what they should say.

Now imagine a person thus equipped going forth as a preacher of Christianity to-day! Imagine his visit to the Unitarian Rooms in quest of a Sunday appointment! Would he not have an inspiring greeting? Would he not soon come to the conclusion that Christianity in the New Testament is one thing, and Unitarianism in Boston another? That, instead of unkempt hair and dust-stained, uncemely, or tattered raiment, one of the first requisites to a respectful hearing, in this nineteenth century of grace, is a trim and faultless appearance, a garb of spotless linen, and well-fitting black broadcloth suit; and, instead of no thought of what he should say, a production in his satchel known as a sermon (unless he have the rare gift of acquitting himself as acceptably without such a preparation) of the most perfect literary execution possible. Imagine him entering one of our modern Christian temples, say one of the opulent and aristocratic Unitarian ones of Boston, pronouncing severe condemnation of riches, declaring that men of wealth cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven, and that it is essential, in order to be a Christian, to have all things common, or to sell all one has and give to the poor; that poverty is the condition on which Jesus bestowed his special approval, and the most favorable to piety,—how long would he have a congregation? Would he not stand a pretty good chance to have his discourse suddenly brought to a close by the police, and to be arrested as a disturber of the peace, an intolerable fanatic and brawler?

The Christianity of the New Testament is impractical in other respects. Jesus placed but little emphasis on the word "home." Domestic relations were but of small esteem, compared with becoming his disciple. Marriage was lightly regarded. Celibacy was preferable. Abstinence from the propagation of one's kind was commended as a special sign of fitness for his kingdom.

According to the teachings of Jesus there is a miraculous power in faith in the material no less than the spiritual world. "All things are possible to him that believeth." "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamore tree, 'Be thou plucked up by the roots and be thou planted in the sea,' and it should obey you." "Whosoever shall say unto this mountain, 'Be thou removed and cast into the sea,' and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe these things shall come to pass, he shall have whatsoever he saith." All extraordinary effects produced by Jesus are ascribed to the power of faith. It wrought physical cures of various kinds, and atoned for moral and spiritual delinquencies. "Thy faith hath made thee whole." "Thy sins are forgiven." "Thy faith hath saved thee," were common assurances. Peter walked on the sea by the power of faith (so the record tells us), and sank only when it deserted him. Surely, if these things were true, those must have been remarkable times. The Christian says they are true, and stoutly defends them; or, if sceptical in regard to them, preaches or talks of something else, and thus preserves a non-committal and wary silence. The rationalist openly declares that he does not believe them to be true, at least in the sense in which they are related and ordinarily understood; that they are simply fictions or distorted views of things that became intermingled with the narrative. This conception of the miraculous power of faith was not peculiar to Jesus. It was common to all the ancient religions. It was, in a word, an inheritance of the New Testament times.

Of course I am aware that Mr. Savage, with the apparent pertinacity of one wedded to a foregone conclusion, adopts a cool and convenient way of thrusting aside these considerations, and such as these, as of little moment and of no power to move him from his position. But is not this like the blindness of those who, having eyes, see not? Is it not yielding to the vice of those illogical mental habits which so often characterize religious and political parties—clinging to an idea, an organization, or a name, when all that it once represented or that gave birth to it has been superseded or discarded: a tendency which is fatal to an unbiased and reasonable view of things, and to progress?

Mr. Savage insists that none of the errors and misconceptions in which the teachings of Jesus and the New Testament are implicated can detract from the special claim that is made for Christianity, any more than those of Newton or Copernicus from the glory of the new truth they revealed. The case was just the reverse in regard to Jesus. The interest which he awakened, and the followers he won were, not so much through the attractive force of what is pronounced his special truth, the acknowledged excellence of his character and religion, as what are beginning to be considered his errors. It was not chiefly because he taught love to God and man that he so effectually awakened public interest and fixed attention upon himself; that people thronged his steps, and spread their garments before him, and threw branches in his way, shouting, "Hosanna to the son of David! Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" It was because they believed the long expected Messiah had come for whom "the whole creation had groaned and travailed"—the Deliverer and King, who was "to restore the Kingdom to Israel" and reign as conqueror of the world, the supreme monarch and Prince of Peace for a thousand years. It was because stories had gone abroad, or in some way impressions had been received, of his wonder-working power. It was also because it was supposed that a great physical and spiritual revolution was at hand; and self-preservation led men to seek an alliance with one who was to sustain so important a relation to it. It is said that in a similar way some of the Gothic tribes were induced to embrace Christianity, thinking that Christ, or the God of the Romans, who had been represented as a most powerful being, would defend them from hostile tribes. The Christianity of the first converts was little more than a delusion. It consisted of conceptions crude and unsubstantial, and hopes that never were realized. All that was novel in it or elicited particular attention has long been transformed or cast aside. It is exceedingly doubtful, if love to God and man had constituted the burden of the announcement of Jesus, whether he would have attracted any considerable attention, or his name outlived his generation.

This, then, was not the essential distinction of Christianity, nor has it ever been regarded as such; as any one who recalls the elaborate theological systems and confessions of faith, and persecutions that have raged in its name must be aware.

Jesus differed from Newton and Copernicus and distinguished minds of their type in the errors of his system over-shadowing to his followers the importance of his truths. The errors became the principal thing. Again, he was not a discoverer in the sense they were. There is no evidence that he announced any truth unknown before. There is not a single religious idea, not even the most spiritual, that is not to be found in the sacred writings of other religions. "What is called the Christian religion," said St. Augustine, "has existed among the ancients, and was not absent from the beginning of the human race until Christ came in the flesh; from which time the true religion which existed already began to be called Christian." Speaking of the various religions of the world, Mr. Higginson adds this confirmatory testimony: "They all show," says he, "the same aim, the same symbols, the same forms, the same weaknesses, the same aspirations. Looking at these points of unity, we might say there is but one religion, under many forms, whose essential creed is the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man—disguised by corruptions, symbolized by mythologies, ennobled by virtues, degraded by vice, but still the same."

It will be seen, then, from the foregoing, that we contend there is a strong dissimilarity between original Christianity and the Christianity of the Church—between original Christianity and Unitarianism. The latter is the Church's latest evolution. It belongs to its system—possesses a vital relation to it. Its peculiar distinction consists in the softening of some of the theological austerities of the Church, an enlivening of its more gloomy shades, a discarding of some of its theoretical inconsistencies, a larger concession to reason. Nevertheless it is essentially the same. The Jewish Scriptures are its Bible, the book of its special reverence, more infallible than any other, indeed with a divinity that is all its own. The person of Jesus was exceptional to humanity, unlike in his nature and teachings to all other religious teachers. His religion is the final religion of the human race, Heaven's last word to man: "At the name of Jesus every knee shall bow." It includes an element of authority which says to reason, "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther." The Church has never been free. It was founded on the principle of authority, and that principle still pervades its every part. It has never allowed any one to dispute its dictation; whoever was rash enough to do so did it at his peril. As one by one, from time to time, those appeared who dared to venture upon such a course, they were cast out from its fellowship and pursued with imprecations and relentless severities. Unitarianism began with the proclamation of the right of reason in religion, the promise of mental freedom; but, though distinguished by a more humane temper, a broader and finer culture, it inherited the Church's spirit and soon yielded to its ways.

Mr. Savage says: "We cannot go back on liberty of thought and utterance without committing denominational suicide." There are those who think it has already perpetrated that fatal act. It has certainly "gone back" on freedom so often that it would seem there is little prospect of its going forward in the path of the special emancipation demanded in this time. It went back on liberty of thought and utterance in the days of Theodore Parker, when he sought to subject Christianity to a keener and more critical inspection than had been hitherto applied to it. How effectually it went back on him, let his own words bear witness: "Most of my clerical friends," says he, "fell off; some would not speak to me in the streets, and refused to take me by the hand. In their public meetings they left the sofas or benches when I sat down, and withdrew from me as Jews from contact with a leper. In a few months most of my former ministerial coadjutors forsook me. . . . The Unitarian periodicals were shut against me and my friends." It would probably not treat heresy in the same way to-day; but the same spirit lingers in its midst, and shows itself from time to time in one way or another. It is shown in its repeated refusals to commit itself to entire freedom in its national conventions; in its efforts to force a formula of belief upon the radical portion of its body; in the erasure from the list of its ministers of the name of one of the most esteemed and respected of its ministers, because, in his greater breadth of view and the strictness of his sincerity, he declined to call himself a Christian; in its decided bias in the interest of conservatism; in the conduct of its denominational affairs and policy, as witnessed in the government of the American Unitarian Association, and particularly its publishing department, when a book on Mormonism would find as fair a chance of introduction to the public as one by a "Free Religionist" author; in the inevitable consequence that, in proportion as a person develops in radicalism, he develops out of the Unitarian denomination.

During the last quarter of a century, Orthodoxy has been advancing with rapid strides, while Unitarianism has done little more than stand still; and now they are pretty nearly abreast of each other. It should have rendered the Free Religious Association unnecessary or impossible. It could have done so, if it had been more ready to recognize and concede to the new thought of the time, and if its course had been more direct and positive. As it is, its intellectual leadership in the religious world is gone. Its vagueness and indefiniteness have long been proverbial. It is for this reason unfitted to meet the issues which increasing knowledge and science are thrusting upon the attention of independent minds. It has much to say of science, but it is shy of its conclusions. It has much to say of progress, but it shows only a lukewarm sympathy with its representative thinkers.

The question to-day is, not so much whether God exists in a Unitarian or Trinitarian sense, as whether he has any existence; not so much whether this doctrine or the other is sustained by the Bible, as what is thought of the book itself. Men want to know what is thought about miracles, about the miraculous birth of Christ, about his nature in its relation to humanity, about the religion he taught and its relation to the religions of the world. Now so far as Unitarianism has any voice in regard to these, it coincides closely with Orthodoxy. It coincides with Orthodoxy, or is silent. But the inquisitive, keen, and searching intelligence which raises such interrogations will not be satisfied either with the old answers or with evasion. It repeats the call to all who assume to be religious guides and teachers of the fabled Eden: "Where art thou?" Free Religion is devoted to the scientific study of religion, and therefore knows where it is in regard to some of these things, at least, and does not hesitate to declare it. Unitarianism is bound to a system, and in the search for truth must submit to its limitations. Free Religion is independent of all systems, and welcomes and appropriates "truth wherever found, on heathen or on Christian ground." The one is the bondage of special authority; the other the freedom of universal consciousness and reason.

And therefore—not without due acknowledgment of the merit of the essay we have been considering, its original, forcible, and piquant treatment of the theme, its evident sincerity, and winsome spirit—we are compelled to say that we still believe in and prefer Free Religion Notwithstanding.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AND CHRISTIANITY.

. . . . To me, the refusal of men in this pretended republic to allow women an equal voice in the government appears to be the meanest and most unreasonable thing of which they could be guilty, and none the less would it appear so to me, if all the women but one were willing to submit to disfranchisement. It is foolish; that is, unjust to themselves as well as to the women. It makes the men appear to me both religious and political hypocrites. For if there is anything Christian in Christianity, it is the "Golden Rule"; and if there is anything republican in this republic, it is that sentence of the Declaration of Independence which is a paraphrase of the Golden Rule. Both are trampled under foot by any law or custom which excludes from the polls on account of sex.

The men who commit this wrong have nothing to fall back upon but bad science or bad theology.

If their science were good for anything, it would teach them that wisdom in none of its branches is confined to a simple sex, and that in politics there would be none too much if all that belongs to both sexes were available.

If their theology were not bad, it would teach them that God cannot be worshipped by compulsion, nor in any way except freely. Hence to make either party of the dual head of a family pope over the other, is to turn that other off with a very poor substitute for God. It is in effect to say that God could not make the two atoms, whose union was to constitute the human family-molecule, with equal though different powers and prerogatives, but must needs make one to be lord of the other,—one proprietor and the other property. As if He could only create harmony by creating slavery. It is time the world were rid of such theology as this; and it certainly is beginning to get rid of it. It is a theology at war with facts. Facts are slow but sure.

In thus speaking my own individual mind, as to how things appear to me, I do not pretend to deny that the majority of men in Massachusetts may be henceforth true to the little they know, and the much they believe. On the whole, I think they must be. I think they feel themselves religiously bound to oppose woman suffrage, and are at least as sincere, earnest, and conscientious as the holy Romish inquisitors were in laboring to make Galileo abjure the motion of our planet. I cheerfully confess that it would be a great deal better, if one could do it, to pity them, rather than to indulge in any degree of contempt.

It is a very ungracious thing to turn upon the venerable theological creed in which one was brought up, a creed which we have all been taught to believe is bound up for life and for death with the only morality that can save this world from utter corruption. But, if one lives, he must grow wiser, whether he wills it or not. And one has lived to see hundreds and thousands of people who have thrown away the "Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly of Divines," and still love God and their neighbor as much as they ever did; who credit Paul and Peter for all the good things they ever did, but don't believe a word of their supernatural inspiration, or of their doctrines about human salvation. They credit these apostles with any amount of zeal for the welfare of mankind in a future life, and an equal amount of ignorance as to the best way of making them virtuous and happy in this one.

It is the sublime residuum of moral law (which is all that is left, or will be left, of any human religion, when all the superstition is winnowed out of it) that will finally give woman equal political rights with men everywhere. We cannot expect impartial suffrage in these United States, or even in Massachusetts, till this winnowing process is much further advanced.

In the fight against negro slavery we had a "Bible argument" to contend with. In that against female slavery we have a still stronger one. It is in fact so strong, that it cannot be overcome without upsetting the whole supernatural character and superhuman authority of the Bible along with it. If human language can make anything plain and unequivocal, Paul explains himself beyond possible doubt or cavil when he says:—

"Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church."

According to the apostolic idea, everywhere inculcated in the New Testament, Christ is not a provisional or fallible head of the Church. He must be believed in and obeyed on the pain of eternal damnation. Hence either the husband is by divine command a supreme pope over his wife, or else Paul had no more authority to write this, or a dozen other things of the same sort, than any of the rest of us.

It does not help the matter that the apostles, doubtless having some remembrance of the sublime moral teaching of the Sermon on the Mount, tried to impress upon the husbands, thus clothed with supreme power, that they should not treat their wives with unnecessary cruelty. Says Peter, quite shrewdly:—

"Ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they who marry without the word be won by the conversation of the wives."

And a little further on:—

"Likewise, ye husbands, dwell with them according to knowledge, giving honor unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel, and as being heirs together of the grace of life, that your prayers be not hindered."

May we not wonder whether the successor of St. Peter, now whining so lamentably at the loss of his temporal power, considers Mary Somerville and Elizabeth Barrett Browning as "weaker vessels,"—weaker than himself, or any other consecrated bachelor who has worn the triple crown? Is it not about time for papers, whether ecclesiastic or domestic, to "shut up and dry up" in this talk about "weaker vessels"? Is it either gentlemanly or logically relevant? Inasmuch as women have never claimed to be superior to men, except perhaps in the amount of suffering naturally allotted to them, there seems to be nothing but thoughtless brutality in the masculine habit of taunting them with their weakness.

This miserable habit is conspicuous in the myths of all savage ages. Even the highly poetical account of the creation, in the book of Genesis, is tainted with it; a blotch that would disgust every person of decent refinement, but for the power of early education. Superstition can gild any abomination. Here we have it stated, as holy writ, that woman was a mere afterthought, an animated rib, so weak that a snake was too much for her reasoning faculty; and her Creator, seeing this weakness, after having created her to be the companion of man, found himself obliged to make her his slave, a doom that was afterwards abundantly confirmed in the Levitical Law.

Is it any wonder that men educated to believe this silly story as solemn truth should think a wife a mere costly appendage to a man, or that the wife, accepting such degradation, should become a very costly appendage?

I am well aware that the opponents of woman suffrage will say that all this is terribly blasphemous. I return the compliment. Without denying that some of the most precious wisdom and some of the noblest sentiment of the world has come down to us in the Hebrew Scriptures, I affirm, and appeal to the conscience of every reader, that blasphemy against both God and man has come down along with it. And, with the same appeal, I still further affirm, that the Greek Scriptures of the New Testament, with a still clearer and fuller statement of the great moral axioms that should govern human conduct, do intensify the blasphemy.

The Hebrews had a higher idea of God than most of the tribes of the earth at the same period; but they not only worshipped him in the sublime psalms of David, but in the bloody sacrifice of animals, under the essentially blasphemous imputation that the pardon of sins could be purchased by thus feeding him and his priests. In this they agreed with most other barbarous people. But as time rolled on, and the abuses of the ceremonial and sacrificial law rolled up, in the more enlightened minds the moral part of the law began to assert a mighty superiority to the sacrificial. There were earnest men who, while they dared not denounce the superstition of appeasing the wrath of the Almighty, by the blood of lambs and goats, thought it was better to try to prevent sin than to atone for it in so absurd and blasphemous a manner. They regarded these sacrifices as absolutely worthless except as an outward sign of inward penitence, and a public pledge of reform. Is it strange that one of those preachers of righteousness, full of the grand poems of Isaiah, should have supposed that God would stand by him if he headed the deluded people, and drove out of God's temple that corrupt hierarchy which was enriching itself by a blasphemous traffic in the victims of sacrifice? Is it strange that, when physically defeated, he should still have faith that God would rescue him from the jaws of a cruel death, and set up a kingdom through him, in which his worship should be purified? His simple disciples expected and waited for this, but it did not come. Nothing remained to them but the sermons and parables, which with a most pathetic earnestness they tried to put in practice among themselves.

Soon came a rather cosmopolitan Jew, a man of exceeding eloquence, brought up at the feet of the learned Gamaliel, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against this simple-hearted people. Is it any wonder that, having a human heart, it finally smote him? Is it any wonder that, being a consummate scholar in Jewish law, as well as so zealous for its dignity, he in his new state of mind invented the theory that the sacrifice of the paschal lamb was but a type of the sacrifice of an incarnate God, which was really to take away the sins of the world? Is it any wonder that this new view, dominating this world only in behalf of the kingdom of God in a future one, should in a great measure take the place of the Messianic idea?

Paul was the man to see his opportunity, and to see that the new superstition which had seized his soul was mighty enough to overturn the world. But it was and is a superstition, and as such has blasphemy as its foundation. It did not overthrow existing superstitions, but only absorbed the weaker ones into itself. The saving grace of the Sermon on the Mount only maintained its efficacy to counteract its immoral effects for two or three centuries at most. Then came the dark ages.

Paul decreed: "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak." This decree has never been expunged. Perhaps it was effective while Paul lived. He had not been dead, however, four hundred years, before a woman arose and spoke outside of the Church, whose learning, eloquence, and argument were more than a match for any of Paul's successors in the gospel ministry,—inasmuch that the monks of Alexandria, with the connivance, if not consent, of St. Cyril, the bishop or patriarch of the city, dragged her into a Christian church and murdered her. She, a follower of the martyred philosopher of Greece, argued against all superstitions in favor of the moral axioms underlying them,—that virtue cannot be vicarious; that neither God nor man can be justly punished for any sins but his own; and, above all things, that monasticism was unnatural, fanatical, and foolish. The monks tried to murder her memory as well as her person. But this woman who, in her freshest youth preferred to be the martyr of science and philosophy, rather than the belle of the most luxurious city in the world, stamped upon the highest minds of the age such an indelible conviction of her purity, that the Church was finally obliged to revamp and reverse the story of her martyrdom, and hand her down to posterity as the Christian Saint Catharine of Alexandria! Probably no pious Catholic now believes that Hypatia, the pagan monster of Alexandria, ever existed.

The late Canon Kingsley made this woman the subject of one of his novels, in which he allowed his imagination to make her character quite impossible as well as inconsistent with the few credible traits which have come down to us in history. And, in the Encyclopædia Britannica, he also speaks of her as "one of those whose names are glorified rather by wrongs than by merits; and had she not died, few would not know, and fewer care, whether she ever lived."—Had his eyes not been blinded by the prejudices of his cloth, he would have seen that this sentence was not only illiberal, but that it might be retorted with terrible emphasis upon the nominal author of the very religion of which he was a priest. The character of Hypatia rests upon the testimony of a contemporary Christian Bishop, Synesius, one of the most learned and trustworthy writers of his age, whose works in elegant Greek, translated into poor Latin, may be found in almost any large library.

Among his numerous epistles may be found many addressed to this "Mistress of Philosophy." In one of them he pleasantly calls her his "mother, sister, teacher (didaskalê); in another he seeks her sympathy in his affliction at the death of his children; in another he deprecates the violence of the times, and the bloody persecutions in which the Christians, then in the ascendancy in Egypt and Lybia, were indulging themselves; in another he seeks with the utmost deference her criticism on two works, one theological and the other philosophical, which he had been writing. She was to be the first to read them. This Christian Bishop confessed with shame that his own life was in danger because he thought it Christian to have charity towards a sincere opponent of Christianity, who had the courage to avow and defend her then unpopular opinions.

If it is now urged as a divine decree that women should keep silence, not speak, not vote, not meddle with politics, all I have to say is, the decree is impotent. The Ruler of this universe has never stood behind it, and never will. If there is now, in this age of the world, any intelligent man who maintains that there is any such decree, he does it simply out of regard to other widely-accepted dogmas, which he thinks must stand or fall with it; and which, though he does not himself believe them, he thinks others cannot disbelieve without danger to their morals. Here we have arrived at the fountain-head of modern demoralization—confidence in the false as the foundation of national morality, and want of confidence in the truth.

Do men really believe either in God or their own souls, who think the eternal verities of this universe would demoralize mankind if they should become known? Have people become more wicked since they learned that the planets revolve round the sun, and that every star is a sun? Has the microscope been a promoter of sin? Have human skulls, that must have had brains in them many hundreds of centuries before Adam, made anything false in the Bible which was true before they were found? Does a preacher of the Gospel inspire more respect than an honest infidel, after his hearers find out that he has beliefs and disbeliefs which he conceals from them out of regard to the soundness of their morals or the salvation of their souls?

After all, I come back to the point where I started. Though woman suffrage has thus far been almost untried in the world, it is the logical consequence of the Golden Rule, a rule sanctioned by all Bibles, and never practical without benefit. As long as our Bible contains that rule, it cannot be wholly rejected except by bad men. In fact, our Bible is like that of the ancient Sibyls, which the last of them sold to King Tarquin. He would not buy till she had burned up six of the volumes, and then paid her the same price for the remaining three as she had asked for the nine. Whether he made a good bargain or not, it certainly has become the opinion of many more men than will yet avow it, that a small part of the Christian Scriptures is worth a great deal more than the whole.

Very truly yours, ELIZUR WRIGHT.

IN SOME parts of Arabia the devil is called "Al-ghool," or "The Ghoul." May not our word "alcohol" be derived from this? The Maux name for the evil spirit is "Jouyll."

THE DOVER CHURCH DECISION.

With the exception of the "Bible in the Public Schools" case in Cincinnati, the most interesting ecclesiastical suit which for some time has come before the courts is that of Hale v. Everett, in New Hampshire. A great deal of the decision (a full copy of which has been issued by the State Reporter) turns on local provisions of the New Hampshire constitution and laws; but the main facts were these. Some years ago, Mr. F. E. Abbot, whose name will be recognized by many of our readers as that of the author of some clever metaphysical articles in the North American Review, but who is much more widely known now as the editor of THE INDEX, a radical Boston paper, was called to the pulpit of a Unitarian church in New Hampshire. THE INDEX prints every week a little platform headed, "The Demands of Liberalism," which are, 1st, that all ecclesiastical property shall be taxed; 2d, that the employment of chaplains in Congress and other public situations shall be discontinued; 3d, that all public appropriations to sectarian uses shall cease; 4th, that all Governmental religious services shall be abolished, especially the use of the Bible in the public schools; 5th, that the public appointment of fast and feast days shall cease; 6th, that all oaths be abolished; 7th, that laws for the observance of the Sabbath shall be repealed; 8th, that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty; 9th, that politics shall be secularized, and Christianity "or any other special religion" be deprived of all special privileges. THE INDEX counts among its "editorial contributors" persons of such widely different views as Mr. O. B. Frothingham, Mrs. E. D. Cheney, Rev. Charles Voysey, and Prof. Francis W. Newman; but we suppose the programme quoted above expresses the views of the editor-in-chief, and from them it clearly appears that he is not now a conservative. When he went to New Hampshire, however, to preach for "The First Unitarian Society of Christians in Dover," his attitude towards the Christian Church was less purely negative, for the court finds that at the time of his ordination he had two children baptized "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost"; and he appears to have "believed in Jesus Christ as the Messiah," and regarded his religion "as a revelation from God." This was in 1864, but from this time forward Mr. Abbot (to whom the court pays a high compliment on the score of the truthfulness and integrity of his character) gradually changed his religious views, becoming more and more radical, till April 1, 1868, when he resigned.

Towards the latter part of his ministry it appears that he voluntarily abandoned all connection with Christianity, making statements in sermons and other public ways to the effect that "Jesus Christ was like other men, with no more authority"; compared him with good men now living; said that he considered Christ a mere man, and fallible like other men; that Christ was not the Messiah; that if he believed himself to be the Messiah, he was mistaken; that the New Testament showed that Christ did claim to be the Messiah, but that he (Abbot) believed the Messiah had not come and would not come. He openly declared himself neither a Christian nor a Unitarian, announced his belief that Christianity was "merely one of many religions," each "partly true and partly false." He also declared that "humanity is its own Messiah," and that "religion has no more to do with Jesus than it has with Judas." From these extracts it appears, says the court, that the charge "that said Abbot was a progressive man, and that he changed his opinions from time to time," was true. In the course of Mr. Abbot's progress towards his present position he, of course, dissatisfied a great many of his congregation, and the members finally split into two parties, both of which naturally desired to get hold of the church property. An independent society was organized which desired to retain Mr. Abbot; this they proposed substantially to do by hiring him to preach, and swallowing up the church organization in their own. Certain members, however, protesting against it, brought a bill in equity against the wardens of the society and others, praying for an injunction; and this they got, the Supreme Court holding that the church property being held in trust for a "Christian Unitarian Church" could only be used to support Christian Unitarian worship; that the doctrines preached by Abbot were subversive of Christianity and Unitarianism. An injunction, which we take to be somewhat novel in form, was issued forbidding the society to hire, employ, allow, suffer, or permit Francis E. Abbot, or any other person, to preach and inculcate in the meeting-house of the society doctrines subversive of the fundamental principles of Christianity, as generally received and holden by the denomination of Christians known as Unitarians; or "to employ, suffer, or permit to preach in said meeting-house any person who rejects Christianity altogether; or who teaches that, as a system of religion, Christianity is partly true and partly false; or who preaches or inculcates a disbelief in the doctrine of the Lordship and Messiahship of Jesus Christ, as taught by him in the New Testament Scriptures, or a disbelief in Jesus Christ as the great head of the Church, or of his divine mission and authority as a religious teacher, as thus taught by him; or who preaches and inculcates a denial of the doctrine that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments do contain a divine revelation given by inspiration of God, and containing a sufficient and perfect rule of faith and practice."—New York Nation, March 25, 1875.

SWEDENBORG describes certain spirits who fancied they were in heaven, when they really were in hell.

LATE NEWS FROM DOVER.

DOVER, N. H., March 19, 1875.

The Unitarian church in this city is one of the oldest of the denomination in New England, and it has a historical record of exceeding interest on account of its age and position. The society was organized in 1827, the church built in 1828, and dedicated Feb. 18, 1829, forty-six years ago. It was one of the first if not the first society formed under the law of 1827 or 1828, authorizing the formation of societies for religious "Christian" worship, and on such a basis it was conducted until 1864, and has been since 1869. Among its original members were many leading and influential citizens and families of Southeastern New Hampshire, whose names are prominent in the history of the State. The church edifice still stands, a large brick structure on Locust Street, and pleasantly situated. In 1871 it was partially remodelled inside, frescoed and painted, newly carpeted, stained glass windows put in, and the whole auditorium made very attractive, which work was soon paid for, through the energetic labors of the society, the ladies doing a liberal share. For many years this society was one of the most flourishing in this city, but during the past few years it has been reduced in numbers, and the burden has fallen heavily on a few of the wealthier members.

The first sermon preached to the society was by the sainted Rev. Henry Ware, Jr., of Boston, in 1827, in the old Court House, now standing on the corner of Pleasant and Court Streets, opposite the New Hampshire House. The first pastor was Rev. Dr. S. K. Lothrop, of Boston, who was ordained at the same time the dedication took place, in 1829. His successors have been Rev. Edgar Buckingham, Rev. John Parkman, Rev. Henry F. Bond, Rev. Edwin M. Wheelock, Rev. Francis E. Abbot, and Rev. Thomas W. Brown, the present worthy and able incumbent. During Rev. Mr. Parkman's absence in Europe in 1846-8 Rev. Dr. Thompson, of Barre, and Rev. William P. Tilden were acting pastors.

Like most churches it has had its successes and reverses, and has done great good in this community; but at the time of Mr. Abbot's ministrations, 1864-9, its severest troubles began, owing to his theistical and anti-Christian views and preaching. The division in the society between the extreme radicals and liberal Christians was severe and sharp, eliciting the earnest interest of all denominations throughout the country. The leading divines of the Unitarian denomination became actively interested in the contest. The pew-owners and regular attendants mainly composed the liberal Christian party. By the accession of new signers of the parish book the Abbot party obtained possession.

A temporary injunction was granted by the Supreme Court restraining the Abbot party from possession, use, and occupancy of the church, which injunction, after full and interesting hearings, some of the ablest Unitarians appearing, was made permanent, and the church reverted to "the regulars," and has remained in their possession ever since. Rev. Thomas W. Brown, of Sandwich, Mass., a native of Plymouth, was soon afterward settled as pastor, and has been to them a most worthy shepherd. But the prodigals have not, very many of them, returned, and the present business depression has also affected the society, and whether it will continue or not is uncertain. The annual meeting occurs on Monday, March 29, when definite action will be taken.

Outside of any denominational view, the case is one in which Christians of all denominations are interested. The pastor, Mr. Brown, is in many respects of the Rev. Dr. A. P. Peabody school, under whose ministry at Portsmouth he was brought up, and they are strong friends. Rev. Dr. Peabody has always regarded the Dover Church as next in his heart to his dear old Portsmouth Church. Mr. Brown believes in and preaches Christ the Savior a divinely inspired Master, and he exchanges with some of the Evangelical ministers of this section of the State, by whom he is most warmly regarded. This Unitarian church, therefore, being established on a Christian basis, should be sustained, because of its nearly half century age, its historic interest, its valiant and successful vindication of Christianity, and it is only because of the "extreme modesty" of the church managers that an appeal for aid has not been made. To close up this aged and worthy church would be a great calamity to the cause of Christian religion, and afford "the red radicals" extreme rejoicing. The co-operation of liberal and wealthy Christians, therefore, would resuscitate and restore the good old church to its pristine activity and prosperity.—"S," in the Boston Journal of March 22, 1875.

[The statement that—"by the accession of new signers of the parish books the Abbot party obtained possession"—is untrue: a majority of the old society favored the new movement. Much is discreetly omitted which would put quite a different face on the above account of events in 1868.—ED.]

THE BIBLE QUESTION IN TOLEDO.

In Toledo, Ohio, the Board of Education have been bringing themselves into public notice by a discussion on the Bible in the public schools. At a meeting in last May, as we learn from the Toledo Review, a certain Mr. Cone introduced the following resolution, to be acted upon at the first full meeting of the board:—

Resolved, That reading from any version of a book, commonly known as the Bible; the singing of hymns, commonly known as religious hymns; and the religious act, commonly known as prayer,—shall not hereafter be any part of the exercise in any of the schools under the control of the Board, and are hereby prohibited.

The Review adds:—

A full meeting took place on Tuesday, and the question was flippantly discussed. Mr. Hill remarked in his speech that, for twenty-four years, he had been connected with the public schools, and during that time he had never known of a pupil being withdrawn on account of the reading of the Bible, or by reason of any other exercise of a religious nature.

This unfounded statement was sanctioned by Mr. McGreevy, a Catholic member of the Board, who, if he be reported correctly in the Commercial, said "that no sectarianism had been introduced in the schools. There was liberty for everybody to believe and act as they pleased. All of his children had received their education at the public schools. They were reared as Catholics, and their religion or their religious opinions had never been changed or interfered with in the least."

This assertion of the evidently nominal Catholic McGreevy calls forth some comments from the able pen of Mr. Carr, editor of the Review, in which the imitator of Mayor Keiley is informed that Protestantism pure and undiluted is taught in the Toledo schools, and hence the Bible and the hymns. But the incisive lancet of the Review seems to have lost its usual edge when it touches so lightly McGreevy's assertion that the religion or "religious opinions" of his children had never been changed or been interfered with. Perhaps McGreevy is one of those Catholics who knows so little about his church as not to know that Catholics have no "religious opinions." Protestants always have "opinions," and have nothing else. But Catholics have faith, certainty, and conviction, but no "opinions." Parents who send their children to the public schools are usually utterly incompetent to say whether their children have suffered in faith or not; for if their own faith had the ring of the true metal in it, their children would never have been exposed in the seminaries of godlessness. "Playing" Catholic is easy enough before a non-Catholic audience, but Catholics, properly so-called, can quickly detect the shams and frauds. Let us compare this to another case. In New York there is a "society for the prevention of cruelty to children." This society is at present asking the legislature for laws and police power similar to Bergh's "for prevention of cruelty to animals." Suppose McGreevy were charged by such a society with sending his children to school to the nurse of a pest-house in which the small-pox was raging, could he defend the persecution by saying the disease had not broken out on his children? If he made such a plea it would be replied to him very justly: (1.) It may break out at any moment. The disease remains in the system a long time before manifesting itself externally. (2.) You do not seem to know the disease when you see it, hence cannot say whether it has broken out or not. (3.) And even if your children did not catch the disease, you did all in your power to make them catch it, and the "cruelty is the same." We apprehend "the society" would "get" McGreevy in the small-pox case, all his corkscrew logic and "opinions" to the contrary notwithstanding. The trouble with such skin-deep Catholics as McGreevy, "and their name is legion," is that they have no faith "to talk of" in anything that cannot come under the cognizance of their five senses. As to heaven and the things of eternity, the most that can be said of them is they don't disbelieve their existence, but their belief in them isn't "worth a cent." But McGreevy's pastor gets after him in the Review. We extract the closing comment, which may be useful to somebody:

"If Mr. McGreevy's children have attended the public schools without any detriment to their religion, he may thank God who had given his children such a religious 'turn of mind' that nothing could change. If any Catholic father can boast that his children have steered clear of the dangers that menaced their purity and honesty in all its variety of shapes, while attending the common school, he may well congratulate them on having performed a feat vainly attempted by thousands of others.

"When Mr. McGreevy sets up his disobedience of the authorities of his church as an example for others to follow, when he substantially says the efforts of his pastor to keep up Catholic schools are made to support an unnecessary thing, then we tell Mr. McGreevy that his example is pernicious and not to be followed by good Catholics."—Catholic Advocate, Louisville, Ky., Jan. 28, 1875.

WE HAVE repeatedly asserted that Mormonism was based on the Bible, and consequently was an adjunct of Christianity; but our Orthodox friends stoutly deny the fact. We have before us an autograph letter of Brigham Young, the head of the Mormon Church, which settles the question pretty effectually. The letter is dated—

"SALT LAKE CITY, Utah Territory, }
"August 10, 1869."

"Dear Sir.—Yours of the 28th ult. has been received. . . With regard to the Book of Mormon, what it is, and how to procure a copy of it, I will briefly say, that it is not what many suppose it to be—the Bible of the Latter-day-Saints. The Bible of Christianity is the Bible of the Latter-day-Saints. The Book of Mormon is a history of the aborigines of the American continent—much as the Old Testament is a history of the Jews; it was translated by the gift and power of God, and is really the most extraordinary work extant. The Latter-day-Saints believe in it, because it is truth, and they very generally bear witness of their knowledge of this fact. . .

"Yours with respect, BRIGHAM YOUNG."
—Banner of Light.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

BEFORE A STATUE.

BY S. H. MORSE.

Silent and cold and motionless it stands,
Clasps the white drapery with bloodless hands.
Fain would I question, could those firm lips speak:—
"What news of him whose radiant form thou art?
Hold'st in thy marble cells the tale I seek,
The long-lost, hidden, sacred record true
Of a soul's life the blind old world ne'er knew?
What secret in thy solid, pulseless heart
Thou wilt disclose? Wilt not reveal thyself?
As all men's else, so thy desire was pelf?
Had'st thou no wit with strange, proud mien to scorn
The things that perish all, and ill adorn?
—Rebuked, I read on thy grave chiselled brow
The answer modest lips will not avow."

THE FAT MISSIONARY.

It was all in a fore-and-aft schooner
That he sailed to that far countree;
And, according to Captain Simonson,
It was beautiful for to see
How warmly those heathens welcomed him,
And how grateful they seemed to be;
And how, in their simple, innocent way,
They patted him, now on his knee,
And now on his cheek, and now on his chin,
And, in short, made only too free
With the Reverend Oleus Bacon,
As was sent upon a mission
To the islands near Feejee.

But I have an affidavit
Captain Simonson took afore me
(And Simonson is a Christian name),
How standin' that night on his lee,
And a-swearin' up his canvas
All ready to put to sea,
He noticed a fire on the island
As was burnin' remarkably free;
But he had no idea those devils
Were a-makin' a fricassee
Of the Reverend Oleus Bacon,
As was sent upon a mission
To the islands near Feejee.

But so it turned out; and therefore I say,
As Simonson said to me,
If the Board of Foreign Missions
Had any eyes for to see,
They'd never have sent a man out there
A missionary for to be,
The make of whose person was tempting
In the very least degree;
Or one as was anyways bulgy at all,
Still less, one as bulgy as he;
This Reverend Oleus Bacon,
As was sent upon a mission
To the islands near Feejee.

However, the Lord was in it,
At least, so it seems to me;
Or something was in Mr. Bacon
As didn't at all agree
With the stomachs of those heathen men,
But made 'em throw up quite free.
And I happen to know what that something was;
It was cavendish and rappee!
Nevertheless, it was something unfortunate,
As most any man may see,
That the Reverend Oleus Bacon
Ever started on that mission
To the islands near Feejee.

—Washington Capital.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 3.

W. M. Wood, 10 cents; Harvey Grinnell, $2; Herbert Foote, $2; A. Walther, Jr., $3.20; J. W. Griffin, $1; J. C. Fargo, $1.60; A. Farnsworth, 50 cents; J. J. Bagley, $3.20; Wm. Gill, $3; J. L. Wilson, 20 cents; R. McIntosh, $3.20; B. Cobb, Jr., $1.20; H. Duhme, $3.20; A. B. Baxter & Son, $3.20; E. B. Welch, $3.20; N. P. Gilman, $3.20; Wm. Wickersham, $3; D. Bloodgood, 75 cents; C. H. Newcomer, $4; G. H. Foster, 45 cents; J. P. Cooke, 25 cents; Dr. Wigglesworth, $3; A. K. Loring, 24 cents; John Beanham, $1.20; C. D. Wileman, $3.20; S. S. Hunting, $3.20; Isaac Ketcham, $3.20; L. A. Duhring, $3.20; Thos. Lamery, $1.60; Cary Bros., $13; H. A. Dean, $16.40; W. H. Simmons, $3.20; Frank Cheney, $1.20; C. H. Brown, $3.20; Enoch Plummer, $3.20; J. H. Stiles, $3.20; A. D. Oneal, $1; H. B. Murdock, 75 cents; Collins Eaton, $1; S. J. Avery, $3; J. F. McCarthy, $1; C. Hendee, $1.50; B. C. Farrot, 75 cents; John Meyer, 75 cents; Jackson & Davidson, 75 cents; Isaiah Pillars, $1.60; J. E. Richie, $3.20; H. G. Hadsell, $1; John A. Dunton, $1.50; Cash, 30 cents; Jas. Ramsden, $1; W. J. Carleton, $1.45; H. C. Buchanan, 50 cents; P. Fahrney, 50 cents; E. F. Hassinger, 75 cents; A. T. Wheelock, 10 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 8, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD F. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

SUNDAY LECTURES.—The Editors of THE INDEX will lecture occasionally on Sundays, if desired, within a convenient distance of Boston.

TO CONTRIBUTORS.—Please do not ask whether your articles will be printed; we cannot tell on receiving them, but must be guided by circumstances. Many more are sent than the paper will hold, and somebody has to be disappointed; but we always mean to print from week to week the best on hand. Also, please do not ask to have the manuscripts returned. Either keep a copy, or do not send at all. Notwithstanding our regularly published rule on this point, we are constantly annoyed by requests to return articles not used. It will be a great favor if occasional contributors will attend to this notice.

ARE WE CIVILIZED IN BOSTON?

The case of the boy-murderer, Jesse Pomeroy, who is now under sentence in this city to be hanged for the horribly mutilating and killing of a child, is exciting no ordinary degree of interest in the minds of the people of this community. The youth of the boy, the almost unparalleled disposition to cruelty evinced in the torturing of his still more youthful victim, in addition to the fact of his being known to have shockingly tortured and mutilated other children, besides being suspected of having murdered at least one other child, and all apparently without cause,—these circumstances taken together combine to make his case certainly one of the most remarkable ever known in the history of crime, and sufficiently warrant the extraordinary interest which so generally has been manifested in it from the beginning. At last convicted by a jury, and sentenced by the court to the extreme penalty of the law, Jesse now awaits in jail his doom; and, unless the competent authorities of the State should intervene, he will before long be hung by the neck, until he himself, too, shall be dead!

In the meantime, public interest in Jesse's case is manifesting itself in the way of appeals to the Executive for and against the commutation of his sentence. The Governor, in deference to the recommendation of the jury, is disposed to entertain the idea of interposing his official clemency to mitigate the rigor of the outraged law which now in turn seeks Jesse's life. But not a few of the respectable citizens of Boston are besieging vigorously the ear of the Executive with clamors that he shall do no such thing. Learned physicians, and educated men and women (presumably parents) have petitioned the Governor that this boy's sentence be not commuted. To suffer him to live, they say, is to endanger the lives of other children in this community, who—were he eventually to be set free by pardon—would be liable to become the further victims of his strange disposition to torture and kill. The only safe course to pursue with him now, they argue, is to take advantage of our present opportunity to kill him under sanction of State authority; to check his career utterly by putting him clean out of existence, by means of the Christian and civilized invention of hanging. A few there are, we know not how many, who venture to suggest that possibly something else may be done with Jesse Pomeroy, which will render it just as safe for society and much better for him, as if he were sent without mercy and without wisdom to the gallows.

I confess that I am of this last number. But, while thus confessing, I utterly disclaim being a sentimentalist on the subject of taking human life under any conceivable circumstance. Given a case in which were established the clear necessity of doing so, and I certainly could not oppose any objection on the score of its absolute inviolableness. I believe that I have the natural right to defend myself; and, if my life were put in jeopardy from the attack of a ferocious beast or a ferocious man, I should not hesitate in self-defence to take the life of either. According to my view, society has the same right to the same extent. If a mad dog were rushing through the streets, imperilling the life of every passer-by, society without compunction would shoot the animal. With as little compunction might it take the life of any mad man (morally or mentally mad) who was endangering the lives of many others, when to do so were the absolutely expedient or necessary course to be pursued.

The right, then, to take human life, either on the part of the individual or society, is based upon absolute expediency or necessity. In no other case is it justifiable; and every such case should be clear and unmistakable. For it should be borne in mind that society owes protection to all its members—bad as well as good, disturbers as well as pacificators. A man by becoming a criminal of whatever class does not necessarily forfeit his right to the protection of society; for it not only owes him protection to the extent of his merits, but also to the extent of its own responsibility for his demerits. No man is bad on his own responsibility merely; all other men are partly responsible for his badness. He is bad, not alone in consequence of what is in him, but partly in consequence of what is in the society of which he is an outcome. Therefore, when society finds that any one of its members has become a criminal, it should blame itself as well as him for such a result. Its conduct towards him should have not the slightest element of anger or retaliation in it, but should be a wise behavior looking to his speedy and complete recovery, no less than to the welfare of all.

Now, in the case of Jesse Pomeroy, society cannot ignore its responsibility for his crime, black and fearful as it is. He is but a mere youth, and yet an extraordinary criminal. How does it happen that he is worse than the average boy of his years? Is it because he deliberately and wilfully chose to be so? When asked why he killed his little playmate, his reply was: "I couldn't help it." The people of Boston, of Massachusetts, are bound to consider well that pathetic answer, before they make haste to kill him!

The question is, Is Jesse Pomeroy responsible for his crime? Is he responsible, in the first instance, for having been born? Is he responsible, in the second place, for having been born with such a peculiar temperament and disposition as he plainly derived from heredity? If the State assume now to hang such as he, and to do it with cool deliberation, let it consider if it be not its duty to begin farther back, and to prevent the conception and birth of such as he. Why should it not carry its assumed authority a little further, and say (as Plato long ago suggested) to such men and women as are physically, intellectually, and morally fit, "You may become parents;" and to such others as are not fit, "You may not"? Better thus, it would seem, for the State to prevent the birth of criminals, than to kill them after they are born!

But if the State reluctant at the exercise of such prenatal authority (as, I think, it well may), then let it have every manner of institution for the education, training, and development of every species of child born. Let it spend everything for education, and nothing for punishment; everything to perfect life, and nothing to destroy it. Let it not only have the ordinary schools and colleges (more of them and better), institutions for the education of the blind, the deaf and dumb, the imbeciles; for the curing of the insane and the physically diseased,—but let it also have institutions where those with moral maladies, such as Jesse Pomeroy, may go and be trained with the wisest training; a training which shall give sure promise of eventual recovery and cure.

Neither Massachusetts nor Boston has any such scientific, moral-education school, officered with skilled, scientific men and women, to which it can humanely and safely send Jesse Pomeroy. But, instead, they have a gibbet to which some fine day this spring they propose to drag this poor boy more sinned against than sinning; and, in the presence of sympathizing reporters and other privileged persons, to put a rope round his neck, and deliberately choke him to death! And then all the fathers and mothers of this city propose to feel safe and secure as to the lives of their children!

If the people of Boston consent thus to the murder of this defenceless boy, whom now they wholly have in their power, the time will come when they will be as thoroughly ashamed of it as now they are that Quakers were once whipped through these streets, and four of them hung on the Common. We cannot call ourselves civilized, when such barbarous things are done in our midst. And for us to acknowledge that we know of no better way, or that we have no better way, of dealing with Jesse Pomeroy except to hang him on the gibbet till he is dead, is, in my opinion, to confess that our boasted civilization is a failure.

A. W. S.

THE CATHOLIC POSITION.

The New York Tablet, a well-known, ably-conducted, and very decided Catholic paper, devotes two columns of a late issue (March 27th) to a notice of "Dr. Frothingham's" recent sermon on "Conscience" under Rome and under Reason. The reviewer pays unnecessarily high compliment to the "learned Dr.," as it styles him, but is entirely dissatisfied with his discourse. This was to be expected. Apparently it will never be possible for Romanists and Rationalists to come to an understanding. The fault is, perhaps, on the side of the Rationalist, as much as on that of the Romanist. If the latter cannot disabuse himself of the prejudice that the former is unfair, the former finds it difficult to divest his mind of the opinion that the latter is uncandid.

The discourse in question was prepared with all the care the author could give it, and was intended to be scrupulously just. Yet the Tablet complains of "misstatement which forms the great body of the discourse." The writer is accused of attributing to Catholics a doctrine respecting conscience that has never been held, and has been repeatedly disavowed. If we may take the reviewer's word for it, the doctrine of the Church is in no wise different from that held by earnest radicals. The preacher of the sermon, having quoted a remarkable passage from a recent letter of Dr. Newman, in the Gladstone controversy, said: "This sounds like the speech of a Rationalist. It might proceed from an advocate of the extremest doctrine of freedom. Hearing 'it, one is tempted to exclaim: There is on this point no controversy between Rome and reason!" There is none, says the critic, intimating that the surprise is quite uncalled for. It is unjust, he declares, to suspect Dr. Newman of reserve, equivocation, or the least want of frankness: "Dr. Newman neither intimates, nor does the Church intimate, any tribunal higher than conscience itself, at which it must render an account." "Does he [Mr. Frothingham] not know that the priest [in the confessional] has no right to impose his opinion upon a penitent who holds an opposite opinion?" The preacher, alluding to a very strong statement on this subject contained in a letter from a Catholic priest, which was printed some months since in THE INDEX, said: "According to some Catholic teachers, an invincibly erroneous conscience, when dictating what is positively wrong, must be followed under pain of sin." "Not only some, but all teach this," is the rejoinder of the critic. The sermon contained extracts from published lectures by Archbishop Manning, in which the doctrine of Rome's supremacy over conscience seemed to be set forth in language as plain as English speech permitted. Even to this the undaunted reviewer replies: "In all the texts from Dr. Manning and others by which it is attempted to substantiate this interpretation of the Catholic doctrine regarding conscience, he cannot show what he wishes, and no doubt believes, to be the teaching of the Church on this point." An age of conundrums is not a pleasant age to live in.

If the assertions of the reviewer are to be taken as sincere, and as representing intelligent Catholic opinion, why is it not apprehended? Why this perpetual misunderstanding, so dangerous, so hateful, so harmful to the dearest interests of society, if a few frank and honest words of plain truth can correct it all? Whose fault is it that a bitter but needless warfare divides Christendom, threatening every now and then to issue in blows and blood? If Rome and reason (as Rationalists apprehend reason) are in full accord on this most vital matter, let it be understood, in order that, so far at least, hostile parties may be reconciled.

A friend who had been educated at a Catholic college in the vicinity of New York assures me that the Tablet does, in this doctrine of the supremacy of conscience, represent the approved sentiment of educated Catholics. On being asked why nobody but "educated Catholics" understood it, he replied that it was not taught to the common people. But why it should not be taught is one of the unaccountable things. It can hardly be expected that what is only taught at Catholic colleges should be learned by those who do not go there. A church is judged by its exoteric, not by its esoteric, doctrines. And while the Catholic Church, under any form, by any action, by any implication, permits so damaging a misunderstanding to exist in the minds of intelligent people, it must take the consequences of antipathy that will not be appeased, and of hostility that will not be disarmed.

O. B. F.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—By the time this letter gets into your columns, the controversy between yourself and the Rev. M. J. Savage on "Christianity" will very likely be closed, though, let us hope, not forgotten. There can be little doubt that the disputants on this great point of debate are clearing the ground for a vast campaign in which the whole of Christendom will take part. I will not presume to aid you in your attack and defence, for the spectacle of your skill and prowess is far too delightful to be spoiled by officious interference. I do not quite agree with your definition of "religion," but I consider you to be quite unanswerable in your reiterated assertion that "Christianity" is what the mass of Christians say it is, and not what the small minority say it ought to be.

However, I want to attack—in a most friendly spirit—our opponent Mr. Savage on my own account. I hope he will give me credit for admiring and reverencing Jesus Christ quite as much, and for the same reasons, as he admires and reverences him. I could reasonably demur to his definition of the "essentials of Christianity"; but for the sake of argument I will accept it, and for the present assume that these "essentials" are the "central teachings of Jesus, together with the relations in which he set them; and secondly the life-impulse he gave the world."

Both Mr. Savage and myself have but one source of information as to the teachings and life of Jesus—namely, the New Testament; and it would be in the highest degree illogical to accept some portions of these writings and to reject others, except on good evidence that the latter were interpolations or corruptions of the original text.

Now I maintain that, if Orthodoxy quotes, as it has ever quoted, certain sayings attributed to Jesus in support of dogmas which Christians deem essential to Christianity, we have no right to deny that they are Christian dogmas, nor can we with justice define as a Christianity that which shall exclude them.

As Mr. Savage and most of your readers know their New Testament, I need not quote at length whole passages, but will only do so, if called upon. I will only remind them of the following facts.

1. The Church of Rome continually reverts to the giving of the keys of heaven and hell by Jesus to Peter, as the pillar and ground of the truth.

2. High-Churchmen maintain the necessity of baptism for salvation on the ground of Jesus Christ's own words, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

3. All "Christians" (pace Mr. Savage) argue the doctrine of the Trinity from the Baptismal formula given by Jesus to his disciples. It is further supported by his Trinitarian conversation with his disciples shortly before his last supper. (See John xiv., xv., xvi.)

The atonement is also extensively supported by passages from the same book.

Moreover, the final separation of mankind into "the saved" and "the lost" rests upon the well-known parable of the sheep and the goats, and several other direct assertions of eternal condemnation.

The odious doctrines of Calvin—namely, Predestination and Election—are clearly taught in the fourth gospel. And not even Mr. Savage, I presume, will have the hardihood to deny that Jesus believed in the devil and his angels, and regarded some of his fellow-men who reviled him as children of the devil.

Minor points (as regards doctrine, though not minor as regards morals) are also based upon the New Testament record of the sayings of Christ: e.g., celibacy and eunuchism, mendicancy and devoteism, all rest on the recorded example and teaching of Jesus; his disregard of family ties has been quoted a thousand times over in the history of the Church in support of the wickedness of denouncing parents or children or brothers and sisters as heretics. His rebuke of poor, industrious, and thoughtful Martha, and his praise of the idle, sentimental Mary, have been perpetually used to exalt "religious devotions" and to depreciate homely duties.

Now if all these distinctive features of doctrine and practice are not "Christian," what in the name of language shall we call them? And, when they are added up, they cover nearly the whole ground of Christianity. I say nearly, for I will admit with Mr. Savage that even Orthodoxy professes to include "Love to God and love to man" as part of its system.

But this part is strikingly the feature of other religions besides Christianity. It is essentially the religion of the modern Jews, and is to be found embedded in the Jewish Scriptures, and even beneath the incrustation of Levitical law. It was the religion of Confucius; and the second half of it, at all events, was the religion of the founder of Buddhism. Mohammed, though posterior to Christ, can claim the same as the chief part of his religion.

It seems to me that the more we admit Jesus to have been one of the greatest and best teachers of this religion of love, the less right we have to call it Christianity; for the teachings which Jesus added to it, and which form the basis of Christian Orthodoxy, were utterly rejected by the Jewish people, while they retained the religion of love as their own possession and inheritance—the birthright of their nation, and not the monopoly of the prophet of Nazareth.

In short, what was best in the religion of Jesus was what he inherited as a Jew, and what was most erroneous in it became, and has ever since been known as, Christianity. Jesus, it is true, fulfilled other functions as a prophet and reformer, and the Jews of his day sorely needed some of his rebukes; but this excellence leaves untouched the main point I have tried to establish.

Our opponent will find himself on the horns of this dilemma. If the New Testament be so untrustworthy that the Christians have no right to build upon it their Orthodox dogmas, neither has Mr. Savage any right to build upon it his estimate of Jesus as the most illustrious preacher of the religion of love. If, on the other hand, the testimony of the New Testament be worth anything at all, it gives the strongest possible support to the dogmas of Orthodox Christianity.

Like you, sir, I must admire the vigor and straightforwardness of Mr. Savage's essay; and have no fear of his shuffling away, like some of his brethren, in a cloud of dust. I hope we shall hear more from him.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., March 15, 1875.

WE FEAR DEATH, as children fear to go in the dark; and, as that natural fear in children is increased with tales, so is the other. Certainly, the contemplation of death as the wages of sin and the passage to another world, is holy and religious; but the fear of it, as a tribute due unto Nature, is weak. Yet in religious meditations, there is sometimes a mixture of vanity and of superstition. You shall read in some of the friars' books of mortification, that a man should think with himself, what the pain is, if he have but his fingers' ends pressed or tortured, and thereby imagine what the pains of death are when the whole body is corrupted and dissolved; when many times death passeth with less pain than the torture of a limb; for the most vital parts are not the quickest of sense. And by him that spake only as a philosopher, and natural man, it was well said, "The pomp of death is more feared than death itself." Groans and convulsions, and a discolored face, and friends weeping, and blacks, and obsequies, and the like, show death terrible.

It is worthy the observing, that there is no passion in the mind of man so weak, but it mates and masters the fear of death; and therefore death is no such terrible enemy, when a man hath so many attendants about him that can win the combat of him. Revenge triumphs over death; love slights it; honor aspireth to it; grief flieth to it; fear, preoccupied it; nay, we read, after Otho the Emperor had slain himself, pity, which is the tenderest of affections, provoked many to die, out of mere compassion to their sovereign, and as the truest sort of followers. . . . It is as natural to die as to be born; and to a little infant, perhaps, the one is as painful as the other. He that dies in an earnest pursuit, is like one that is wounded in hot blood; who, for the time, scarce feels the hurt; and therefore a mind fixed and bent upon somewhat that is good doth avert the dolors of death; but above all, believe it, the sweetest canticle is, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace."—Lord Bacon.

SYDNEY SMITH likened some complaints against the political intrusiveness of the dissenters of his day to the behavior of a highwayman, who, having battered with a bludgeon some harmless wayfarer, grumbles that his victim has spattered him with his blood, and is pestering him with his groans.

Literary Notices.

TAXATION OF WOMEN IN MASSACHUSETTS. By Wm. I. Bowditch. Cambridge: Press of John Wilson and Son. 1875.

A masterly argument this in favor of Woman's Rights! In some seventy welcome pages, Mr. Bowditch has given us an eloquent intercession in behalf of one of the most vital social interests that can come before any jury of common sense, courtesy, or impartial justice. It is a complete and searching plea, in favor of the rights, claims, and responsibilities of woman as a citizen; a thorough setting forth of her social right and title to the privilege of suffrage, and of the injustice of her taxation without that corresponding privilege. It amazes us that as a community we are so slow to recognize the rights thus ably advocated.

The plea in this case is based mainly upon the fundamental idea (implied, if not clearly recognized, in the letter and purport of our State and general constitution) that the term "citizen" includes properly women as well as men; and that, when we speak of "the people," we mean the inhabitants of a city, town, or country, without distinction of sex.

Notwithstanding this implied recognition of the rights of woman as a citizen, Mr. Bowditch goes on to show, and does show very clearly, that this right is constantly and shamefully ignored in all our political and civil arrangements. "It seems clear," says he, "that the entire government of the State, in all its branches, executive, legislative, and judicial, or, in other words, that the entire power of making, interpreting, and executing all the laws which are to affect the persons and property of every woman in the State, is exclusively vested in male citizens or their appointees. If they please to allow woman to be appointed on school committees, they may do so,—it is an act of grace and favor; but the women themselves, though declared capable of performing the duties of the office, are nevertheless deemed incapable of voting for persons even of their own sex to perform such duties. How few of us realize the injustice of this condition of things! By the last United States census (1870), the total population of the State is declared to be 1,457,351 persons; and of these only 312,770 are male citizens. According to our Declaration of Rights, the 'sole and exclusive right of governing themselves' is vested in the people; and yet, under our laws, more than three-quarters of the people are entirely disfranchised and have no voice whatever in determining who shall govern them or by what laws their rights of person and property shall be protected."

So, also, the organization of the general government, as well as that of the State, is alike unfavorable to woman. The Senate of the United States is composed of two members from each State chosen by the Legislature thereof. "So long, therefore, as these Legislatures shall continue to be chosen only by male citizens, so long will the United States Senate really represent only male citizens." "No woman, whatever her qualifications for holding office may be, has any right to hold any office which male citizens are legally bound to respect. Who would imagine that this condition of things could exist under a constitution which professes upon its face to be framed by 'the people,' and to be designed in an especial manner to establish justice and insure domestic tranquillity?" "The key-note of our Declaration of Independence is that 'governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.' This great idea, 'the consent of the governed,' is the one upon which the whole structure of our government is theoretically built."

From this point the writer proceeds, by a multitude of statistics and figures, to show how our own Congress in these later days has been doing the same acts of tyranny towards the women of our country which once characterized the conduct of England towards us, and how towards the people generally, including of course that disfranchised class, the women, their acts have been burdensome and oppressive. "It is perfectly safe, therefore," he continues, "for me to say that Congress taxes the women of Massachusetts millions of dollars every year. According to our Declaration of Independence they have no just right so to do, unless the women have consented to be thus taxed. Without such consent the mere act of taxation by itself alone is conclusive evidence of 'absolute tyranny,' on the part of Congress, as much as any of those acts which the Continental Congress could urge against King George and Parliament. When have the women given consent to any such taxation? Never by any vote of their own! Nobody, indeed, has ever dreamed of asking them to say whether they consented or not. Never by their representatives, for the best of all reasons; they have not the slightest power to choose representatives to act for them in reference to this or any other personal or political rights." (P. 13.)

In the course of his further researches as to facts illustrative of woman's continued wrongs, Mr. Bowditch has, with a rare diligence, canvassed the whole State, sending circulars to every city and town to ascertain in what proportion the State or general tax was borne by woman. The result was that, out of some 340 places to which he so sent, 161 gave returns showing that, of the aggregate twenty millions and a half or more there paid within the time specified, $1,955,838, or 95 per cent., was paid by women, who have no right of suffrage. "We may, therefore," he says, "from these and other returns, consider it as clearly proved that the women of the State, taken as a whole, pay certainly one-eleventh, and probably one-tenth or even more, of all the tax property in the State." Proceeding with still further details and statistics of figures for which we have here no room, he makes it out very clearly that in every city and town throughout the State the women are paying every year an amount of money in taxes far exceeding what the men pay, and for which they receive no equivalent by any civil right.

But look at a few cases only of this inequality, as reported by our friend Bowditch. For instance, he says: "Each of the 7,214 women taxed in Boston paid an average of $179, or the equivalent of 89 polls; and together they paid more than nine times as much as was paid by the 88,415 men in the city, who only paid a poll-tax, and more than ninety times as much as was paid by the 7,032 poll-tax voters who no doubt elected Governor Gaston. There were 3 women in Newton who paid more tax than 2,034 men in that city. In Shrewsbury there were 116 men who only paid a poll-tax, and one woman alone there paid twice as much as the whole of them. In Brookline there were 921 who paid a poll-tax only, and one woman in that town paid more than three times, and another more than six times, as much tax as was paid by the whole of these 921 men. Now these figures we take at random from two full pages of similar statistics, and we can only say, Shame on us that such things should be!"

But look at another important matter illustrative of our gross disregard of "woman's rights." I quote again from the pamphlet: "There are 92 scholarships in Harvard College for the aid of poor students; the total income is about $21,000. It was a man who planned 22 of these scholarships, which yield more than one-quarter of the income derived from the whole 92; but the money by which they were established came, in point of fact, from a woman tax-payer. No young woman of the State, no matter how scholarly she may be, can, however, hope to receive aid from the bounty of this large-hearted woman."

If the presentation of such facts, so illustrative of woman's social depressions and wrongs, do not mortify our consciousness and quicken our anxiety to have justice done her, I know not where our human sympathies or sense of right can be. Mr. Bowditch himself speaks (p. 26) of the "inexpressible meanness of the thing," and says: "We men save at least two millions of dollars every year from our own burdens by these acts of injustice." "If, as we have seen, the women no doubt pay more than one-eleventh of the whole tax on property, every man of property in the State saves more than one-eleventh of his taxes by the taxation of women. One-half the men of property in the State save, every year, more than one-ninth of their taxes by compelling the women (who have no votes with which to protect themselves) to pay the amount."

In this connection, with what keenness of sarcasm does our writer arraign thus the forthcoming "Centennial" at Concord! "In April next the people of Concord and neighboring towns intend to unite in celebrating the fight at the old North Bridge, where

"Once the embattled farmers stood,
And fired the shot heard round the world!"

"A bronze statue of a minute man, of life-size, is to be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies; and the Committee of Arrangements have prepared a programme, including an oration by George William Curtis, poems by Emerson, Longfellow, and Lowell, and a monster procession. The President and his Cabinet, the Governor, Council, and Legislature, the Corporation and Faculty of Harvard College, and the Governors of the New England States, have been, or are to be, invited," etc. (Boston Advertiser, Jan. 7, 1875.) Why was it, according to those immortal lines, that the Concord farmers fired their shot a hundred years ago, except that the world might hear that taxation without representation was tyranny? Was it merely in order that so much powder, so many cannon and guns stored in Concord, might be saved from destruction, that Paul Revere was induced to take his midnight ride? Was it not rather and solely because these same stores were intended to be used in the fight against taxation without representation? And to show to the mother country that the men of Massachusetts were too high-born to be propertied? Perhaps Mr. Curtis may take as the subject for his oration the clause in our Declaration of Rights, that a constant adherence to the principle of justice is absolutely necessary to preserve the advantages of liberty, and to maintain a free government; and then proceed to show from the Report of 1871 in how very just a way the men of Concord, Lexington, and Acton have been able to save their money and their principles. He can prove, beyond all doubt, that they have saved enough to pay for the statue, as they save about $7,000 a year. Is it probable that Mr. Emerson in his poem will call to mind the fact that he and other Concord men of property and influence have been spared every year about one-fifth of their taxes, owing solely to the fact that the women of Concord are treated in the very same way

"That made those heroes dare
To die or leave their children free?"

"We are inclined to think neither of them will make any such allusions. It might cause confusion on the faces of the Committee of Arrangements. Nevertheless, we will venture to ask Mr. Emerson to recite on that occasion William Allingham's poem, 'The Touchstone,' as he did years since in Boston, and as he only can recite it; and then let him try to explain to his audience, if he can, why it is that woman suffrage is not now, as anti-slavery used to be, the touchstone to test

"All things in the land
By its unerring spell?"

"Would it not be a far more fitting celebration of the Concord fight for us to shape our lives to-day according to the noble principles of our fathers, rather than to call attention to our degeneracy by erecting a monument in honor of their nobility? But if we must have a statue, let it be of brass, and on the stone base let us have some appropriate bas-reliefs. One may illustrate the sale of Abby Smith's cows, and the reverse the quite likely taking to jail of Abby Foster, each for the non-payment of taxes. One might show Josiah Quincy, Jr., denouncing to the citizens of Boston, from the gallery of the Old South Church, the taxation of men without representation as tyranny; and the reverse might appropriately show their townsman, Judge Hoar, and his associates, declaring that to tax a woman who is disfranchised is in accordance with an express authority conferred by our Constitution."

So much for the letter and spirit of the fine pamphlet under review, which seems to us to contain the most impressive and powerful argument in behalf of woman's rights, elaborate in all its details; a noble setting forth of the real dignity, position, and practical social necessity of woman's influence and co-operation as a citizen of this Republic.

JOHN T. SARGENT.

Communications.

"WORDS, WORDS, WORDS!"

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I am sure it will seem strange to many of your readers that you and Mr. Morse have not been able to come to an agreement upon these seemingly simple question over which you have had so lengthened a discussion. What, after all, is it all about? You insist that all liberals must be anti-Christians; in other words, you insist that the name anti-Christian is one properly belonging to the whole class of liberals. Mr. Morse does not find the name a fitting one for himself, and yet he thinks he comes up to the full stature of a liberal. How can it be a matter of very great importance what name a man adopts, so long as he thoroughly understands the state of his own mind, and is not governed either in its adoption or in its rejection, by any unworthy motive?

You insist upon the name because you claim that you have made an exhaustive analysis of Christianity, and have found that it is essentially opposed to the freedom of thought which is the essence of liberalism. Now here, unless I am greatly mistaken, you have been betrayed into a little confusion of thought. A man does not require to be a liberal in order to be, in a tolerably wide sense, an anti-Christian. A Mohammedan is an anti-Christian in so far as he rejects Christian doctrines; so is a Buddhist; so is a Zulu. I am an anti-Christian in so far as those doctrines of Christianity in which I disbelieve are concerned, but no farther. If Christianity made formal profession of distrust in human reason, there would be one more doctrine in it to which I would be opposed, and the significance and range of my anti-Christianity would be just so much enlarged. In trying to arrive at the essence of Christianity you undertake a difficult, if not impossible, and, as it seems to me, wholly unnecessary task. The essence of Christianity is hardly any more to be got at than the essence of the English Constitution. A thousand influences have been absorbed into historic Christianity that would have had their own efficacy in the world, if Christ had never trodden the earth. Of course there is some interest in following a great institution through the ages, and recognizing, if we can, certain unalterable lineaments which it bears through all changes of time and circumstance; but such an undertaking (who can deny?) is isplenum alea, subject to all kinds of mistakes and mischances, and one which no two men, perhaps, would bring to precisely the same conclusion. How would it do for us to have to wait to adjust our relations to the facts of to-day, until some one had expressed for us the essence of all the facts of the past? And how should we like to be told, after we had at length effected the adjustment, that the historical analysis on which we relied was all astray, and that we would have to content ourselves with being at sea, until somebody else had gone over the whole ground again?

No; I contend that it is quite enough for us to know that we dissent from and earnestly repudiate the doctrines of Christianity (or many of them at least) in order to have a distinct and satisfactory assurance that we are to that extent anti-Christian; and it is for each liberal to settle with himself the degree and scope of his anti-Christianity, and to decide whether, upon the whole, the name "anti-Christian" would best describe him to his neighbors. For, after all, names, be it remembered, are chiefly important in the signification they have to others. For me to label myself, voluntarily, "anti-Christian," knowing that the term would be understood by nineteen persons out of twenty in a very much wider sense than I attached to it myself, would be an act of simple folly. I do not, as a matter of fact, call myself anti-Christian, because Christianity, as the word is commonly understood, and as I understand it myself, embraces very much more than the doctrines from which I dissent; it embraces the morality of the gospels, it embraces the revelation of God made by Christ, and towards these—though I attach to them no supernatural authority—I feel much more of sympathy than antagonism.

Not only was it quite unnecessary for any practical purpose to enter into the question as to what constituted the essence of Christianity; but the inquiry, I very much incline to think, has landed you in distinct error. You find that liberals must be anti-Christian because Christianity in its very nature is at war with liberty. Surely Christianity is not at war with the liberty of those who believe its doctrines true. The system of geology now most in vogue is not at war with the liberty of those who accept it. Neither it, indeed, nor Christianity can ever be at war with anybody's liberty, except in the case of one or the other being imposed upon people by force. All systems have their difficulties. Geology has its difficulties; Darwinism has immense difficulties; but those who believe in geology, in Darwinism, or in Christianity, believe in it because, to their apprehension, the proofs outweigh the difficulties. Christianity, you seem to forget, claims to be true, and claims to be able to satisfy a thoroughly reasonable mind that it is true, and not only to satisfy that mind once, but to keep it satisfied. And, as you perfectly well know, a great many not dishonest minds are thoroughly convinced of the truth of Christianity. You cannot accept their modes of reasoning; but neither can they accept yours. They seem to you in bondage to influences that check the natural play of their intellectual faculties; you seem to them in bondage to an unspiritual way of looking at things that prevents you recognizing some of the most momentous of realities. So that there is precisely the same reason for an earnest and honest Christian saying that "liberalism" is opposed to true liberty, as there is for a liberal to say the same of Christianity. Beneath all your reasonings on this subject lies the fallacy that Christianity is a conscious impostor; that she knows she cannot prove her case, and therefore lays an embargo on human thought. Dismiss that notion; recognize Christianity as an honest claimant for the position of a true and verifiable religion, and you will see that opposition to freedom is no more essential to it than to any scientific theory. You will see too that you are not yourself "anti-Christian" as claiming a larger measure of freedom than the believing Christian claims, but simply as having used your freedom to different purpose and with a different result.

You seem to think the idea of allegiance to a person or to a book absolutely inconsistent with the idea of freedom. But why, if the claims of the person or the book have been established by evidence too strong to be nullified by any of the difficulties incident to an acknowledgment of those claims? Surely it is not bondage to yield to the weightiest reasons. You are doing the same thing every day of your life, and recognize your rationality in doing so. I have for my own part reasoned enough with Christians to know, as a matter of experience, that they obey precisely the same law as you or I: there are arguments in favor of Christianity that, to them, outweigh all that can be mustered on the other side; and their minds necessarily move in the direction of least resistance. Is that bondage? It is bondage, if you like, to error, and prejudice, and confusion of thought, but not to any felt tyranny. It is bondage precisely similar to that which either you or Mr. Morse must be in, seeing that you cannot both be right. It is bondage such as Messrs. Darwin and Herbert Spencer may both be in at this moment. Suppose that, by some tour de force, I could convert some of these earnest believers: would they be any freer than before? By no means; they would recognize how artificial had been some of their previous modes of thought, what large assumptions they had made, and how strangely insensible they had been to many important and striking facts; but this would be the experience of any one who had escaped from a false theory. They might begin to use faculties that had before lain idle, but that would be because the reason that had caused them to allow those faculties to be idle had been removed.

Then if Christianity is not bondage to those who sincerely believe in it—except in so far as all error is bondage,—to whom is it bondage? Not to those who do not believe in it. Then, if it involves bondage only in so far as it contains errors, why not base your anti-Christianity simply on the ground that Christianity is an erroneous system? The reason why you have not done this, if I may be allowed a speculation on the subject, is that you wanted a justification for using the appellation "anti-Christian" in an absolute sense; and thought you might do this if you could only get at the centre of gravity, so to speak, of Christianity, and prove that at that point the antagonism between Christianity and free-thought was absolute. If your anti-Christianity were based on the errors and defects in Christianity, then it would have to be relative and proportioned to those errors and defects, and this was not what you craved. You cannot, however, hang Christianity up by a string and determine its centre of gravity; and I cannot help thinking that, if you will reflect on it further, you will conclude that the basis I propose is the best after all. And if, after taking its measure accurately, you decide that you scarcely care to continue the use of the title for which you have hitherto so strenuously contended, no harm will be done; we shall know what measure of man you are quite as well without the title as with it, and perhaps peace will reign for a time in the columns of THE INDEX.

Believe me, with the utmost respect and good-will,
Yours ever truly,

WM. D. LESUEUR.

OTTAWA, March 20, 1875.

[That the discussion referred to turns on something more important than "words," will be evident from the consideration that the main point at issue is the true relation between those who want liberty of thought to be unlimited and a great institution which wants to limit it. So long as liberals imagine themselves to be Christians, they will more or less actively uphold and strengthen the Christian Church; but the Church meanwhile, regardless of the refinement by which they rationalize away its creed, continues to propagate doctrines which block scientific progress in all directions. It is no mere matter of words to rouse the liberals to a perception of what they are doing; to show them that they cannot identify Christianity with science and civilization; and to persuade them to cease giving "aid and comfort" to influences which are neutralizing, to a large extent, their best exertions for the spread of intelligence. We are not so shallow as to think names as of any consequence except as they determine practical relationships to existing institutions. What we desire is to make evident that, with all the good it does, the Church is doing immense evil by standing in the way of advancing knowledge, and perpetuating indifference to scientific truth in order to keep its own creed safe. With great respect for our highly cultivated correspondent, we think he fails to perceive this vitally important practical bearing of our work.—Ed.]

ROME AND LIBERTY.

CURWENSVILLE, Pa., March 21, 1875.

F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent, S. H. Morse, displays considerable talent and no little ingenuity in attempting to prove the compatibility of Christianity with religious liberty. As long as your replies accompany his articles, we can afford to "let truth and error grapple." There is one paragraph, however, in his late article which I cannot refrain from noticing. It is this: "Drop your fears, espouse heartily the great cause of America's complete emancipation, and let your light so shine that all men, your Catholic brethren included, shall come up to the help of all that is true, noble, and good." Will they do this? Does Mr. Morse suppose for an instant that they will?

I believe implicitly in the right of the individual to "worship God (or not) according to the dictates of his own conscience"; but what assurance have I that, if I respect the Catholic's conscientious scruples, he will respect mine?

The only criterion by which to judge the future is the past. But before I appeal to history for an answer to the above question, I wish to state this general proposition: Roman Catholicism is essentially opposed to secular education, religious liberty, and any form of government except that of Rome; and, whenever and wherever the Church gets the power, she puts her principles in practice.

Out of the great ocean of historical facts I will select but a few.

From the time of Pope Gregory VII. to the present time, no less than eighteen distinct attempts have been made by Popes and Councils to prevent the common people from reading the Scriptures.

The Jesuits are the sappers and miners of the Church, and for their plotting against civil and religious liberty they have been successively expelled from England, France, Holland, Scotland, Ireland, Bohemia, Hungary, Poland, Russia, Portugal, Spain, and Germany; and to-day the theatre of their operations—their land of promise—is the United States. What use will they make of the carte blanche given them in this country? Time will tell.

That sagacious Frenchman, Lafayette, declared: "If ever the liberty of this republic is destroyed, it will be by Roman priests."

Every Catholic owes his first allegiance to a foreign sovereign,—the infallible Pontiff whose sentiments when expressed ex-cathedra are the supreme law to two hundred million people, seven million of whom (according to their own estimate) reside in this country. That we may ascertain what these sentiments are, let us quote from some of the Pope's authorized mouth-pieces. O. A. Brownson, editor of the Catholic Review, said: "Protestantism of every form has not, and never can have, any rights, where Catholicity is triumphant."

Bishop O'Connor said: "Religious liberty is merely endured until the opposite can be carried into execution without peril to the Catholic world."

About twenty years ago the following paragraph appeared in the Shepherd of the Valley, printed at St. Louis, Mo.; and its sentiments have frequently since found expression in Catholic journals: "Religious liberty, in the sense of liberty possessed by every man to choose his own religion, is one of the most wicked delusions ever foisted upon this age by the father of deceit. The very name of liberty—except in the sense of permission to do certain definite acts—ought to be banished from the very domain of religion. No man has a right to choose his religion. Shall I foster the damnable doctrine that Socinianism, and Calvinism, and Anglicanism, and Judaism, are not every one of them mortal sins, like murder and adultery? Shall I hold out hopes to my erring Protestant brother that I will not meddle with his creed, if he will not meddle with mine? Shall I tempt him to forget that he has no more right to his religious views than he has to my purse or my house, or my life-blood? No! Catholicism is the most intolerant of all creeds." In the light of the above declaration, and the facts cited, it is not difficult to explain the hostility of Catholics to our free-school system, nor to determine what Catholics will do when they "gain an immense numerical majority in this country," as one of their archbishops declared they "most certainly will do."

Would Mr. Morse be in favor of violating our consciences in favor of a church cherishing such sentiments, and contemplating such a return for the protection extended to them in common with others?

I will only add a paragraph. In all this, Catholicism is logically consistent. Protestantism presents the pitiable spectacle of vociferously claiming the right of "private interpretation" as against Rome, and as vehemently denying it to free-thinkers.

As soon as the Christian Amendment is adopted, the Catholic motto will serve equally well for Protestantism: "Heresy and Infidelity are crimes, and in Christian countries they will be punished as other crimes."

Yours pensively,
HARRY HOOVER.

A FALSE VIEW OF PROVIDENCE.

The poet Dryden says: "Art may err, but Nature cannot miss"—a truth that must be plain to even an ordinary observer. When contemplating the natural world, from the rudest clay to the ripened fruit, we are confronted with the evidence of systematic and uniform operations. Not a grain of sand glitters in the sunshine, not a drop of water sparkles in the dew or sports in the cascade, not a flower unfolds its fragrance without the operation of some fundamental law controlling its movements. The same principle, precisely, holds good in human nature. Man is a part of nature so far as his outward, physical body is concerned. Chemical analysis reveals the existence of mineral, vegetable, and animal substances in his constitution, and the same laws that control these substances in their own kingdoms control them in man; hence, when we have anything to do with disease or health, we speak of "natural laws" regulating and controlling them.

Pleasure and pain, physically speaking, are generally the result of our own actions. Health and sickness are not providential in the popular sense of that term; if they were, God would be the author of all suicides and other deaths. There is much ignorance afloat upon this subject; persons whose reasoning capacity is very small do not stop to think upon these matters, and the want of intelligent thought in our day is our social and national curse. There are certain, fixed, inviolable, natural laws controlling the well-being of the human body, and he who violates these laws suffers the bodily consequences of that violation. God does not preserve our lives or our health unless we use those means he has instituted for that purpose. If a man refuses food, he must die; if a man takes poison, he must die, and he ought to, if God is to be true to himself. This notion of depending upon God's providence, irrespective of means, is a popular and senseless absurdity. And yet how much of this kind of religion have we in our day! For example: persons on shipboard, with no visible hope of safety from shipwreck, pray vociferously, if they ever prayed before or not, rather than depend upon their own efforts and the operation of natural laws for relief. If there is no relief, the sinner will pray, and, as a rule, the greater the hypocrite the louder the prayer. When sickness comes, the first thing, with some people, is to pray rather than use sensible means for recovery. Sickness is the direct result of a violation of natural law—the physical reaping of what has been sown,—and natural law, not supernatural power, must be brought into its proper working order before that sickness is removed. No amount of praying and singing or exhortation will cure a disease—they mostly aggravate it; but physical means must be used to cure a physical disease.

Another form in which this popular nonsense concerning Providence manifests itself is in some cases of death. God's providence does not underlie disease and death by a palpable, direct interposition, as is commonly supposed. We do not regard physical health properly; we commit a grievous sin by neglecting to take proper care of our bodies. We hardly ever think that, as we care for or neglect the body, so shall we enjoy health or suffer pain. Natural law in the human body is alarmingly violated by no other agency, perhaps, so much as fashion and fashionable dissipation. What is the result? How is this violation punished? Puny forms, pale faces, pains and aches, short lives and short graves, too—these are the verdicts of outraged law. A beautiful maiden dies suddenly, overcome by exertion in the prosecution of some object of gratification; the house is craped, the community sympathizes, the funeral is large, the physician says "heart-disease"; the minister adds to the lie by calling it "a direct visitation of divine providence." Why not be honest in this matter, and call it what it is in the sight of God: suicide! Why not say, plainly and truthfully: here is a sad illustration of violated natural law, a reaping of the seed sown by a disregard of the laws of health?

By pressing our inquiry into the moral sphere of being, we find that reward and punishment fall under the general truth to which we are now referring. The assertion sometimes made that man creates his own heaven or hell in this world contains not only sound philosophy but truth that cannot be gainsaid. The general laws by which the world is governed so control human actions that they bring their legitimate result with them; or, as some one has written:—

"If either vice or virtue we abandon,
We either are rewarded as we serve,
Or plagued as our deeds deserve."

Violate a law of health, and sickness is the result; commit a crime, and punishment follows—if not by legal authority, by internal distress, by a conscience smitten with bitter remorse. And it is this internal retribution that is hardest to bear—that reaps the bitterest fruit—that plunges the shame-covered soul beneath the waters of the river, or cuts it loose from the body with the suicide's knife. Just as inviolable as is the natural law producing like from like, so inviolable is this moral law of reward and punishment. Let the appetite be sated with reason and moderation, let fashion no longer control judgment, and we shall see bright eyes, rosy cheeks, manly forms, and womanly beauty such as will be fit temples for the indwelling of heaven's angels. Life is a seed-time, human nature the soil; men are the farmers, and their actions the seed sown—seed to bear the fruit of corruption or the sheaves of a glorified life.

O. L. ASHENFELTER.

CARLISLE, Pa.

UNANSWERABLE ARGUMENTS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I wish to present for your consideration a couple of arguments that seem to bear heavily against your proposition that Christianity and freedom are incompatible. I would like you to answer them, if you can, for they represent in a condensed and convenient form much of the intellectual force that is expended in combating your views on this subject, and by meeting them fairly you will perhaps save much "unprofitable discussion."

You must be aware that your views with regard to this matter of freedom and Christianity are somewhat peculiar, and that very few people agree with you fully. Now what I want to know is:—

ARGUMENT No. 1.—How is it that you happen to know so much? Do you not perceive that the position you take leaves you open to a suspicion of immeasurable conceit? I know you pretend to make "no superior claim" of any sort; but the facts are against you. You think you are right on this question—do you not? Well, then, if you are right, all those who differ from you must be wrong—must they not? Very well, then; is there not a virtual assumption of superior knowledge on your part? Answer that!

When you have disposed of the above to your satisfaction, you may turn your attention to my ARGUMENT No. 2,—which, I think, will floor you. It is this: I guess I've got a right to my opinion!

C. E. M.

[The tone of the above article is a little exceptional, as compared with most of our "communications"; but we cheerfully waive that point. It is rather dismaying, however, to be challenged to answer "unanswerable arguments," but (with some palpitation of the heart) we will try to do our best. For convenience' sake we will invert their order.

ARG. No. 2.—The gentleman has certainly "a right to his opinion." But that does not prove his opinion right: which being the only point in debate, we pass to

ARG. No. 1.—The gentleman suspects that we are guilty of "immeasurable conceit," and assume to possess "superior knowledge," because we think that we are "right in this question," and that "those who differ from us must be wrong." Unfortunately, the same disaster happens to every gentleman who "guesses he's got a right to his own opinion." Nobody can "guess" that, without "guessing" that those who differ from him are in the wrong; and then he must immediately explain "how it happens that he knows so much."

Moral.—We will forgive the gentleman for "flooring" us so unmercifully, if he will only impart to us the secret of his own immeasurable modesty. It would certainly make our fortune.—Ed.]

THE CHRISTIANIZERS IN KANSAS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

We have had a God-in-the-Constitution Convention at Leavenworth—led by Rev. Mr. McAlister, General Secretary of the National Christian Amendment Association.

Mr. McAlister is shrewd. I must tell you one of his arts. "For the benefit of the friends of the movement," he read "the demands of our enemies," as he characterized the Demands of Liberalism. It was funny, and yet provoking, how he read those demands, and admitted no correction of his reading.

The first Demand was not even noticed. Now we have in Leavenworth church property of great value, all untaxed. Our taxes are heavy; and the church property of our city is nearly one-fifth of our total valuation.

The second Demand was read, with the emphasis on "chaplains," and omitting "all other institutions supported by public money."

The third was read in full, with the parenthetical explanation, "or religious," directly after "sectarian."

The fourth Demand was read in full, with strong emphasis on "religious services" and "religious worship."

The fifth was in full, with the same full emphasis on "religious festivals."

The sixth was read in part, as if that were all of it; omitting the whole strength of the demand—"and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead."

The seventh was read without the phrase "of Sunday as"—which demands the repealing of laws "enforcing the observance of the Sabbath."

The eighth he read—"that all laws looking to the enforcement of Christian morality shall be abrogated," and stopped there, as if that was all; emphasizing "morality" instead of "Christian."

The ninth Demand was read in full, and vigorously denounced.

Nothing was said about the "Religious Freedom Amendment." This same McAlister asserted that, by the constitutional acknowledgment of God and Christ and the Bible, no rights of conscience would be violated. The few Jews and Atheists, he said, would not be conscience-bound by the Amendment. And yet he was applauded!

I. J. STINE.

LEAVENWORTH, Kansas, Feb. 28, 1875.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Brew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India," also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents; singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days. A new edition.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 3 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.90
1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimus Feltton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (O. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malboro. An Old War Romance.....	1.50
Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
Morality Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	1.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	2.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Cloud, Rain, Hail, Snow, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS'S Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	4.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poses for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	4.25
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Address, III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith, or Images from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHÉLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of the Moral Sciences, Laws, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and the novel The Wideness.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Droll Dialogues, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I, and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Girls.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX.

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address
S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.

At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

ABOUT CHEAP RATES WESTWARD.—We have frequent inquiries about the cheapest rates, best route, &c., to Western points. We cannot undertake to answer such questions in detail. It is evident that many of our readers are seeking new homes and fortunes in the West, and for complete and reliable detailed information about that country—from Missouri to Oregon and California inclusive—we do not hesitate to commend them to Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent of the Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis. Mr. Ford has thousands of pamphlets, circulars, time-tables, maps, rate-sheets, etc., for free distribution, and answers all questions, promptly and cheerfully, without charge.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

☞ Lists sent upon application.

☞ Send for estimates.

TWO NEW BOOKS.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dume Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

REASONS FOR USING THEEUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY,

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

☞ On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A finelikeless of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES,

IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

KANSAS, COLORADO, NE-

BRASKA, CALIFORNIA.—The Spring tide of travel Westward has fairly set in. Thousands are migrating to Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and especially California. To such, as a cheap and desirable route to destination, we commend the Missouri Pacific Through Line, by way of St. Louis and Kansas City. Call upon or address Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis, who will cheerfully furnish you correct and complete information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, time-tables, etc., for gratuitous distribution.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER

LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,
OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHI-

LOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

10 CENTS

Will make you an ANNUAL SUBSCRIBER to FOUR NUMBERS of

EHRICH'S QUARTERLY,

containing prices, descriptions, and fashion-plates of Ladies' and Children's Suits, Ladies' Underwear, Infants' Wear, Real Laces and Dress Trimmings, Hats, Feathers, Flowers, Ribbons, etc., etc., together with the choicest selections of Literature, Wit, and Wisdom.

Our Quarterly will place within your reach the best goods at the lowest prices. Only 10 cents for a year's subscription. First issue now ready. Subscribe at once.

EHRICH & CO.,

287 and 289 EIGHTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

Please state in what paper you saw this advertisement.

PREMIUM CHESTER WHITE

PIGS.—$15 each, $28 a pair. Chester County MAMMOTH CORN, and Imported BELGIAN OATS. 4 lbs. by mail, $1; peck, $2; one-half bushel, $3; Circulars and Sample Packages of Seeds free for two Stamps. Address N. P. BOYER, Parkersburg Chester Co., Penn.

THE INDEXIN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU GOING WEST? If

so, and you desire full and reliable information as to the cheapest and best route to Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, California, Oregon, or any of the Western States or Territories, we recommend that you call upon or address E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo., who will cheerfully answer all questions, and furnish you with maps, pamphlets, time-tables, rates, etc., free of charge. Now is the season of low rates, and applications should be made at once.

THE COLORADO HORTICULT-

URIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.

Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers,
P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE FREESUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fredk Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,
256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN

HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247.

Send for Circular.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A Capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIG-

ION,

By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESSAT BELFAST.

Seventh Edition,

Containing the First and Second Prefaces replying to his Critics, an extract from the Manchester Lecture, and the paper on "Scientific Materialism" in full. 120 pages. Price 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

NEW MUSIC BOOKS.

OSGOOD'S GUIDE

TO THE

ART OF SINGING.

Price $4.00.

This fine book has been compiled after careful study of all existing systems, and is intended to be plain, exhaustive, and thorough in its course, which has been well tested by its talented author. Probably no one is better fitted to make "the best" book than a successful American singer and teacher, familiar with European methods.

GERMAN FOUR PART SONGS. For Mixed Voices. Just published. Is an unusually good collection of entirely new music, by the best modern German composers. Just right for Musical Societies. Price $1.50.

ORIGINAL HYMN TUNES. By H. K. OLIVER, the veteran composer of "Federal Street," and other favorite tunes. Contains 100 Tunes, Chants and Anthems, all original and of the best quality. Price, Boards, 80 cts.; Cloth, $1.00.

SEVEN PART SONGS. For Mixed Voices. By J. C. D. PARKER. Contains new Glee which were successes when sung by the "Parker Club." Price 60 cts.

All books sent, post-paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

NOTICE TO THE LIBERAL

PUBLIC.

M. ALTMAN & Co.,
301 & 303 6th Ave., N.Y. }

I have during the last six years kept my name and business constantly before the readers of Liberal papers, and have during that time supplied most of them with merchandise from my establishment, orders in most cases coming through the advertisements published by me.

But the limited space necessarily occupied in a newspaper makes it impossible to enumerate or specify accurately the many articles required by the public, and I have been, and still am, in receipt of many letters begging for a more detailed Price List or Catalogue. I have determined to issue the most complete Price List of Dry Goods, Fancy Goods, Ladies' and Gents' Undergarments and Outfits, Suits, Costumes, Hosiery, Gloves, and the thousand small articles in Millinery, Notions, and Haberdashery, that has ever been circulated, free of cost, to all who may send stamp and address. The matter is now in the hands of the printer, and by the time this is read will be ready to mail. Send on your addresses, with stamp for return postage. Liberals who may not be able, or who hesitate to send stamp, may simply send their address, and I will mail a few for distribution among their friends.

Fraternally yours,

MORRIS ALTMAN

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1875.

WHOLE No. 277.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in:—

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

EFFORTS are made every now and then to break up the itinerancy system among the Methodists. The last instance was in Pennsylvania. Probably this change will be gradually effected.

THE Christian Statesman, of Philadelphia, explicitly approves the expulsion of Mr. Thorne from the North Carolina Legislature. Of course! Is it not the organ of the Christianizers of the Constitution?

THE SEAL-FISHERIES of the Arctic seas are in danger of being ruined by the over-destruction of these animals; and regulations are proposed for their protection establishing a "close time" during which no seal shall be killed. No such restriction will ever be imposed upon the "fool-killers"; their game is inexhaustible.

THE CATHOLICS of New Jersey have got a bill before the Legislature of that State for the incorporation of a "New Jersey Protectory," to whose control and custody all children shall be surrendered who may be deemed, by any justice of the peace, to be "idle, truant, vicious, homeless, or delinquent"! Rome never sleeps; but Liberty takes many a nap.

REV. MR. VARLEY, the English revivalist, has been suffering little children to come unto Jesus in New York city. Rev. Mr. Hepworth's church contributed eighty-two of them, crying over the horrible iniquities of their long lives of from four to fourteen years. As they had been born so recently, is it not precipitate in Mr. Varley to pray that they may be born again under his auspices?

THE CATHOLICS say they have fifty "parochial schools," and thirty thousand pupils in them, in New York city alone. The trustees of these schools are making strenuous efforts to get them adopted by the Board of Education, which would of course involve their support by the public funds. A good article on this subject from the Christian Union will be found on another page, and a better one still from the Nation.

THE POPE has released Catholics in Germany, by his Encyclical of February 5, from all obligation to the Falk laws, which he declares "null and void." Bismarck has retaliated by transferring to lay hands the management of ecclesiastical revenues, and withholding the State endowment from the clergy. The conflict deepens, and will spread. Rome wears a mask in America, but here too will be detected ere long as the Veiled Prophet of Khorassan.

HON. GEORGE F. HOAR has published a letter proposing the rebuilding of William and Mary College, at Williamsburg, Va., by Northern contributions. It is a noble proposal. This venerable college is in age second only to Harvard, being six years older than Yale; it was burned during the Civil War in September, 1862, and neither the State nor the alumni have been able to rebuild it. Let the North seize this opportunity of showing its fraternal spirit towards the South, and it will rebuild more than the ruined walls.

THE EXPOSURE now going on with respect to the New York Canal Ring, initiated by Gov. Tilden's brave message, and as bravely followed up by the New York Tribune, is another illustration of the necessity of fighting corruption as the only means of putting it down. The non-resistance principle works poorly in politics, and it works no less poorly in religion. This is a world of conflicting forces, and the avoidance of conflict means simply submission and slavery. Are not religious radicals open to instruction by the general course of Nature?

THE BOSTON Pilot, a Roman Catholic paper, disbelieves that Father Walker uttered the words we quoted from the New York Herald, in our issue of April 1, to the effect that he "would as soon administer the sacraments to a dog" as to a Catholic parent who sends his child to the public schools; and the Pilot wants to regard the utterance, in any case, as that of an individual and not of the Church. But the New York Tablet, the leading Catholic organ of the country, says emphatically: "Most likely Father Walker did say it, but it is only what has been said by the bishops all over the world over and over again in their pastorals. And we heartily indorse it."

THE NEW YORK State Prison Association have just recommended the steady maintenance of "a system of hard labor as an indispensable part of prison discipline,"—an entire separation of hardened criminals from young and inexperienced ones,—the instruction of every convict in some useful trade or employment,—the mental and moral training of the prisoners,—the encouragement of hope as the surest basis of reformation; and they conclude that crime, disease, and pauperism are evils entailed on society which can only be broken up by "instructing, training, and saving every child." These suggestions embody practical wisdom of the highest kind; and they cannot be heeded too soon.

TWO SPLENDID "parochial schools" have been erected in New York city just back of Trinity Church, one by the Episcopalians and the other by the Catholics, which the Christian Union describes as "larger, more perfectly appointed, and better lighted than our best public schools," and which it complacently regards as proofs of genuine Christianity. When the zeal for untrue dogmas which has built these costly rivals of our public unsectarian schools is considered, we must sadly admit the genuineness, and also the dangerousness, of it. If the same lavish liberality and earnestness could only be won over to the grander and nobler principle of non-sectarian education, the Republic would gain wise friends where now it has unconscious enemies.

THE NEW OPERA, at Paris, brings all the resources of science to bear on the production of scenic effects. The Electric Room contains a Bunsen battery of three hundred and sixty elements, sixty on a table; and the electric light is so powerful as almost to equal sunlight in intensity. By means of it M. Duboscq throws upon the stage a veritable rainbow in Moses, causes the light from the painted windows to fall upon the flags of the church where Margaret remorsefully kneels in Faust, illuminates the fountain of wine in Gounod's opera, and performs various other wonders. The arrangements of this Electric Room are highly ingenious; and if the Pope could only get it into his possession, he might exhibit miracles which would throw his winking Virgins and liquefying St. Januaries into the shade. Then we should all be converted, and jubilantly return to the bosom of Holy Mother Church!

JESSE POMEROY, the boy-torturer, is scarcely a subject for sentimental consideration. He is probably as irresponsible as a rattlesnake, and certainly as dangerous. If the pardoning power could be taken out of the Governor's hands, or any certainty had that the boy would not be turned loose on society again in a few years, we should greatly prefer to have him imprisoned; for capital punishment seems to us a wholly unnecessary barbarism in any well-settled and well-governed community. But as it is, with every reason to expect his release after a limited confinement, we consider it a great deal more humane to hang Jesse than to let him murder one or more children hereafter by slow and fiendish cruelty. There is properly no question of responsibility, of blame or punishment or revenge, in his case; it is simply a question of protecting other children from the devilry of this child. We are opposed to capital punishment, provided imprisonment for life can be made the certain penalty for murder; but without that proviso we are in favor of it. And we apply these conclusions to the case of Jesse Pomeroy.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VIKELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kuschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEC, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.

Bishop Ferrette's Religious Liberty Platform.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir—I thank you for inserting the six short articles which constitute my Religious Liberty Platform in your number of the first inst., and not less for the objections which you make to part of it, and your invitation to answer them.

My platform agrees with yours in its three first articles:—

1. No sectarian teaching in public schools.
2. No Sabbath laws.
3. No chaplains of legislatures or other public institutions.

Your objections, therefore, only bear on my three last articles:—

4. No incorporation of sectarian societies.
5. All clauses, in private contracts, granting temporal advantages on sectarian conditions, to be null and void in the eyes of the law.
6. All property at present owned by sectarian societies to become, on a day to be fixed by law, the absolute civil property of the members of each such society, irrespective of religious conditions.

Your objections are very clearly stated in the following sentences:—

"The Constitution of the United States provides that 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.' As shown in our proposed 'Religious Freedom Amendment,' we favor the extension of this restriction to the separate States. We do not see the justice of discriminating against religious corporations, or forbidding them as such to hold property. Is not that 'prohibiting the free exercise' of religion? When no special privilege is granted to religious corporations, we shall be satisfied, because that seems to be all that justice demands; and we mean to stop where justice stops. Perhaps Bishop Ferrette will explain the grounds on which he bases this apparently invidious prohibition to religious corporations of rights and privileges universally conceded to all other corporations."

Before I proceed farther I must compliment you on the spirit of fairness and moderation toward those who might be considered as your adversaries and mine, which breathes through this editorial paragraph. When the American nation comes to deal with the question of church property, which will necessarily be in no distant future, whether she does it on your plan, or on mine, she will do it, I am sure, in that spirit of moderation, fairness, and respect for conscience and acquired rights, not in the spirit of French communists. I hope to be able to prove, among other things, that my solutions are imbued with this spirit not less than yours.

As no inconsiderable part of the task which I now undertake will be accomplished when I have directed the attention to what my articles say and to what they say not, I will make this the first part of it.

WHAT THE ARTICLES MEAN.

They strictly and calmly mean what they say, neither less nor more; and the words which they contain, having been carefully selected, are not translatable into approximate synonyms. I use the word sectarian and the word religious, but not as synonymous terms.

It is the incorporation of sectarian, not of religious institutions, that I exclude. Supposing an institution, such as a college or a church, to be religious in such a manner as to be in no way sectarian, my platform contains nothing that would prevent that institution from obtaining a charter of incorporation.

With regard to contracts, it is clauses in them granting temporal advantages on sectarian, not on religious, conditions, that I propose to make null and void in the eyes of the law. For aught my platform contains, a theological school might make a contract with a professor, granting him a certain salary for the term of his life on condition of his teaching theology, that is, the science of religion, so many hours a week. This is a religious condition, but not a sectarian one. The professor may not stop teaching theology and retain his salary, but he may, without forfeiting it, modify his theological views as truth is dawning upon him in the course of a studious life. If he could be bound under pain of forfeiture of his position, to teach Methodist, or Presbyterian, or Vaticanist theology, that would be a sectarian condition, the only kind of condition which, according to my platform, should be null and void in the eyes of the law.

It is the property at present owned by sectarian, not religious, societies, which I say ought to become, on a day to be fixed by law, the absolute civil property of the members of each such society irrespective of religious conditions. If a society can show to the satisfaction of the courts that it is, as a society, simply religious, not sectarian, its property, on the day fixed by law, no more becomes the absolute civil property of its members than if it were the property of a medical college, or of a hospital.

This distinction between religion and sectarianism is one on which I must absolutely insist. Religion and sectarianism may have points of contact, as dogs and dog-fighting have with each other. But there is no more identity between religion and sectarianism than between being fond of dogs and being fond of dog-fighting. The first is a praiseworthy disposition, which the State might encourage even to the extent of incorporating a society for the protection of dogs. The second is a debasing sport which makes men cruel, first to animals, and then to their fellow-men; and which either should be made an indictable offence, or at least not encouraged by the State to the extent of incorporating societies for promoting fighting among dogs.

To make complete my observations about what I say and what I do not say, I may direct your attention to the fact that I do not propose to tax either sectarian or religious property. Sectarian property could not be taxed according to my platform, because there would be none. Religious property might be taxed or not for aught my platform contains. I now, as you ask, proceed to give my GROUNDS.

I do not object to either the taxing or the exempting of non-sectarian church property, because both courses appear to me reasonable, and the result would not be very different in either case. The existence in a country of different pulpits which anathematize and send to hell each other tends to promote hatred and contempt among the citizens, and therefore should be either discouraged or at least not encouraged by the State. But we easily conceive that a religion purely religious—that is, religious of that religion pure and undefiled which "consists in visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and in keeping oneself unspotted from the world"—is highly conducive to the welfare of the State, and as such might be encouraged by having its halls exempted from taxation. The State might even build church halls, and allow their free use to the people on condition that no sectarian teachings should be introduced therein. This suggestion, however, could not be practical in our time, because no such religion is universally accepted among us. Those who would accept the free use of the halls on such terms form a small minority, and the taxing of the community on behalf of their principles might promote animosity instead of peace, which is what the State aims at securing. If so, the argument might be urged against exemption also, as well as other arguments which I will not develop, as either exemption or taxation of non-sectarian church property is outside of my platform.

Sectarian institutions should not be incorporated, because sectarianism is a sin, while incorporation is an encouragement, and no sin should be encouraged by the State, especially sins which lead to the disturbance of the public peace, and even to civil or foreign war. When, therefore a sectarian society, a Roman Catholic society, for example, comes before the Legislature for incorporation, the Legislature might grant the charter after striking off the word Roman Catholic, and every other word or clause limiting the privileges of the charter to persons of the Roman or of any other denomination. With that clause in, that charter is precisely what you remark that our National Constitution restricts Congress, what you say you wish that all State Constitutions should prevent Legislatures from making: a "law for the establishment of Religion;" religion here meaning a sect. An incorporated sect differs in nothing essential from an established church. The members and ministers of both are compelled by the sheriff, backed, if necessary, by the whole military power of the land, to stick to their respective beliefs on penalty of forfeiture of their temporalities. Such would be, more or less everywhere, the effect of the Anglo-Saxon law, even in the case of a sect not directly chartered by a law, nor recognized by the law as a civil person, but indirectly endowed through a trust-deed to which the law gives validity. The distinction between a sectarian society endowed through a trust-deed and an established church is a mere jesuitical distinction; and whoever reads in Blackstone the history of the introduction of those trust-deeds as a means of cheating the law will find that, as there were Reformers before the Reformation, so there were Jesuits before Loyola. In England, for example, they say that the Anglican Church is established and that the Presbyterian is not; but what is the difference? Suppose an Anglican and a Presbyterian minister live near each other, and converse on the views of their respective sects so often that finally, by the influence of each other, the Anglican turns a Presbyterian and the Presbyterian an Anglican: they will have both to resign, or else the sheriff will turn each of them from his parsonage into the street. The same would be the case if they agreed together on some intermediate position, or on a different one; if they both became Baptists, for example. That is, the law treats them just as dog-fighters treat dogs who, of themselves are too good-natured to wish to fight—make them artificially wicked, and compel them to fight against their will. I am aware that in Massachusetts the law has been somewhat humanized on this point; but what I have described is the average state of Anglo-Saxon law all over the British Empire and the United States. I earnestly call the attention of my fellow-citizens to the fact that it is impossible that public and private honesty should grow or not decrease in this land, if religious teachers, who ought to form the national morality, are by law compelled to either forfeit their living and career, or to stick to obsolete and absurd creeds, the embracing of which was a weakness of their youth—selecting almost invariably the latter alternative. The incorporation of sectarian societies by law, or allowing them in any shape or form so to constitute themselves as to hold property and institute emoluments to be enjoyed on sectarian conditions enforceable by law, is immoral: just as the incorporation of a society for the importation of China women for the purposes of prostitution, or the allowing such a society to constitute itself under the laws in any shape or form so as to hold property and institute emoluments to be enjoyed on condition of operating or abetting such importation for such a purpose, such a condition being enforceable against recalcitrant members at the hands of the courts, would be an immorality. The difference between the two cases is, that the latter immorality would revolt the public feeling of the land, which has not yet grown up to be equally offended by the former. When this becomes also the case, this nation will tolerate "no incorporation," direct or indirect, disguised or not disguised, "of sectarian institutions."

Generally, to stipulate a grant of money or any temporal advantage as the price or as the condition of any sectarian act or profession is immoral; and all such conditions should be, as immoral, null and void in the eyes of the law. To my surprise, my asserting this appears novel to everybody to whom I speak of it, and however this has been taught by the most competent legislators and founders of religions. Thus we find in the Bible that Balaam was cursed of God, and his name made the patronymic name of an immense sect, for accepting a pecuniary reward for a religious act, though he had taken care to stipulate that this reward would not bind him to deviate from what the Lord would say unto him. The New Testament has Balaam's antitype in Simon the sorcerer, whom Peter sends with his money to perdition; but Peter died and Simon hath an everlasting priesthood. The Canons of the Orthodox Catholic Church depose bishops who receive money as a reward for ordinations, or as the condition of admittance to a place of worship. But as it is civil legislation that I propose, I had better not be so theological. The commentators on the French Code, and the courts of countries where that code is in force, such as France and Belgium, have declared invalid, because immoral, that clause of a will or contract which makes any of its provisions conditional on the beneficiary becoming a Protestant, or remaining a Catholic, or becoming a monk or nun, or marrying none but a person of a certain religion. The Code itself distinctly excludes from the right of holding property all religious societies whatever, except the four established ones when the State has authorized them to accept a special donation. This exception in favor of the four established sects is an inconsistency explained by the fact that Romanism is yet too powerful for the State to be able to treat it as strict adherence to principle would require; while Lutheranism, Calvinism, and Judaism have been established as a provisory check to Romanism; and all other sects left unestablished and unable to hold property, but otherwise free, in deference to those principles, which will cease to have exceptions when the law will be strong enough to apply them to Romanism. The law of this country should not wait until it is too weak to do it.

If what I have said of the immorality of sectarian stipulations for temporal advantages has made some impression upon your mind, as I cannot help thinking it must have done, you may be not very far from clearing me of all imputation of making an unjust and invidious discrimination against religious corporations. I treat them more favorably than you do, for I have no objection to their remaining exempt from taxation, provided that they be simply religious, and not sectarian. I do not make any unjust discrimination against sectarian societies. The corporate existence which I refuse to them is not a common right, but a privilege which, according to the spirit of the institutions on which this nation rests, can only be granted on conditions which sectarian societies do not fulfil. To grant to a sectarian society a charter authorizing it to enforce upon its members obedience to sectarian principles by temporal penalties or the loss of temporal advantages, would be to make a "law for the establishment of religion" and the compulsory "exercise thereof." To refuse to a sectarian religion the power of exercising over its members any discipline other than spiritual is to prohibit the compulsory, not "the free, exercise thereof." Sectarial societies being not incorporated, all their contracts are, in the eyes of the law, merely the private contracts of their members, not as members thereof, but as simple citizens. When those contracts contain an immoral clause, for the law to hold that clause as null and void is not to make an unjust, singular, or invidious distinction against religious or even seclarial societies, but simply to treat immoral religious stipulations as all other immoral stipulations.

My fourth and fifth articles contain the permanent principles of my platform so far as it differs from yours. My sixth article provides a method for from the present state of things to the new. My provisions are not intended to affect the real existence of any sect as voluntary association, but merely its corporate existence as a creature of the law. A religious society having in its constitution anything seclarial would lose its legal existence if that seclarial clause was the fundamental principle of its existence, but would retain that existence if that condition was found to be only accidental, and not to affect the main object of the society, religion in the broad human sense exclusive of any seclarialism. As the incorruptible soul survives the corruptible body, some of the present societies would, under this legislation, survive their seclarial frailties, and continue to be, only in a more spiritual and exalted sphere of religious being. Mere seclarial societies, like that part of animated creation whose souls are not immortal, would come, civilly at least, to their death; and their remains would have to be disposed of.

THE TRANSITION

These remains are the property of the fictitious civil persons who had received their existence not from Nature but from the will of the State, and who now, by the same will, have ceased to exist. This property I do not propose to confiscate, as has been done in France, Germany, Italy, Spain, England, Mexico, and as will have to be done in the United States, unless my platform be adopted: for allow me to tell you that your proposed Church taxation, good as it is so far as it goes, is totally inadequate to meet a national danger of such a magnitude as the growing accumulation of property by the Roman Catholic Church in this country. My process is infinitely more just, and moderate, and respectful of the conscientious feelings of seclarial societies, than the monotonous and embittering one of confiscation. I leave the property to those who now own it, only their title is changed from a seclarial into a merely civil one. Every one becomes the absolute owner of his legitimate share in it, "irrespective of religious conditions." Here for the first and only time in my platform I use the word religious, by which I mean religious, not seclarial. Though the United States are a highly religious nation, they are not, and do not pretend to be, a theocracy. So no man in the United States holds his real or personal estate on religious conditions. He may swear, or become an atheist, both of which are acknowledgedly very wrong in the opinion of this nation, and yet keep his farm and his railroad shares, and sell them to whom he pleases, or transmit them to his heirs. So every person who on the day to be fixed by law was a member of any seclarial society, having, by virtue of my sixth article, become on that very day the absolute owner of his share of the seclarial property, might sell it or donate it to whom he pleased, or transmit it to his heirs, just as he could do with his share in a farm which he would have bought in company, or inherited as co-heir.

THE ULTERIOR PROSPECT.

It is needless to say that one of the uses which he would be free to make of his share would be to let it be used for the same collective purposes as before he was its absolute owner.

In the case of edifices used for actual religious purposes this would, in practice, happen almost invariably, with this distinction: that shareholders who would be at the same time fervent members of the congregation would let the congregation have the use of their share without rent; whereas shareholders who would be lukewarm members, or not members at all, would probably ask a rent for the use of their property, which would be simply fair, and for the congregations themselves the most healthy state of things imaginable. Religious societies would then have to subsist on their present living faith, not on old endowments chained to the letter of dead creeds.

But in the case of city blocks, and other property used not for actual worship but for the purpose of raising an income whereby to exercise party discipline, the result would be very different. Where that property is owned, nominally, by the bishop, the law would have to determine, or the courts to decide, whether it be the bona fide civil property of the bishop, or the property of the people. In the former case, the bishop might one day renounce the church and keep the property, and the fear of that eventuality would prevent too zealous Catholics from further contributing to the accumulation of a property hanging on such a precarious thread. In the second case, every Catholic, far from being persecuted, would at once come to a nice share of property, and use it to exercise an influence over his priest and his bishop, as both have hitherto used it in controlling him and threatening to eject him from his tenement if he persists in obeying the laws of his country by sending his children to the public schools. The Roman Catholic Church which, under the present limitations of the power of its clergy, has already become a very much more amiable and estimable body than it once was, would continue to endear itself to the people of this country more and more, much to its advantage and to ours. Instead of being to us a national danger the fear of which throws us into Protestant alliance, it might even become to the liberal cause a valuable ally against Sabbatarianism and Protestant fanaticism.

JULIUS FERRETTE.
CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April, 1875.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

The representatives and trustees of the Catholic parochial schools of this city have requested the Board of Education to appoint a committee of its members to meet a similar committee of their own body, "to consider on what terms the said parochial schools may be admitted to the benefits of the common school system, subject to its laws as regards the course of instruction, the methods of discipline, and the general management, in such manner as may be agreed upon." The authors of this proposal say that the number of Catholic parochial schools in the city is fifty, the number of pupils, thirty thousand. What plan the representatives of the Catholic schools have in view we do not know; but if they propose to teach the Catholic faith in their schools, in school hours, we hope the Board of Education will set its face as a flint against any appropriation from the common school fund for their support. The tendency of such a scheme would inevitably be toward the complete disintegration of our common school system.

The New England Journal of Education, however, informs us that a plan—perhaps the same now to be proposed for this city—is already, by the authority of the local school board, in operation in Poughkeepsie. The Journal says that two schools in that place, heretofore exclusively Roman Catholic, are now integral parts of the school system, and under the direct control of the Board of Education; their teachers are employed and paid by the board, new teachers being examined and appointed like those in the other schools; the text-books used are the same; the teachers—the Sisters as well as the others—are members of the City Teachers' Institute, and its most regular and earnest attendants, as well as among the most anxious to reach the High School; and all this without clash or complication. The question of religious instruction in the schools has been adjusted by the simple requirement that all such instruction shall be given outside of the regular hours of school session, and shall be wholly a matter of voluntary attention on the part of both teachers and pupils. And as to the preference of pupils for connection with the Catholic schools, and the preference of those schools for teachers of the Roman Catholic faith, both, we are informed by the Journal, have been provided for without trouble—the former by constituting the city one school district, leaving all pupils free to attend the school of their choice, so long as there may be room for them in it; and the latter, by allowing those schools the teachers of their own choice, so long as the candidates sustain themselves equally under examination, and submit to the same system of appointment, and abide by the common regulations.

From all this, according to the New England Journal of Education, "there has resulted a better harmony between both classes in the schools, and a nearer approach to a unification of the school system. There has also been curiously developed the fact, that the supposed popular demand among so-called Protestants for 'The Bible in the Schools' is rather fancied than not, only the merest fraction of the pupils being willing to remain in school for the religious exercises when made a voluntary matter, and held outside of the legal school session. In other words, it appears to have been made clear that there is no necessary barrier between Roman Catholics and Protestants in the public school system, and that both, when simply left to themselves, have more faith in the religious education of their children in the home and the church than in that of the public school."

We must know more of this Poughkeepsie arrangement before coming to a final judgment as to its character and workings; but if it shall be found to offer a solution of the troubles between Protestants and Catholics in regard to the schools, we shall rejoice. We are not among those who complain of the Catholics on account of their anxiety for the religious education of their children, and to guard them against perverting influences. As Protestants, we cherish a similar anxiety for the right moral and religious training of our own children; and on this subject, as on every other, remembering the equal rights of our Catholic fellow-citizens, we would do as we would be done by. We are willing, for their sake, and in compliance with what we regard as the true American principle, to eliminate from the schools all religious instruction, and all ceremonies of worship. This, however, does not satisfy them any more than it does a large class of Protestants. We should be glad if Protestant and Catholic children could mingle together in the same schools, the teachers being appointed for their literary and moral qualifications solely, without regard to their church relations; but if religious prejudices are too strong for this at present, we are willing, as Protestants, to make any concession to the Catholics that may be compatible with the non-sectarian character of the schools, and that shall have the effect of securing to the system their hearty support. We think it would be better, all things considered, to withdraw religious instruction even from the school buildings; but if we can have peace between Protestants and Catholics by allowing both an opportunity, under proper conditions, to impart such instruction before or after school hours, we think the adoption of such a plan worthy of grave consideration. Whatever sect uses a school building for such a purpose should pay a reasonable rent, for the government must not, even by allowing the free use of its property, make itself responsible for such teaching.

The proposal of the representatives of the Catholic schools for a conference with the Board of Education has elicited a fierce outcry from many Protestant journals; but we choose to wait and see what our Catholic fellow-citizens have to propose before joining in this chorus of oburgation. If they insist upon appropriations from the school fund for their parochial schools, as such, we shall be among the most earnest and persistent opponents of the scheme; but if they propose to put those schools, in good faith, under the exclusive care of the Board of Education, and consent that there shall be no seclarial or religious instruction in them, we are willing to go as far as we honorably can to conciliate them and secure their support to our common school system.—Christian Union.

THE CATHOLIC COMPROMISE.

Negotiations are pending in this city between a Committee, acting for the parochial schools of the Church, and a Committee of the Board of Education, over a proposal, on the part of the former, to have the Catholic schools placed under the Board, and made part of the common school system, "subject to its laws as regards the course of instruction, the methods of discipline, and the general management," on "such terms as may be agreed upon." The only terms the Catholic Committee can offer include, necessarily, the reservation to the Catholic clergy of the virtual management of the schools by the selection of the teachers, and the giving of religious instruction as part of the regular school course. If they were not going to insist on these things, there would be nothing to negotiate about; and all they would have to do to get their schools into the common school system would be to hand them over to the Board. The proposed compromise has, it is said, been adopted in other cities "with success," though in what cities we do not know, nor do we know what success can mean except the satisfaction of Catholic claims. People who suppose the satisfaction of these claims can mean anything short of the destruction of the common school system deceive themselves. They must remember, first of all, that after we have given the priests the control of Catholic schools, we shall have only given them a part of what they conceive to be their due. They hold themselves entitled as of right, and solemnly proclaim it, to the control of the education of children of all denominations in every country. Their willingness now to share it with the Protestants in this country is simply a concession to the force of circumstances, which in no way releases them from the obligation of extending the limits of their jurisdiction by every means in their power; and it behooves those who negotiate with either cardinal, archbishop, or vicar-general to remember that they negotiate with a person who cannot bind himself on subjects of this sort by human conventions. A secret order from Rome may any day relieve him from any stipulation whatever which may seem prejudicial to the interests of the Church.

In the second place, it is folly to suppose that after the Catholics have been allowed to withdraw their share of the school-tax from the common fund, or—which is the same thing—been allowed to place their own schools under the Board of Education, other denominations will long remain satisfied with the present system; all religious denominations would like to educate their own children in their own way, if they could get the State to raise funds for them by taxation. Episcopalians, and Methodists, and Baptists support the common schools, not as a perfect system, but as the best attainable system; but a large part of its efficiency and the whole of its justice would be gone, if it was modified to meet the requirements of one religious sect. Moreover—and here is a consideration which the people of this country must face sooner or later, and they may as well begin to face it now,—the education given or superintended by Catholic priests is a bad education; indeed, for political purposes, worse than none. It unfits children for the citizenship of free States. If extended widely enough, it would ruin this government. It has been tried for ages in various countries, and has in all worked unutterable mischief, and destroyed the sources of national greatness by killing the sincerity, the truthfulness, the courage and high-mindedness on which national greatness is based. The thoughtful and patriotic men of all Catholic countries are to-day getting rid of it as a national curse. And it would be an astounding spectacle if, after the priests had been excluded from the work of public instruction in France, Spain, Italy, and Bavaria, they were to be allowed to carry it on here with taxes voted by American citizens. Compromise with these men has, in short, never succeeded, and never will. The only thing that does succeed with them is their rigorous subjection to the common law.—New York Nation, April 1.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr Ferree lectured before the Free Thought Society in Music Hall, on Sunday, on this subject.

He began with the assertion that the conflict between those who were disposed to enlarge and those who wished to contract or limit the area of human liberty was irrepressible. When our National Constitution was formed it was on the basis of the declaration that all men are created free and equal. There was an apparent and real inconsistency in allowing negro slavery to continue in those States where it was established. This concession was thought necessary to a union of the States. It was thought and believed that slavery in an otherwise free country must die out. But after eighty years it was found strong and powerful, and it cost us a bloody four years' war to eliminate it.

The fathers of the Constitution, who were liberal men, provided in that document for religious liberty, full and complete. There were some apparent and real inconsistencies in the government administration—the appointment of chaplains in army and navy, the appointments of religious fasts and feasts, and the exemption of churches and church property from taxation. Taking courage from this long allowed inconsistency, there is a large and influential body of men, organized for the express purpose of procuring a change in our National Constitution, which shall not only recognize God but also Jesus Christ as the ruler among nations, and the Christian Scriptures as the inspired foundation of our laws. This would be consistent with their doctrine, and with the above mentioned concessions. But it would be utterly inconsistent with the guaranties of religious freedom in the Constitution and the demands of American liberty. Hence this irrepressible conflict comes about. Shall the Constitution be conformed to these customs, or these customs be dropped in conformity with the Constitution? If the amendment carries, no man who is not an Orthodox Christian can hold any office, from that of tideswaiter up to that of governor and president. Not only Atheists, but Unitarians, Spiritualists, Jews, and others, would be thereby politically tabooed. Your present governor would have to step out, for he does not believe in Jesus Christ or the Bible, as this proposed amendment demands.

The Jews are among our best citizens, but they would be practically disenfranchised. This amendment would crowd out from office the best brain of the country; or if not, it would be retained at the expense of hypocrisy. It would virtually rule Orthodoxy as the established religion. Nothing but that would be allowed to be preached or taught. This would be to carry us back five hundred years in the history of the world. We have hypocrisy enough now, God knows; but with this amendment hypocrisy would come in like a flood. Why do these men want this change? It is to rehabilitate the waning power of the priesthood. Therefore it is that the ministers take so active a part in the movement.

The fact is that Christianity, as represented by the popular churches, is in deadly hostility to American liberty; they have taken the initiative in this great coming conflict. They mean business. They are honest and earnest. It is high time that Liberals were on the alert. The danger is that the great masses of the people will be so engaged in other matters that they will allow judgment to go against them by default. Liberal leagues ought to be formed in every town. Petitions ought to be circulated and tracts distributed looking to the abolition of these sectarian inconsistencies in the administration of our government.

Under Mr. Abbot and others something has been done, but little, as yet, compared with what should have been done. The prevailing apathy on this subject is ominous of evil.—San José Mercury.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN THE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., March 25, 1875.

FRIEND ABBOT:—

I inclose an article taken from the Hampshire Gazette of this week, and written by the pastor of the First (Orthodox) Church of Northampton. I think you will agree with me that we ought to feel that liberal ideas are taking root, when so tolerant a position is taken by the occupant of President Edwards' pulpit, and who is, at the same time, a prominent and active member of the committee of the Public Library of Northampton.

I wish I could now lay my hands on a sermon to send you, preached last Thanksgiving by the minister referred to above, in which he strongly opposes the Christian Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Yours truly, SETH HUNT.

The desire having been expressed in the late town meeting that more "Catholic books" should be added to the library, it deserves to be considered that every individual citizen of Northampton has equal rights in this respect; and that, from the nature of a public library and of literature itself, sectarian differences cannot even be taken into account. A good book is a good book, whatever may be the religious connections or opinions of the author; and in a public library the only questions to be asked about it are these: Is it a good book—that is, ably and decently written? Are some citizens likely to wish to read it? Can we spare the money to buy it? If yes, then the book goes in as a matter of course.

By referring to the thirteenth regulation, on page 8, of the new catalogue, it will be seen that every citizen, of whatever religious denomination, has the same privileges of requesting for his use and benefit the addition of any book which is not in the library; and by referring to the last sentence in the preface to the catalogue, it will be seen that the ideal of a public library is, "an institution in which every citizen may find every book which he desires to aid him in his daily pursuits, or minister to his intellectual growth and pleasure."

If a citizen wants a book that advocates or controverts any religious opinions whatever, he should have it, if it is a decent book and there is money to buy it. In what is so well called "The Republic of Letters," there are no sectarian distinctions; there is no "Catholic literature," and no "Protestant literature"—only literature. The works of Shakespeare, Bacon, Milton, Scott, Dickens, Guizot, Mrs. Stowe, Canon Kingsley, Bishop Butler, President Edwards, Dante, Bossuet, Pope, Chateaubriand, Lacordaire, Montalembert, Madame Craven, Father Newman, Cardinal Wiseman, and Pope Clement XIV., are all in our library—not because ten of these authors are "Protestants" and ten are "Catholics"; but because all of them have written books which people wish to read. The question is not, Is it a "Catholic," or "Protestant," or "Mohammedan," or "Jewish" book? but only, Does somebody want to read it? Exactly as our highway surveyors never ask whether it is a "Protestant" or "Catholic" wagon or shovel, only, Is it a good wagon or shovel to use in mending the roads?

So may it always be—a question of literature, not of religion. May the time never come when the "Republic of Letters" shall be disturbed or invaded by sectarian strife! May the time never come when Catholics and Protestants shall refuse to read each others' books, to put themselves in each others' place, endeavor to see with each others' eyes, and learn from each other all the truth and good they can!

Finally, the only real difficulty is a financial one. Let there be money enough to buy all the books that all the people want to read; and then all the people will have all the books they want to read. L.

"WHERE ARE WE?"

We read the leading article in THE INDEX for January 7, with a feeling somewhat akin to that with which one opens his door and finds a tract thrust beneath, entitled, "Reader, are you a Christian?" The editor, dropping the reserve with which commonly, known but unnamed, he speaks from the editorial column, with the editorial "we," puts his own signature to an eager question, emphatic answer, and earnest appeal. At first we doubt: is he lost and despairingly crying out for succor, or are we wandering in some maze of doubt and danger? We soon find, however, that the editor has not the slightest doubt about his own position; his anxiety is all for us. What is the fearful danger from which he would rescue us? Mainly this: "You are all friends to liberty and light, science and civilization, truth, brotherhood, and humanitarian religion, in all their magnificent universality." Not a bad plight, surely! But—and this constitutes the danger—being such, we still call ourselves Christians! It would seem to be the opinion of THE INDEX that if we persist much longer in this infatuation we shall speedily lose our "liberty and light, science and civilization." And yet, one counter question seems pertinent here. If in, with, and through our Christianity we have attained in any small or large degree to "liberty and light, science and civilization," what possible harm can come from holding on a little longer, in the hope that the religion which has led, or at least accompanied, us on the way to these desirable elements of modern life may have still further treasures to reveal? Would it be impertinent to remark that, since THE INDEX writers parted company with Christianity, we miss a little of the "sweetness" which should accompany "light" to make modern civilization desirable; that we apprehend a danger from rudely forcing the processes of growth and tearing men from the relations in which they have naturally come to their "humanitarian religion"; and that when in the process of evolution Christianity blossoms into the better thing which is to follow, all who have spiritual eyes will see it and rejoice at the sight?

This is an age of transition. Was there ever an age which was not? Creeds, philosophies, and sciences are going through processes of destruction and renewal. Is not that the method of life? No wise man, or good man, is content with any church, system of thought, or mode of government now extant. Was it ever otherwise? There have always been in vogue two methods of reform: the one to rush into the most eager and violent partisanship, for and against the old and the new; the other, to weigh, test, discriminate, and, day by day, build the best which is attainable into life, in the hope that good living and wise thinking will most surely bring better living and wiser thought. By the first method men are led to dissension and unnecessary conflict. Passions are excited, prejudices are aroused; and by well-meant but injudicious attacks old and outgrown superstitions get a support of love and service which they do not deserve, and would not have if left to the fate which their own merits would determine for them. By the second method, ideas, practical utilities, and evident superiorities slowly win their way and commend themselves by their "sweetness and light."

In our opinion no man is doing more to perpetuate for the rest of this century the grosser forms of Christianity, which he detests, than the editor of THE INDEX. Furthermore, we detect in this appeal a capital illustration of that offence which he so vehemently condemns; i. e., "personal leadership." "Verily verily, I say unto you" is the burden of the warning. Why not state facts, produce reasons, and then let them have their due effect? Why not show stronger thinking, a more tender humanity, better moralities, and a more cheerful faith than the Christian religion can produce, and let the world choose? We are not indifferent to our interests and the good of our children. We are seeking the better way as earnestly as extra-Christians or anti-Christians, and shall gladly drop our Christianity, when we are convinced that its life has by natural processes of evolution passed into a higher form of religion. We cannot undo the past. If we could, it is doubtful whether we could better it. By such methods as were possible, and with such materials as they had, men wrought out that which to-day we call the Christian religion; the last, best, highest transformation of the religious sentiment. If a better has already come, it will find means to reveal itself, and it will be better for the world that only those should be its prophets who are fully inspired by its spirit. Haste and violence will only retard and destroy.—N. Y. Liberal Christian.

MATTIE STEVENSON:

THE HEROINE OF MEMPHIS.

BY REV. W. H. SPENCER, IN THE "LIBERAL WORKER."

What was it a year ago, when the cities of Shreveport and Memphis were scourged by the yellow fever, what was it that touched our tenderest heart-strings, and commanded our deepest reverence, and the richest incense we could offer? It was not the money which the generous heart of Chicago and other cities contributed to alleviate the distress of these suffering people. Gold might have been poured in like water, and we should have simply said, "It is a noble, generous, creditable thing to do;" but there was one who gave more than money, who did a deed as self-sacrificing, devoted, heroic, sublime, as history any where records. We read how Florence Nightingale flew to the Crimea, with her lint and anodyne, to bind the wounds of red-handed war. We applaud her and send her name with praises round the world. We read how Grace Darling leaped into her little boat and pulled it through the boiling surf out toward the wrecked ship, and saved the struggling few whom the waves had spared; and we call her daring, heroic, and immortalize her name and deeds in print of stone and steel. It is well; but there is one young American girl whose deed of chivalrous daring and pure self-sacrifice deserves to have her name written as high as honor has placed the names of these English heroines. She heard, from her home in Illinois, the cry of distress that went up from stricken Memphis. The dreadful plague had frightened the well from the city and left hundreds of sick without nurses. She heard the cry for help, and her young heart went out in pity to them. The next train that ran toward Memphis saw her on board. She did not dare to whisper her intent to father or mother. She left her house with only the garments she wore, paid her own passage to Memphis, hastened to proffer her services, waited on the feverish sick day and night, saw scenes so loathsome that stout men sickened and fled in terror from them, would accept no pay for her services, and when the horrid disease laid its poisonous hand upon her, she sank beneath its withering touch, with only one regret to whisper—would I might live to help you a little more! It was no selfish interest drew her there—no father, mother, sister, brother, or lover called her; it was only the cry of a stranger she heard, and she obeyed—because she loved her neighbor as herself.

No wonder the city of Memphis forgot the plague an hour to admire heroism like hers. No wonder the Howard Association, and the city officials, and the clergy, and the nurses, and hundreds of others, followed in solemn procession the coffin which bore to the grave all that was left of the pure and gentle Mattie Stevenson. In these times when we see brilliant suns in the intellectual firmament passing into eclipse, and stars that to thousands have stood as true as the pole star, now trembling and falling from their sphere, and we feel our faith in human nature staggering under the dark revelations and still darker suspicions of human weakness and depravity, then we need to come face to face with just such sublime heroism, consecration, and martyrdom as this of Mattie Stevenson. Then we begin to realize that brotherly love is not a dream of the poets, a chimera of religious fanatics, a mere sentimental platitude, but a living, breathing, governing spirit in the hearts of men; and that there do live angels in the flesh, souls that love their neighbors as themselves, and show us by their deeds that of all the graces and virtues that make up the crown of true manhood and womanhood there is not a flower more beautiful, and fragrant, and fadeless than love—brotherly love—the love that watches by the bedside of the sick, gives bread to the starving poor, builds hospitals for the insane in body and in mind, makes homes for the homeless, houses of refuge for the unfortunate, and scatters its charity broadcast over the earth with a prodigal hand. What virtue is more beautiful! There is none. I thank God that it is taught by every religion on the globe. It assures us that God has made of one blood all nations of the earth, and the time shall come when they shall dwell together in unity and amity.

THE FEAR OF DEATH.

.... One navy who was saved was overheard by the correspondent of the Standard saying: "When I saw what was up, I said, ses I, I'm goin' to die; and, damn it, I may as well do it as comfortable as I can; and so I lit my pipe." There was no high feeling in that man, but there was an indefinite capacity for discipline. Fear did not overpower him in any degree. He thought a smoke, even in the face of death, still an object worth desiring. He was not scared. He was not awed. He simply filled up the few moments which appeared to be left to him in the manner which seemed most satisfactory to his senses. Such a man as that under discipline would have helped to put down the panic and preserve rigid order. He serves excellently as an instance how extremely small a diversion in the grain of the raw material of human nature is needed to turn a rough man into one who would face death calmly to preserve others. It is quite certain that the pleasure of a smoke does not exert half the power over most men which the desire to preserve discipline to the last has for those who have once learned to respect it. Yet this man was probably very slightly different in temperament from scores of others who sacrificed their own and their fellow-passengers' lives in the excess of an animal panic. Clearly the spirit of discipline, though it makes such a vast difference in results, is one of the most accessible of human qualities. Fear of death is not so strong but what it is subdued by very trifling forces indeed,—by forces which it takes but little effort to implant in human nature. The spirit of discipline is no very deep quality, nothing that implies any true spiritual culture, but rather a superficial social habit, which works the great effects it does, less because it is so powerful, than because fear and panic in most men are, after all, very weak, whenever there is any collective motive acting on a considerable body of men to overcome them. Fear of death seems one of the most terrific of all forces. But really a mere thread of nervous energy and habit acting on a group of associated minds will utterly defy it,—and that without the help of faith, or hope, or even conscience, to help it.

But this being so, as it undoubtedly is, what strikes us as most remarkable is that the spiritual faith of centuries seems to have had so very little result in overcoming this weakest of all paralyzing terrors,—a terror which the love of tobacco completely subdues in an uneducated and undisciplined man, and which a very little discipline and esprit de corps would have subdued wholly in all who perished. How is it that by this time there are not a far larger number of persons who, in the immediate expectation of death, feel rather a curious desire for the change before them, though they do not deem it lawful to seek it for themselves, than anything like alarm? If a little esprit de corps will fully overcome the disposition for panic even in brutal men, how strange that centuries of a faith which, if it teaches anything, teaches spiritual presence of mind and dependence on God, should have apparently had no effect in nerving the spirit in the face of sudden danger and death! The physiological speculations which seem to show that even mental and moral tendencies are inherited, make the want of this presence of mind in the face of death even more astonishing. One would suppose that centuries of contemplation of the life beyond the grave would have steadied our nerves and strung our wills to meet unexpected death more as we should enter on an unexpected journey, than with the wild recoil of fear. Is, then, faith less operative than the emulation of shame produced by a very few months' common drill? Is it of less operative force than the attraction of that single last smoke, the enjoyment of which kept the poor navy calm amidst all the bewilderment and shrieks of his fellow-passengers on the wreck? Certainly human nature is a paradox. It is governed in great crises by motives so minute, and yet remains ungovernable in the presence of motives so powerful. It is kept firm in the face of death by a habit of yesterday, and yet seems to find no strength at all in the convictions of a lifetime. Responsibility to man makes it firm as a rock, and responsibility to God leaves it as changeable as the waves. A single thread of connection with the visible world—a thread just about to be severed—is all-powerful to guide what the strongest ties to the spiritual world—ties of life-long standing just about to become the only ties left—cannot even stir. Surely there is no stranger spectacle than the power of a modicum of social motive to steel men against the last fear, when all the combined forces of all the spiritual motives that Christianity has given us, after near two thousand years of influence, do not weigh as much as a bowl of tobacco against the death-panic with the majority of Englishmen.—London Spectator, on the "Loss of the Northfleet."

ECCLÉSIASTICISM IN BOSTON.

How thoroughly the founders of Boston carried out their purpose of rooting up out of mind and memory the traditional observances of the English Church, is shown at no time more forcibly than in the general popular oblivion, among the natives, of the season of Lent, and its culmination in Holy Week. The Roman Catholic multitude's decoration with sprigs of green on their return from church on Palm Sunday, is usually the first notion the native masses receive that the penitential season of the Church commemorating Christ's forty days' fast in the wilderness, has come and nearly gone. The Protestant Episcopal churches, from the influential character of their membership, though comparatively limited in numbers, do leave the impress of Lent on society, to a certain extent. No festivity where the world of fashion is expected to assist would be undertaken between Ash Wednesday and Easter. But the theatres and the concerts proceed as usual, and probably not even an opera-manager would think it necessary to intermit his season in Boston on account of Lent.

Hence Holy Week arrives and passes here without any lively popular consciousness that the great body of the Christian world is engaged in celebrating the most sacred mysteries. The ceremonies of what was anciently called the great or painful week, or week of sorrows, begin to-morrow, when Christ's entry into Jerusalem is commemorated by blessing and distributing palm or other green branches. On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the tenebrae (darkness) constitute the services, and the bells are not rung nor instruments of music sounded from Thursday until Sunday. On Friday, the day of the crucifixion, the altar, which has been veiled throughout Lent, is stripped of its ornaments, and the sorrowful services reach their height. Easter Sunday ushers in the glowing festival of the resurrection after the three days of darkness and silence. Seen in all the fulness of impressive ritual among the Roman Catholics, these Holy Week services are modified in the Episcopal churches according to the tastes and beliefs of the worshippers. The Episcopal churches in Boston run through the whole range from High to Low, with the Low or Evangelical preponderating, but with the High or Ritualistic persuasion represented by a church that outstrips anything in this country for ecclesiastical observances.

Truly, "extremes meet" in the existence in Puritan-bred Boston of the most ultra ecclesiasticism to be found anywhere in this country outside of the Roman Church. The Church of the Advent, in Bowdoin Street, which was (curiously enough, for another meeting of extremes) originally the meeting-house of Dr. Lyman Beecher, is still, from the necessities of the parish, a plain, old-fashioned meeting-house in general appearances. But connected with it is a "mission" of the "Society of St. John the Evangelist," an order or brotherhood claiming the authority of the Anglican Church, known in England as the "Cowley Fathers." These fathers have a monastery at Oxford, where the life of the monks of centuries ago is reproduced as closely as circumstances permit. The order has one more monastery besides, and that is in Staniford Street in this city, not far from the Church of the Advent. Here dwell some half-a-dozen modern monks, with Rev. Mr. Grafton, rector of the Church of the Advent, as the "father superior." The house is an ordinary brownstone-front residence exteriorly, but across the hallway, just within the outer doors, are two wooden gates, surmounted by a large wooden cross. Beyond this mediæval-looking portal no woman ever passes; for the fathers in the cells above stairs are celibates. The furniture is plain and severe, the chairs and benches are all without backs, and the floors bare of carpetings. In the "refectory" is a reading-desk, laden with an ancient tome or two, from which one of the fathers read, while the rest, seated on stools around the table, eat their frugal meals in silence. The injunction of continual silence in the monastery is repeated from placards on all the walls. The monks move silently about from cell to oratory, to library, or refectory, in their long, black gowns, with a knotted girdle about the waist, and their day is parcelled out according to a posted order signed by the father superior. One of the fathers (they are all quite young men) rises at half-past five, and intoning a Latin phrase receives from the cell of each waking priest a "Deo gratias" in reply. Then the "Primes and lauds" in the little chapel, or oratory, on the second floor (where the altar bears the candles and other paraphernalia of the Catholic Church), at a quarter of six, two hours before breaking fast, and henceforth throughout the day an almost continual series of prayers and services of various kinds, noted by the father superior with their ancient ecclesiastical designations. Other duties of the young monks are celebrating the many daily services in the Church of the Advent. It will not surprise the reader, after the foregoing, to be told that the confessional is a part of the discipline at the Church of the Advent. The entire institution, which flourishes with considerable popularity, is as pure a bit of mediæval ecclesiasticism as can be found anywhere in the Old World.—Daily Transcript, March 19.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

REPORT OF THE NEW YORK STATE PRISON ASSOCIATION—SUGGESTIONS FOR PRISON REFORM.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 9.—The thirtieth annual report of the Prison Association of New York, which has been presented in the Legislature and ordered to be printed, sets forth some important facts. Besides bringing advice and material aid to upward of 2,000 prisoners at the time of release from the prisons and penitentiaries, and making special inquiry into the personal history and wants of more than 10,000 inmates of the jails in this State, the members of this organization have pursued a system of inquiries into the sources and preventable causes of crime. The total number of penitentiary prisoners at the beginning of the year 1874 was 2,856. The number admitted during the year was 10,960. The number discharged, including deaths and 70 pardons, was 10,586. Therefore, 13,816 prisoners have received treatment in the penitentiaries during the year, and 3,012 are reported as remaining in prison at the beginning of the fiscal year. Of the total number, 16.62 per cent. were under 20 years of age, and 6,019, or 54.91 per cent., were under 30 years of age. The habit of intemperance or drunkenness was confessed by 75 per cent. of all who were admitted to five of the penitentiaries. Only 3,416 of the total number of prisoners were married persons. Following are some of the suggestions and conclusions of the report:—

First: That there shall be a prompt and searching inquiry into the pernicious consequences of the failure to steadily maintain a system of hard labor as an indispensable part of prison discipline.

Second: That there should be entire and permanent separation of the hardened and vicious criminals who are dangerous or injurious to younger and more inexperienced convicts.

Third: That there is a practical necessity for giving every young convict in the State Prisons and Penitentiaries knowledge and experience in an employment or trade by means of which an honest and useful course of life may be best secured.

Fourth: That the awakening of all the available powers of the mind and the moral nature of the prisoner should be prompted by suitable means.

Fifth: That while experience shows that the rigorous and impartial discipline of hard labor and strict obedience are the first elements of successful penitentiary treatment, that whatever awakens and strengthens the substantial hopes of useful and honorable life in the prisoner gives the surest basis for permanent reformation and good conduct.

Sixth: That crime, disease, and pauperism entail evils of their own respective kinds upon successive generations.

Seventh: That to sever the links in the chain of such entailed evils, and to instruct, train, and save every child, is to reduce the criminal classes, and break up the entailment of the evils which defy remedies, and curative discipline in adult lives.—N. Y. Tribune.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"ANIMAL IMPLUME BIPES."

FROM THE RUSSIAN OF OZBONHAUZ.

BY ALBERT WARREN KELSEY.

What mighty forces mingling ran
As warp and woof to that vast plan
Which formed the grand result—a Man!

From sea-grown weeds of little worth,
Through shapes that wound and crept on earth,
A human being had his birth,—

Just one removal from the brute,
With form adapted but to suit
His search for food, from prey to root.

No past could move his feeble sense
To ask that awful question, "Whence?"
For in supremest confidence

He lived each day, and knew no more
That he had lived the day before,
Than that the next day life was o'er.

His body's movement formed his mind
And good and evil so combined,
That neither could the other find.

Not knowing right, he knew no wrong:
In all he did 'twas but his strong,
Fierce nature carried him along.

His senses' zest, his passions' joy,
He never scrupled to enjoy,
For conscience could not him annoy.

No mystic hopes, no idle fears
For something other than the years
He lived, gave cause for smiles or tears.

Heedless, he saw his race increase,
His own life blossom, ripen, cease:
Absence of thought was mental peace.

Our wiser age has yet to learn
That peace of mind we seek to earn
Results from something that we spurn.

With grossest inconsistency,
We dream that perfect peace may be
United with mind's mystery:

But thought is motion—peace is rest;
And each is good; though which the best,
"Beyond the veil" may be confessed,
But ne'er on earth can be expressed!

CHRISTIAN ADVERTISING.

BY G. B. BARTLETT.

I'm a poor, hard-working farmer, that's never done no harm,
But have labored hard for fifty years to clear my little farm;

And my dear wife has churned, and spun, and toiled with all her might,
From long before the break of day till after candle-light;
We read our Bible Sundays, and the Christian paper, too,
With equal faith in both of them, that what they teach is true.

As our paper recommended some bonds at ten per cent.,
I called my woman to me to see if she'd consent
To selling off our homestead that we might thus invest,
And living on the ten per cent. to end our days in rest.
Our pastor come to see us and approved of the idea:
"I'll put five hundred dollars in, 'tis all I have," says he;
"The savings of my three-score years, for I'm growing old,
And 'twill make me independent while I watch my little fold."

I'm stopping at the poor-house now; somehow my bonds don't pay.

Thank God! my darling did not live to see this dreary day;
For when she heard the neighbors say we'd come upon the town

It somehow broke her noble heart! she kinder wilted down.
But most of all I pity them who put the notice in;
For how their homeless children must be sufferin'.
Their wives must take in washing, and must scrimp in every way,

As the bonds they had such faith in, don't somehow seem to pay.

When I heard the old man's story, a vision rose to view
Of splendid brown-stone mansions on a spacious avenue,
And how their pious owners must enjoy this text to see,
"As to the very least of these you did it unto me."

—Christian Register.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 10.

Cash, 50 cents; Cash, 20 cents; F. E. Abbot, $50; Wm. Wiley, $10; C. E. Streeter, $1; H. D. Maxson, 50 cents; John Richards, 75 cents; W. T. Newton, $3.20; John V. Faith, $3.20; W. A. Brazee, 75 cents; L. H. Kindy, 75 cents; H. G. Wythe, 75 cents; D. H. Hunnewell, $3.20; S. G. Whiting, $3.20; Chas. Mead, $3; G. K. Withington, $3.20; H. W. Whitney, $3.20; N. H. Hunt, $3; Carl Zerrahn, $1; Chas. Voysey, $33.33; James Manson, $5.56; —, $3.20; Victor Bishop, $3.20; James Damon, $3.20; Chas. Aplin, $5.50; Thos. Martin, $3.20; J. E. Follett, $3.20; Mrs. L. B. Sayles, $3.20; Maxwell Ramsby, 20 cents; Jerome Bass, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 15, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

It is stated by the Boston Post that the petition of Mr. Julius Nieland for naturalization papers was made out in due form; that the petitioner had been five years a resident of the United States and one year of Pennsylvania; and that his moral and mental character was all that could be required. Judge Pratt and Judge Hare refused to naturalize him solely "on account of being an infidel."

AS REASONS for not actively pushing the work of the Liberal League, Judge — "fears his legal practice will suffer," and Dr. — "said active work would ruin his practice;" while a third thought his nationality stood in the way of his usefulness with Americans. Our informant adds: "Well, here are the three most prominent men in the League unwilling to act." Some of the difficulties in the way of the Liberal League are revealed pretty plainly in such statements. It requires some self-sacrifice to make it useful and effective. Cannot this be found, if the objects are approved?

I WISH to call the attention of the readers of THE INDEX to three lectures on Natural History, to be given at No. 3 Tremont Place, on Thursday afternoons, at 3 o'clock, beginning April 15. Miss Lewis, the lecturer, is a genuine Abolitionist of the good old stock, who devoted her energies to succoring the fugitive slave until he needed her help no longer, and then felt free to turn to the study of Nature, which she has always loved. She has devoted ten or twelve years to the earnest pursuit of this branch of science, and won the appreciation of many distinguished men in her own State. She now proposes for the first time to make public the results of her studies and original observations. Insects and birds have been especial objects of attention to her; and with special reference to the latter class she will trace out the leading laws of organization and development in the world of Nature. We trust the friends of woman's higher development, as well as of scientific progress, will give her a fair chance to show what she has accomplished in this interesting and noble pursuit.

E. D. C.

A PRIVATE letter from London, quoted in the Boston Transcript, tells of the visit of a lady to Westminster Abbey: "Holding the Catholic faith, the lady was moved to offer her devotions at the shrine of Edward the Confessor. Kneeling upon the time-worn floor, where thousands had before knelt, she was telling her beads and saying her prayers, when she was interrupted by the horrified beadle. Shaking her by the arm, he said, 'This won't do, mum; it's quite out of place, mum. Against the law, mum, and really you must go somewhere else, mum!' Taking no heed of his interruption, the lady finished her devotions. Rising, she confronted the beadle, still aghast at this trespass upon the sanctuary under his charge, and it was truly refreshing to see how quietly but effectually she annihilated this custodian. With the gentlest manner and blindest of tones, she asked if she was not mistaken in what she had just heard; if it was possible that in any Christian Church in Christian England a Christian woman was denied the privilege of saying her prayers. Reminding him that the noble abbey was reared by Catholic hands, she asked if he was not just a little overstepping the bounds of his brief authority, and fairly drove the beadle from the field by her kind manner and persuasive words. Then there is an old English law forbidding any person telling his beads or making the sign of the cross in any public place, under severe penalties; but it would be hardly credible that it is enforced at the present time, but for this incident."

THE "MAIN BUSINESS" OF RADICALISM.

A respected correspondent vindicates in another column the course of those radicals who "see no use in the Liberal League," and who hear no summons to action in such events as the refusal of naturalization papers to Mr. Nieland, of Philadelphia, "on account of being an infidel." Believing strongly in the duty of all who value the civil and political rights of the unorthodox to make emphatic protest against such injustice and to take prompt and vigorous measures for its redress, we nevertheless thank Mr. C. for defending so ably and so courteously the views of those who consider that the proper course of radicals under the circumstances is pure passivity. He may be right and we wrong, or vice versa; but it is a reason for encouragement when radicals begin to discuss thoughtfully what public duties such circumstances may impose upon them.

1. The editorial paragraph which chiefly called out Mr. C.'s article was as follows:—

"Cases of encroachment on religious liberty in this country are multiplying with disturbing rapidity. A witness has lately been denied the right to testify in the courts of New York City,—a member of the legislature has been summarily ejected in North Carolina,—and now, as described by Professor L. in another column, an applicant has just been refused his naturalization papers in Philadelphia,—all because of religious opinions. Such cases are continually occurring, these being only illustrations that are fresh in our memory; and yet radicals see 'no use' in the Liberal League. How much longer are they to be publicly trampled on before they betray their discomfort? Or don't they care unless the insult and outrage are inflicted upon each and every individual radical in the country? If a British subject is insulted anywhere, the whole empire flames with wrath, and reparation is exacted forthwith. Would that American free-thinkers had a spark of the same spirit! We are thoroughly mortified that such things as these can happen, while yet the indignities insolently put upon the rights of free thought call forth no determination to protect these rights by some general measure. Yes, radicals, we are ashamed by your tame, mean-spirited indifference, when your reply to one such outrage ought to be a thousand Liberal Leagues, starting up like Roderick Dhu's clansmen from the heather."

1. The first point of Mr. C.'s article is one that we reluctantly notice. He says: "Some one will suggest that the two utterances mentioned above are somewhat chieftain-like, wherein the editor assumes the rôle of Roderick Dhu, blowing his shrill whistle (but without its once magical effect) to conjure up the lurking 'clansmen of the heather.' Not so the present writer," etc.

The "editor" has not "assumed the rôle of Roderick Dhu"; and that there can be any such Papuan intelligence among the radicals of this country as to "assume the rôle" of this apocryphal "some one," we shall refuse to believe until it reveals itself unmistakably by making the absurd "suggestion" intimated. We credit all our readers with brain enough to avoid so fatuous a misunderstanding of so very plain a simile. The Roderick Dhu required by this simile is self-evidently not THE INDEX, much less its editor, but rather the love of liberty in each radical's soul—liberty being the only "chieftain" that any radical can for a moment recognize. The paragraph clearly enough implies that the radicals ought to hear their leader's "shrill whistle" in the "outrage" reported,—in the swift summons of their own hearts when liberty is thus publicly insulted. If they will not hear that, they would not hear though Roderick Dhu himself should rise from the dead to blow his own bugle. It certainly did not occur to us that any reader of THE INDEX could possibly miss the whole point of our comparison—the mere instantaneous and simultaneous response in many minds to an event that was in itself a trumpet call. Mr. C. does not miss it himself: why should he imagine that any one else could miss it? Except under the bias of a gratuitous suspicion which we decline to discuss, no one could fail to comprehend a simile so transparently clear.

When a night attack is made on the camp, and the first soldier that chances to be awakened beats a drum to rouse his sleeping comrades, is it the part of good sense to suspect that he thereby assumes to be "braver" than they, or "misjudges" them because he believes that they are asleep? They who should spend their time in such accusations would better employ it in providing for the common defence. So much "assumption of superiority of insight, bravery, and earnestness in the liberal cause" as may be implied in the belief that a large proportion of our fellow-radicals are asleep when they ought to be awake, passive when they ought to be active, submissive when they ought to be strenuous in self-defence, we unhesitatingly plead guilty to; and we try to rouse them from their seeming lethargy simply because we believe that the cause of human rights demands their aid. When a German fellow-citizen is denied the privileges of a freeman in this republic avowedly on the ground that he is an "infidel," it must not be left unsaid that every instinct of manhood summons to his side, at the very least, the liberals whose own most sacred rights are outraged in his person. We cannot help it, if indifference to his oppression looks also like deficiency of self-respect; and we cannot reckon it as censoriousness to be ashamed of to say so publicly with the emphasis which the case demands.

2. General measures of some sort are indispensable to protect the religious liberty of the whole people; and that existing laws are inadequate for this purpose is proved by the occurrence of a single case like Mr. Nieland's. If we only saw among the radicals a general disposition to vindicate the rights of free thought in any way at all, whether in the poor way we have ventured to propose or in some better way of their own, we should have no need to mention the Liberal League; but when they do not lift so much as a finger to carry any measure whatever for the general defence of these violated fundamental rights, how can it be said that there is only a difference of opinion as to methods? The difference is as to objects. The Demands of Liberalism are an enumeration of objects; and the form of organization which has been submitted to the public under the name of the Liberal League leaves the question of methods wholly open. If a better mode can be devised for uniting the energies of all radicals in the work of perfecting and strengthening the Constitutional guarantees of religious liberty (and this is the whole end and aim of the Liberal League), we shall instantly abandon the mode already proposed. But do not let us confound objects with methods. The "main business" of religious radicalism in this country is to finish the task of separating Church and State—a task which must consist in carrying the very points specified in the Demands of Liberalism, and in securing some form of a Religious Freedom Amendment to the United States Constitution. No other "main business" can be named; and the keeping of it "in full view of all liberals" will most certainly not "do itself, in fact." On the contrary, nothing is more difficult than to convince the pre-occupied, indifferent radical public that they have any "main business" at all. Once convinced that they have a common public duty, as the most intelligent part of the nation in all that concerns religious progress or reform, and they will soon see for themselves that the object named is the only "main business" before them. It is not methods that we are strenuous for, but objects; for objects, once heartily embraced, will create their own methods. It is the apparent total lack of earnestness in secularizing our political institutions, the apparent total ignorance of the fact that religious radicalism has any "main business" at all, which makes radicalism feeble and despised, and invites just such outrages as the expulsion of Mr. Thorne from the North Carolina Legislature, the exclusion of Mr. Treat from the witness-stand, and the disfranchisement of Mr. Nieland. The only "main business" which radicalism is apparently conscious of to-day is to take these kicks and cuffs with sang-froid, and to turn the other cheek; and we long for the day when it shall discover that its real "main business" is to render such incessant insults and wrongs impossible forevermore. The approaching national Centennial will celebrate our forefathers' stern resistance to tyranny; but, for all that yet appears, the liberals of the land propose to adorn the occasion with the admirable foil of their own meek submission to it.

3. By all means would we put "one question" to the religious radicals of our country, day, and generation; though it is not precisely the one suggested by Mr. C. It is this: "Do you not see that it is your 'main business' to put an end to all outrages, little or great, upon the equal rights of American citizens, because of their religious opinions? That, when you recognize this as your veritable 'main business,' you cannot do it without carrying the Demands of Liberalism and the Religious Freedom Amendment, in some form or other? And that you cannot carry these measures without doing the work of the Liberal League, whether you choose to do it under that name or not?" This triple question as a whole, three-in-one, we do put most earnestly to the radicals of our time and clime; and we solicit replies to it from such as can think clearly and write strongly.

4. Our emphasis is not on the Liberal League just as we have proposed it, whether one, or one thousand, or fifty thousand in number; but rather on some form of organization which shall be thoroughly fitted to do the "main business" of radicalism. Nevertheless, we will meet the questions put by Mr. C., in objection to any and all such organizations. He argues that a thousand Liberal Leagues would undoubtedly call into existence a thousand illiberal ones; that, if this should happen, the best thing would be for both sides to disband, without either fighting or voting; that the appeal to numbers will cause the radicals to be at once outnumbered; that radicals must rely on slow natural causes as the only fit agencies, unaccompanied by any organized efforts of their own; that "Thought" will do it all, without the aid of concerted Action. This is the gist of his argument.

Our reply is this. Perhaps every Liberal League would be met by one or a dozen illiberal ones; very likely this might happen. But would that be any reason for discouragement or dismay? Exactly the contrary. There would be no fighting; that bugbear may be dismissed. But there would be discussions, debates, speeches, conventions, editorials, pamphlets, lectures, sermons, and all the various other expressions of thought profoundly stirred by the certainty of approaching political action. Voting might go against liberalism year after year, as has always been its history; but in the end it would win. Numbers are at last conquered, and brought over to the side of truth. In any republic this is the only means of reforming bad laws or introducing good ones; it is precisely the means which liberalism has nothing to fear from—precisely the means which conservatism is shrewd enough most sedulously to avoid. Of course we rely on "Thought," as confidently and as patiently as Mr. C. But such agitation as this will do more in one year to provoke thought, and bring it to wholesome results, than all other means combined can do in ten or twenty years. The Liberal League means nothing but "Thought"; it is not an army or a posse comitatus, but a body of thinkers applying their intelligence methodically to the work of enlightening thoughtlessness on questions of profoundest import, and bringing about results in liberal legislation just as fast as they can win over the people to liberal ideas. It is the most peaceable and justifiable of all agencies; relying on persuasion and argument, on practical work and moral appeal. Does Mr. C. or any one suppose that we counsel rant or rhodomontade, much less fierce, bitter, inflammatory speech or disorderly and riotous action? He cannot seriously have entertained such a notion for an instant; yet his argument goes for nothing, if he entertained any other. General causes work results in society only as thought is formed, expressed, and applied; and the Liberal League is one of those various causes without which no legislative reform or progress ever has been or ever will be secured. It is itself the result of thought; it creates thought; it aims to put thought into the permanent form of constitutional or statutory guarantees of religious freedom. Let the silly phantasm of a band of conspirators plotting violence or deeds of hatred be dismissed from the imagination; the Liberal League is only an association of persons sufficiently disinterested to do some very tiresome drudgery with the hope of shaping public opinion in favor of just practical measures, and carrying liberal and just ideas into practical effect. Any other notion of it is the merest moonshine.

5. Mr. C. considers conspicuous cases of outrage on the rights of free thought to be of a specially liberalizing tendency. In one sense this is true; in another, totally untrue. Outrage in itself is simply outrage, beginning and ending in wrong; but among the effects it produces must be reckoned the reaction it creates. If Mr. C. will only analyze the facts, he will see that an outrage which creates no powerful protest, such as would be the very attempt by a "thousand Liberal Leagues" to prevent its recurrence by statute or constitutional amendment, could not possibly have anything but a brutalizing tendency. Otherwise, why not rejoice in the multiplication of outrages, and indeed go into the outrage business ourselves?

There are two kinds of radicalism—one content with thought alone, the other eager to apply thought to the rectification of wrongs. If we consider the latter as nobler than the former, it is because nobility cannot stay in the narrow circle of self, but goes out to spend and be spent. When the "very patient type of radicalism" learns to be impatient at the infliction of wrongs on others, and impatient with itself till it has at least endeavored to right them, we shall certainly think it a much nobler thing than it seems.

And if this is "disparagement," we must submit to the imputation.

6. The relevancy of the last part of Mr. C.'s article is not perfectly clear to us. If we understand it, it is an argument for not saying a word against any but next-door evils. Intrusiveness is, of course, injurious in general and in particular; but we do not see what it has to do with the Liberal League, which minds its own "main business" severely, namely, to seek the protection of all American citizens in their religious liberty and equal religious rights.

In conclusion, we would express a strong desire to have this whole subject discussed on both sides in THE INDEX. It is a question that surely concerns every radical: "What is the main business of radicalism?"

EDUCATION.

"Please tell us what you mean by education," remarked a lady, in a recent reform-meeting in this city. The remark, made in perfect good faith, was addressed to those who lay emphasis upon education as the most efficient means of promoting the moral improvement of society.

As one of those who believe in the prime importance and all-cogent efficacy of education, as bearing upon the matter of social welfare, I admit the eminent practicalness and pertinency of the intelligent lady's inquiry. If we deprecate concentration of interest and effort upon this or that special measure of reform, and urge instead a general movement looking to the abatement of ignorance in the community, and universal education of the masses, she, as a "reformer," has a right to challenge us for a definition of our favorite word education, and to ask us exactly what and how much we mean by it. Do we mean that, if all the people be taught to read, write, and cipher, they will be virtuous? Do we mean that, if a compulsory-education law were to be passed in every State of this Union, and all the children over seven years of age and under fourteen were to be made to attend the common schools,—say, four or six hours a day for, say, as many months in each year,—vice and crime would thereby be removed from society? Or do we mean that, if all the youth of both sexes could be taught the classics and the higher mathematics,—in other words be sent to college, and given what is called a liberal education,—we should then have a perfectly moral community, and a model social state? The demand for definitions is always in order; and no surer way than this exists of testing the intelligibility and efficacy of any theory advanced by this or that party to meet the supposed or real exigencies of the hour. An idea which cannot be defined cannot certainly be applied; that is, cannot be made of much use in this practical world of ours. Therefore, those who advocate education as the great panacea for all our social evils should be able to tell pretty clearly what they mean by the word, or the thing, itself.

If one word can define another word, I should say that education means simply evolution. It means the thorough and harmonious development of our nature. It means the gradual unfolding and edification of character.

It is a great mistake to suppose that education means mere learning, or acquirement, or accomplishment—something, in short, that is usually obtained in schools, and under teachers, so-called. It is a great mistake to suppose that education means only knowledge, in the ordinary acceptance of that word: something derived from study, from books, from lecture-rooms, from academic training; information gathered from various sources, upon many subjects, and filling the mind with intellectual abundance. Education includes all these, indeed; but in its completeness it means something vastly more radical than is expressed by any of the familiar words used in defining it. It means something that makes a man and a woman in their entirety. It means something that produces a full, rounded, rich, useful life—a life that reconciles us to the world, and sheds joy and beauty as the sun sheds light and heat.

Hitherto, the Church has declared that "religion" is the great promoter of virtue, and the all-sufficient safeguard of society; and yet history shows that no crimes against humanity have been blacker than those done in the name of "religion," and by the agency of "religious" men and institutions. Perhaps this scientific age is in a similar danger of ascribing too much moral efficacy to education, as the name and the thing are popularly understood. I am not so positive as some are, that statistics would invariably show that the most intelligent communities are the freest from crime. Knowledge is power, surely, but it is not always a power for good; sometimes it is a fearful power for evil. The most successful rogues are not ignorant men, but very intelligent ones. The dullest blockheads in the State are seldom offenders against public peace and welfare; they hew our wood and draw our water, and do our hard and disagreeable work for us, and give us no more trouble than the patient ox or the faithful horse. But it is the bright and knowing, yet unprincipled, men who prove our veriest scamps and rascals. It takes a man of extraordinary brains to steal a whole railroad, and corrupt an entire legislature,—and of such capable scoundrels our educational systems in the North have turned out quite too many. If the statistics of crime among college-graduates could be taken, and compared with similar statistics among the graduates of our farms and factories and workshops, I doubt very much if we should find that what we call education had proved more effective for virtue than the lack of it. In these days, the boy who is put to learn a trade is quite as likely to turn out to be a good citizen, as the one who is sent to the university; and perhaps he is much more likely to be a thoroughly self-reliant and useful man.

Nevertheless, education is the one thing needful for all men—and all women. But it is a real and true education which we need, and not a quasi one. We need an education which shall do for each individual what the law of evolution has done or is doing for the race,—which shall bring us gradually into a comprehension and exercise of all our powers and faculties. A little knowledge, or false knowledge, is a dangerous thing; but more knowledge, perfect and true knowledge, is complete and utter safety!

Perhaps our present civilization stands in need of nothing more than a wiser understanding and interpretation of the word and the thing, education. Our whole educational system needs revision and improvement, beginning with our common schools and ending with our universities. Nay, ought we not to go back of our common schools, and make education to begin in the nursery, even in the mother's arms? Doubtless we shall begin here, when we have learned well what education is,—that it is no forcing process, no intermeddling, arbitrary dictation; but something in which Nature and art, God and man, have an equal and reciprocal part. It appears to me not improbable that something like the "Kindergarten" has an important function to perform in all our future processes of education; that, at any rate, many of the ideas and suggestions prominent in the system of "Kindergarten" will be hereafter generally adopted, not only in the education of children, but in that of more advanced learners; nay, even in the education of the adult man, which is to continue throughout his whole life.

For herein is the important fact, that the real and true education on which all our social interests depend is for the whole life, and not any particular period of it. As the process of evolution is endless in its operation in the race, so that of education must be for the child, the youth, and the adult—must stretch throughout the entire experience of the individual.

On this sort of continuous education, or evolution, of human nature and human character we must build all our solid hopes for man. Herein and hereon we must, as philanthropists, lay our heavy emphasis. Any special work of "reforming" which we can do, will be only a patching and tinkering of the social fabric. Let those do it, who feel they must, or think they can; no intentional hindrance shall they receive from me. But in formation rather than re-formation is my faith. And for this work the "eternal years of God" are needed; and all "evils" incident to its gradual accomplishment we must be patient and brave enough to endure.

A. W. S.

THE HOLYOAKE FUND.

Mr. G. W. Smalley, the well-known London correspondent of the New York Tribune, thus writes of Mr. George Jacob Holyoake, whose letters to THE INDEX have been so highly appreciated by its readers:—

Mr. Holyoake announces that the first volume of his History of Coöperation in England, embracing the Pioneer Period from 1812 to 1844, is now in the hands of the Coöperative Printers, and will soon be out of the press. The second volume will follow later. I have lately mentioned Mr. Holyoake as a leading authority on coöperation. There is, I think, no book which undertakes to do as much for this important subject as Mr. Holyoake's, or in the same way, or with the same opportunities of personal knowledge about the matter. The book has the following dedication:—

TO WENDELL PHILLIPS,
OF AMERICA:
A COUNTRY
WHERE WHAT IS NEW IS WELCOME;
WHERE WHAT IS TRUE EXPANDS:
TO HIM
WHOSE INTREPID VOICE,
CONFRONTING DANGEROUS MAJORITIES,
ANIMATING FORLORN HOPES,
HAS EVER BEEN RAISED
ON BEHALF OF THE SLAVE, BLACK OR WHITE,
IN BONDAGE TO PLANTER OR CAPITALIST;
THIS HISTORY OF THE PIONEER PERIOD OF CO-OPERATION IN ENGLAND IS INSCRIBED WITH GRATITUDE AND REGARD
BY
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

Some friends of Mr. George Jacob Holyoake have begun a subscription for him—in which I think there must be Americans who would like to join. Mr. Holyoake has been ill for some months. He has reached an age at which his brilliant abilities and his industry would have given him wealth, had he chosen to make them of service to himself. But he has been all his life working for others and for certain ideas or principles. You may agree with him or not, but the number of men who devote themselves unselfishly and helpfully to promoting the welfare of others is not so great that you can afford not to admire Mr. Holyoake. His committee seek to recognize his services to unfriended truth, extending over thirty years; services of great public use, often perilous, of a nature the reverse of profitable to him, continually involving exclusion from positions of credit or profit, while his time and resources were taxed in many ways more than one country. With means of reasonable leisure and choice of pursuit, they add, it is believed he may continue his efforts in behalf of free-thought and progress; and that is why they want a fund raised for him.

Mr. Holyoake was perhaps earliest known as the founder of Secularism, a system which, as he defines it, bases organized action on moral and scientific agreements, apart from atheism and theology. Of late years he became most conspicuous as a writer on cooperation, on which he is a very high authority. His History of Cooperation in Rochdale was the means of founding two hundred and fifty coöperative societies within two years. He has lately been engaged on a general History of Cooperation, shortly to be published; a book of the greatest interest and value, judging from a few chapters which I have seen. A recent notice of him says:—

"Mr. Holyoake was the last person imprisoned in England for alleged atheism, and the last person against whom an indictment was issued by the Court of Exchequer for publishing unstamped papers in support of the Society for Repealing the Taxes upon Knowledge; Mr. Holyoake having incurred upwards of £800,000 of fines (which he was under the necessity of asking the Chancellor of the Exchequer to take weekly). The repeal of the Newspaper Stamp Act, however, caused the prosecution to be abandoned. He was chiefly instrumental in causing the Evidence Amendment Bill to be passed, which legalized purely secular affirmations; Mr. Holyoake having incurred loss and public outrage through refusing all his life to take an oath. He suggested and furnished the scheme of the last Blue Book issued by Lord Clarendon, the first of a series now preparing by the Foreign Office on the 'Condition of the Industrial Classes in Foreign Countries.'"

I quote that remark about atheism at the risk of frightening off some worthy people, whom I hope to win back by telling them that Mr. Holyoake's London Committee is headed by three clergymen of the Church of England, of whom the Rev. Stopford Brooke is one. Other names on it are Sir Charles Dilke, Mr. Thomas Hughes, Mrs. Lynn Linton, Mr. Walter Morrison, and Prof. Huxley. Antislavery men of other days will recognize Mr. Holyoake as the writer of those powerful letters, under the signature of "Ion," to which Mr. Phillips once paid the compliment of an elaborate criticism. Not to extend my notice too far, I add only that Mr. Holyoake, while finding time to give active assistance to liberal movements in many countries, is one of those to whom the workmen of England are most indebted for their recent increase of opportunities and enlightenment. Subscriptions already promised here amount to some $4,000. Americans may send money through any banker to the London and Westminster Bank, St. James' Square, London. Or I dare say the Tribune will receive and forward subscriptions.

The editor of the Tribune has announced that he will forward contributions to the Holyoake Fund; and we shall be very happy to do the same, if any are sent to THE INDEX.

A PROMINENT Boston clergyman recently said: "The pendulum of toleration has swung to the wall—it is time to look for a rebound!" And, says the Banner of Light, such a rebound toward arbitrary authority in all the concerns of life and government the bigots are seeking to bring to pass, pausing in their labors in any given direction only when it becomes evident to them that it were better to wait for awhile till the chain in other points is fastened more securely upon the people.

AN OLD LADY, in a storm at sea, was told that only Providence could save the passengers. "Has it come to that?" she exclaimed. "How dreadful!"

Literary Notices.

THE RAINBOW CREED. A Story of the Times. Boston: William F. Gill & Co., 151 Washington Street. 1875.

This is truly a story adapted to the times. Radical thought, free inquiry, and the supremacy of reason form its basis. Its title seems to be justified by the exposure of the various-colored interpretations which Christian ministers give, in the privacy of their own minds, to one and the same creed to which they all subscribe. It shows how the spontaneity of reason and the tendency to free, independent thought is attempted to be put down and crushed out by theological teachers and denominational influences; and that the young student who has the temerity to think for himself must be turned adrift, and his resources withheld. It satirizes the inconsistencies between profession and practice, and exhibits the selfish, narrow, and bigoted temper which often lurks beneath religious professions. There are allusions to the "Great Scandal" of the times, to prominent radicals of the day, and to the Free Religious movement.

All this is strung upon an interesting thread of story. A young man, Malcolm, left an orphan at an early age, with no talent for practical business, but having the germs of original and free thought, is thrown upon himself. He goes to sea, is interested in observations upon men and things, drinks in inspiration from Nature, and becomes an earnest student within the limits of his means. At length he saves from shipwreck the life of a man who proves to be the owner of great wealth, obtained, indeed, by questionable means, but who in his way is scrupulously pious, and devotes much to religious purposes. Filled with gratitude to the poor young man, he takes him to his home where his only companion is a daughter, the heir of all his wealth. As a matter of course these young people fall in love with each other. The father is wroth, and Malcolm leaves the house and his adored one "forever." But the daughter cannot bear the separation. The father loves his child, and really at heart is attached to Malcolm. A happy scheme is devised. The young man is to be made a minister, and is sent to a theological school for training. But he cannot be kept within the limits of creed, and is at last dismissed. The father is again in anger, and Malcolm relinquishes all claim to the daughter. But she, appreciating the nobleness of his character, gives up her own creed-religion, renounces all title to her father's estate, and is ready to go forth in poverty, to stand side by side with him who values truth above all things else. The father relents, is glad to find "an honest man in the world," and is convinced, after all, that Malcolm is not opposed to true religion.

As a specimen of the work, the following extract is given:—

"For a few days another student had shared Malcolm's room, and, when night arrived, both went to bed and arose in the morning in entire oblivion of the necessity of prayer. At last Brown, as the other student was called—a dapper, little, red-headed fellow—came to Malcolm, and said in a very solemn tone: 'It seems to me that we have not been faithful to our eternal interests; but, not to speak of these, if we intend to be Christian ministers, it is very necessary that we should give some time to prayer. Ought we not to exercise ourselves in private that we may excel in the public performance of the devotional function?' 'Certainly, friend,' exclaimed Malcolm, who at the time actually felt the force of his chum's remark, 'ease of utterance is essential.' 'Well,' said Brown, in genuine sacerdotal style, 'I'll officiate to-night, and you will in the morning.' 'Allright,' said Malcolm, who had again resumed his pen.

"That night Brown knelt, and, after making an excellent prayer, rose and turned in, in an excellent humor with himself. Malcolm envied him his flow of words, and asked how he contrived to pray so easily. The embryo public instructor called to him from under the blankets, that faith was the key to the door of that gift, and that he ought to give it as much attention as he could.

"Next morning, Malcolm arose as usual, entirely forgetting the promised officiation. Not so his friend, who piously informed him that it was 'his turn.' Thereupon they both knelt, in 'the trailing garments of the night,' each at his own bedside, and Malcolm lifted up his voice. He had hardly reached the end of the first sentence, when a most overpowering sense of the absurdity of the whole proceeding came over him, so that he could not utter a word. He broke down most infamously, to the amazement of little Brown, who, removing a sanctimonious finger from his left eye, looked round to see what was keeping him. Poor Malcolm, who naturally wondered how Brown was taking this stoppage in the transmission of the message to the gods, also removed a finger from the eye nearest the expectant hearer, and turned his head slightly in his direction. Their eyes met, and for a moment gazed into one another, the one indicating profound amazement, and the other a vague anxiety. What were they to do? Suddenly the ludicrousness of the situation told on Malcolm so powerfully, that he could not repress the mirth that bubbled to his lips. Brown caught the infection, and, affected likewise, the gentle mirth rapidly grew into peals of convulsive merriment. It is needless to say that from that day to this these young men never officiated for each other."

A. H.

A WITTY DIVINE once remarked that, from one point of view, at least, the Pope was the true successor of St. Peter. He always knew the fish that had money in its mouth.

Communications.

THE USELESSNESS OF THE LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your issue of April 1 contains at least two editorial utterances, such as I have often seen in THE INDEX before, which may fairly be taken as reproaches of radical "indifferentism," tameness, meanness of spirit, and some other things: of which radical failings, sufficiently deserving reproach, no doubt, there are, let us admit, enough. And let me, for one, admire the editor's disdain and (where it is just) severe rebuke.

1. Some one will suggest that the two utterances mentioned above are somewhat chieftain-like, where-in the editor assumes the rôle of Roderick Dhu, blowing his shrill whistle (but without its once magical effect) to conjure up the lurking "clansmen from the heather."

Not so the present writer. He will rather recognize therein, not without respect, not entirely without sympathy, the impetuous outburst of strong and earnest conviction, impatient of sloth and of all manner of half-conviction, unable, in its poor, pitiable half-state, to find for itself a decent and anywise brave expression.

Yet do I think that such apparently excited utterances carry in themselves, however unconsciously to the utterer, if not a real assumption of superiority of insight, bravery, and earnestness in the liberal cause, at least a harshness of judgment amounting to a mis-judgment of certain intelligent and sincere radicals, brave and earnest enough, too, who "see no use in the Liberal League."

But let this pass—this matter of an editor's unintentional misjudgment of a considerable number of his readers and fellow-workers, who differ from him upon certain questions of organization, Liberal League and other.

2. What seems most needful is, that some main business be kept in full view of all liberals, however these may divide on questions of "How" and "What First." This will most likely be done,—will do itself, in fact. Very well: when it comes to methods, then let us have a fair hearing of opinions; and let none be "ashamed" of all others whose opinions differ from his own. Difference of opinion is not "indifferentism," on one side more than on another. To conclude on any side that on others it is "indifferentism" argues something in the conclusion itself whereof it were well to be ashamed, perhaps.

Why, then, instead of telling radicals in general how "shamed" he is by their indifference, tameness, and meanness of spirit, as shown in their not organizing themselves forthwith into Liberal Leagues ("by their not responding," some one will say, "to the shrill whistle of bold Roderick Dhu"), does not the editor of THE INDEX propound to them the principal question of his method, and get their honest answers to that—propound the question, at all events, whether answer comes or not, without concluding, even when there is no answer, that radicals are all indifferent, or something worse? "A noble patience was in him," is a favorite discovery of one of our most discerning biographers in his "heroic man" of whatever sort. A grand thing to have discoverable in one, whether the discoverer comes or not. I think the discoverer is here for every man in public station, in these days.

3. I believe that, if the editor of THE INDEX would ask one question, he might get many answers, to one effect, from numerous radicals. Here is a question which, I think, he ought to ask: "Do you not see that a thousand Liberal Leagues would put an end to outrages of bigotry upon American citizens, would make their disfranchisement, their expulsion from legislatures, and the denial of their right to testify in courts of justice, because of their religious opinions,—do you not see that 'a thousand Liberal Leagues' would make these and the like outrages henceforth impossible on American soil?" I think he would get some answer to this question, some negative answer, for which, already in the minds of not a few radicals ready for deliberate utterance, he does not, to me, appear to have allowed enough in his judgments hitherto of their earnestness in the common cause.

4. Make your thousand Liberal Leagues, and who can doubt that they would directly call into being a thousand illiberal ones? When these should be well organized—a thousand on a side,—what, on the whole, had they better do? On the whole, I should say, they had better sign a truce, and save fighting; or else "pair off," go home quietly, two by two, and save voting. In fact, when once you appeal to numbers, knowing that you are in the minority, you expect to be out-numbered. Evidently, then, there must be something better than number to count on, battalions mightier than minorities, mightier even than majorities. What are these? They are the sun and moon, and tides and seasons, the solar system and the solar year of Thought, with all their winged and footed messengers, and manifold means of getting the seeds of Thought well planted, well germinated, and well propagated and husbanded in every soil,—manifold means, likewise, of getting much else exterminated from the world. Men shall be patrons of Thought's husbandry without knowing it, without intending it, in spite of contrary intentions, not less effectually, perhaps, than with voluntary and most conscious tenders of service.

5. For one, I confess that I see a more potent force for securing the desired ends of liberals, in one illiberal outrage of conspicuous notoriety, than in "a thousand Liberal Leagues," even unopposed by a thousand illiberal ones. Otherwise, I would toil day and night, till one Liberal League should be organized somewhere here. The three recent "cases of encroachment on religious liberty" mentioned in THE INDEX are, I firmly believe, among the most notable liberalizing agencies and (practical) radical influences of this time. Unwise, say I, to neutralize their work with ill-timed and ill-tuned hostilities—Liberal League, or other.

How many also say the same, I cannot undertake to tell. But that there are radicals not a few who justly deem themselves, if not as clear-sighted as some, at least, as earnest as any, who do say this, and much more to the same purpose, I am very sure.

It is not, then, resentment, however natural, of those epithets, so often used in THE INDEX, seemingly to the disparagement of such radicals as these—it is not this which demands principal emphasis here; but it is some bringing forward, however poorly, of this very earnest, yet very patient, type of radicalism, which discredits the Liberal League for many reasons,—because, by its very nature, it excludes many of the liberals, for one. As to the opinion, herein expressed, of the service done to the liberal cause by acts in themselves most offensively illiberal, if argument and proof are asked in support of it, I answer that I do not think them needful here, since history itself is replete with adequate illustrations which, by the intelligent, will easily be applied.

6. I will add, however, what experience makes plain enough to all, that the occurrence of illiberal or irrational acts, of any sort, always calls out the condemnation of voices near by and widely influential, which are usually heard in the quarter where they are needed, long before more ultra voices, no matter how these excel in vehemence and shrillness. And hands from next door are reached out to strangle whatever is inhuman, false to right, before more distant hands, although of sterner grip, can be extended. Again, let the ultra voice come too quick, or too loud, and the neighboring one, fearing a greater danger from the new quarter, lends itself to the outrage, to the inhumanity; and the next-door hand turns itself against the far-off one, too soon invading—whereby the latter finds its foe suddenly increased by the whole force of what was its friend, and would have fought its fight, had it but stayed away!

Is not this last a fact patent to all? And if so, is not its significance immeasurably more than that of all arguments and battle-words whatsoever?

"I am sure that a certain truth will be said through me, though I should be dumb, or though I should try to say the reverse," says the most revered of American radicals.

Yea: and through all bigots and blockheads whomsoever, though they gnash the teeth never so fiercely in their vain endeavor to gainsay Truth or Justice.

J. H. C.

ANDOVER, Mass.

"IN THE CONFESSIONAL."

A very interesting sketch with the above title was published in THE INDEX several weeks since. In it one of the characters—a woman of fine culture—is made to use these words:—

"I would like to believe in a Father-God who would take a tender personal cognizance of my little needs and doings; to whom I could apply in the hour of suffering with perfect assurance of instant help. I would like some Divine Being to ease me of my burdens when they bear too heavily upon me. It is not because I wish, but because conscience and reason compel, that I give up the Church."

That these mournful words do express the inmost yearning of many who are passing, or have but lately passed, from the Orthodox fold into the open air of Free Religion, there can be, I think, no manner of doubt. The judgment is convinced; "conscience and reason" point toward freedom; but feeling draws them in an opposite direction. They linger wistfully on the debatable ground, saddened more by the thought of the sheltered valley they are leaving, than gladdened by the sight of the mountain tops which invite their forward footsteps.

Something like this is perhaps inevitable during such a transition. No doubt Mr. Voysey speaks from experience in saying that the "first moment of all disillusion is a moment of intense pain"; and I think there is not in all of Lecky's writing a truer passage than the one which admits that in the widening of our intellectual horizon, "it is a great mistake to suppose that only the degrading superstitions will be swept away." The beautiful and beneficent ones must go too.

Yet I cannot believe that these regrets need be of long continuance. Such persons have not yet entered upon all the blessings to which a free faith entitles them. In Orthodox phrase, "they do not live up to their privileges." They are unaware of half the treasures of their new kingdom. Feeling about for a Deity outside themselves upon which they may lean for strength, they fail to recognize the strength of the God within them. They wander, faint and fearful, half longing to go to the old Fountain for refreshment, forgetful that the soul which is faithful to its best conceptions of truth has only to keep itself receptive, and the strength and peace which are born of Truth will flow in as naturally as sunlight into an open room, and will not be hindered. The man or woman who for conscience' sake relinquishes with pain beliefs that once were precious, but from which the living spirit has departed, has turned his face toward the sun, and will find, sooner or later, that the rays which enlightened his vision have also power to warm his heart.

Undoubtedly there are timid, tender, confiding souls, to whom the relation of child to father will always represent the highest form of spiritual attainment and enjoyment. They stand bewildered and distressed by the defections they see about them, clinging all the closer to the "encircling arms," and vainly calling on those they love to return to their sheltering embrace. To talk to these of a nobler and more satisfying conception of the Unseen Power is a mere waste of words. They cannot understand it. Child-nature is eternal in our world, and it should be treated only with tenderness.

A year or two since I asked a radical friend, whose equanimity under peculiar trials was remarked by all who knew him, the secret of his contented mind. "What is it to which you look for strength, courage, comfort, when outward affairs are dark and disheartening? Formerly you called upon a Heavenly Father. Tell me from what source do you now draw supplies?"

"My supplies?" was the smiling answer. "How can I tell—unless from the atmosphere? Why, I cannot consciously breathe without taking in supplies."

To how many would this answer seem empty or trivial. Yet to those who have learned the secret of self-reliance there is meaning in it.

Another writes: "If a feeling of being upheld, as by a hand, were gradually changed to a feeling of being upborne, as by an atmosphere, would you regret it, and weep, and cry out for the withdrawn hand? I am sure you would not."

Does any sturdy radical object that such emotional utterances savor of the weakness of Orthodoxy, and would soon degenerate into the frothy rhapsodies of the Young Men's Christian Association and revival meetings? I do not think so. The emotion that has a rational (say, if you please, a scientific) basis, which does not burrow in the dead past for a supernatural source, but draws from the living issues of the present; which does not make a Person its central figure, does not enjoin a grovelling and God-dishonoring humility—will never degenerate into aught that is sickly or degrading.

Not long ago Mr. Abbot wrote these golden words: "The gods of Olympus fed on nectar and ambrosia; the idealist is nourished by a diviner diet still. Nothing so invigorates or expands the mind as the love of great principles; they return a thousand-fold reward for such devotion, by bestowing the inspiration needed to redeem human life from its own littleness." Yes—and from its weakness also.

Said Paul: "When I was a child, I understood as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things." And a very earnest English writer has lately said: "We advance from the gushing rhetoric of a religious childhood to the sober and safe thoughts of men." But the sober thoughts of manhood are none the less safe for wearing the glow of enthusiasm, and there is no inspiration like that which comes from conscious advancement in all which makes life worth the living.

The fairies have gone from wood and water-side; but the poetic eye finds them again in the liberated mystic forces forever astir among the atoms. In fact, there is no spring of poetry, no realm of enchantment, like that which the wonders of modern science open up to us. So the beatific visions of the supernatural fade from the minds that have outgrown them, only to be replaced by something more grand, more noble, more elevating.

Let no one make the mistake of supposing that the disciple of radicalism must breathe only the rarified air of pure logic, leaving forever behind him the delights of imagination, and the inspiration which comes of communion with the "Highest." The instinct which demands them is one of the factors of our nature, part and parcel of our humanity; and no wisdom which ignores them will ever be justified of her children.

H. L. B. B.

CLEVELAND, Ohio.

"ARE WE CIVILIZED IN BOSTON?"

NEW YORK, April 8, 1875.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In to-day's INDEX I notice an article entitled, "Are We Civilized in Boston?" to which, if you will allow me, I desire to take exception; because it seems to me that writing of this sort is apt to retard rather than advance the spread of the views which you have at heart. I object to the article, partly because it is illogical, but chiefly because it deals in that species of extravagant assertion that has so great an effect in repelling reasonable people who would otherwise be disposed to give liberal opinions a fair hearing.

The article is illogical, because, while admitting that society has the same right to take the life of a mad man (morally or mentally mad) as to take the life of a mad dog, provided the former is as dangerous as the latter, and no other way of disposing of him presents itself,—while admitting, further, that the analogy holds good in the case of Jesse Pomeroy, and that there is actually no place to which he can be sent,—it still claims that it would be wrong to hang him, because to do so would be "to confess that our boasted civilization is a failure." This sort of argument may be conclusive to some minds, but will not stand the test of analysis. If our civilization is actually a failure, the sooner we confess and admit it to be so, the more likely will it be to emerge from that unpleasant condition: if not, no amount of confession will do it any substantial harm. In either case, it is preferable to put Jesse Pomeroy out of the way, no matter how humiliating a confession is implied in so doing, than to turn him loose to do murder at his will in order to save our conceit of being civilized. Besides, if Jesse Pomeroy is not responsible for his crime, or even for being born, neither is a mad dog responsible; and still we take his life which to him is just as precious.

The article is extravagant in statement, because, on the solitary case of Jesse Pomeroy, occurring among the hundreds of thousands of children that have been born in the State of Massachusetts, to say nothing of the rest of the country, it predicates a wholesale indictment against society and civilization. Such sweeping generalizations carry no weight, and only tend to raise prejudice against those who resort to them. To go a little further back, it is an open question whether society is responsible for this case, which is certainly an abnormal one, and almost without precedent. There is no telling from what remote ancestor the boy may have inherited the moral twist in his nature; at any rate there is no satisfactory evidence that he has been the victim of special neglect or abandonment.

Out of regard for your limited space, I have condensed as much as possible what I had to say, and have omitted some remarks which I should otherwise have added; so that perhaps I have not made my meaning quite so clear and explicit as it might be.

A. T.

NEW TESTAMENT CHRISTIANITY.

OTTAWA, March 20, 1875.

DEAR SIR:—

I have been much interested in your discussions with the Rev. Mr. Savage and with Mr. Morse. It appears to me that in these discussions, as well as in other places, you have entirely made good your position that Christianity (if Christianity means the teachings of the New Testament) is antagonistic to liberty. More especially is this the case with the Gospels containing the utterances of Christ himself; there is nothing in these akin to the Pauline injunction to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good," but a great deal that is very much the reverse. The proofs of this are far more numerous than is generally supposed by those who have not perused the Gospels with care. Passing over the passages which speak of the fate of those who reject Christ as being less tolerable than that of Sodom and Gomorrah—the unpardonable crime of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, which, if it means anything means the rejection of Christ,—and the necessity of teaching the people the mysteries of the Kingdom of Heaven in parables, and reserving the explanations for the disciples only,—we come to the great commission to Peter: "I give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven; whatsoever thou bindest on earth shall be bound in Heaven," etc.

Here is a foundation wide enough to support the whole superstructure of papacy. When to this tremendous power given to a grossly ignorant fisherman, you add Christ's last words, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," the whole ground seems to be cut away from beneath the feet of Protestantism; for how is it possible that a church thus divinely commissioned and divinely watched over should ever fall into error?

Mr. Savage says he is able to retain his liberty and at the same time "bow to the authority of Jesus." What does he think of the commission to Peter? Is he willing to bow to the authority of the hierarchy which has been legitimately founded on this commission: a priesthood which has shown that it is the true successor to Peter by its zeal for binding everything on earth, by its readiness to bind the bodies of men to the stake when it could not bind their consciences to its creed? Mr. Savage is, no doubt, ready to say that he is willing to bow to the authority of Jesus only when he speaks truly; but that is a kind of discipleship which Christ himself would never have permitted. To pick and choose amongst his sayings, to receive this and reject that, is a mode of viewing his Messiahship which he would have most emphatically condemned.

Those who attempt to make a rational system of Christianity out of the Gospels have a hard task on hand. The lofty and high-sounding phrases which we so commonly hear about the Fatherhood of God, and the universality of the Christian scheme, receive but little confirmation when we come to read the words of Christ himself. He said that he was not sent but to the lost sheep of the House of Israel; that the Jews were the children of God, and all others were dogs; that, when he sent out his apostles to preach the Kingdom of Heaven, they should not go near the Gentiles. He forbade them to enter any city of the Samaritans, so that even the House of Israel seems to have been narrowed down to the House of Judah.

It is not easy to see how Unitarians, considering all these things, should be so anxious to cling to the name of Christian, or how they can imagine that they can retain liberty of thought while bowing to an authority so stern and despotic.

J. G. W.

AS MR. HARDRIFF was going through the Athenæum, during some exhibition, he was attracted by a beautiful picture of the Crucifixion, and was much struck by it, inquiring of his companion the story of it, about which he had never heard. He was much incensed thereat, and treasured it in his mind.

Going through North Street next day, where the twelve tribes do congregate, he was button-holed and held by a member of them, who importuned him to "come and buy something."

"What are you?" said Hardriff, "are you a Jew?"

"I am an Ishraelite," was the reply.

"Then take that," giving him at the same time a rap on the nose.

"Vot you do that for?" said Moses, rubbing his proboscis; "I never sold you no clo'es."

"No, but you were one of them that nailed that man to the cross, confound you!"

"Me? I no do him; dat was done two thousand years ago."

"Well, I don't care anything about that," said Hardriff; "I never heard of it till yesterday."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

Of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
 LEADING INDEX WRITERS.
 Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.	1.50
Concord Days.	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.	1.50
Little Men.	1.50
My Boys, &c.	1.00
Shawl-Straps.	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.	2.00
New Poems.	2.00
Literature and Dogma.	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.	1.50
Edelweiss.	2.00
German Tales.	1.00
BACON'S Essays.	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.	2.25
Physics and Politics.	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.	2.25
The World-Priest.	2.25
The Tall Student.	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions, by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig, and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	4.00
Journal of Researches.	3.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.	1.00
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.	2.00
Essays. Second Series.	2.00
Miscellanies.	2.00
Representative Men.	2.00
English Traits.	2.00
Conduct of Life.	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.	2.00
Society and Solitude.	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of A. Hamann Coquerel the Younger.	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.	.20
Child's Book of Religion.	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.	1.25
Elective Affinities.	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.	2.00
Creed of Christendom.	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.	1.50
Thoughts about Art.	2.00
The Unknown River.	2.00
The Intellectual Life.	2.00
Chapters on Animals.	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.	1.00
Child World. Part First.	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.	3.50
I. Metaphysical Lectures.	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.	2.00
The Marble Faun.	2.00
The English Note-Books.	2.00
The American Note-Books.	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.	1.50
Atlantic Essays.	2.00
Oldport Days.	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.	2.00
Suburban Sketches.	2.00
Venetian Life.	2.00
Italian Journeys.	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.	1.25
Bits of Travel.	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.	1.25
The Origin of Species.	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Adaptive Nihilism.	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.	1.50
Songs of Seven.	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltings.	1.75
Studies for Stories.	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart. With an Appendix treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versabilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.	2.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.	4.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.	1.50
Among my Books.	2.00
My Study Windows.	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.	8.00
Elements of Geology.	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE.) The Vicar's Daughter.	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1838 to 1848.	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.	2.50
The Subject of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	2.50
Representative Government.	1.50
Autobiography.	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.	1.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.	1.50
Songs of the Sea Lands.	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.	2.50
The Same. Second Series.	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.	1.50
The two Christmas Stories—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.	1.50
The Trotty Book.	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.	1.50
Hedged in.	1.50
The Silent Partner.	1.50
What to Wear?	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.	5.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.	2.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	81.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of John. Second Edition.	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL.) Self-Help.	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.	1.75
First Principles.	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	5.00
Philosophy of Style.	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.	2.00
Sociology.	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDIKT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair.	1.25
The Newcomes.	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.	1.25
The Virginians.	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.	1.25
2. Paris and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.	1.25
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.	1.25
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.	2.00
The Maine Woods.	2.00
Cape Cod.	2.00
Letters.	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.	2.00
Light and Electricity.	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.	2.00
On Sound.	2.00
Radiant Heat.	5.00
Forms of Water.	1.50
Lectures on Light.	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sting and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.	3.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.	1.00
Sauterlings.	1.50
Back-Log Studies.	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.	1.50
Essays and Reviews.	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.	1.50
Success and its Conditions.	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.	1.50
Real Folks.	1.50
The Other Girls.	1.50
Pansies. A volume of Poems.	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
Child Life.	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.
At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.
The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON
English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

ABOUT CHEAP RATES WESTWARD.—We have frequent inquiries about the cheapest rates, best route, &c., to Western points. We cannot undertake to answer such questions in detail. It is evident that many of our readers are seeking new homes and fortunes in the West, and for complete and reliable detailed information about that country—from Missouri to Oregon and California inclusive—we do not hesitate to commend them to Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent of the Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis. Mr. Ford has thousands of pamphlets, circulars, time-tables, maps, rate-sheets, &c., for free distribution, and answers all questions, promptly and cheerfully, without charge.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,
NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,
Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.
Complete files for inspection of advertisers.
Lists sent upon application.
Send for estimates.

TWO NEW BOOKS.
MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dume Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR and TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MUSIC BOOKS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Father Kemp's Old Folk's Concert Tunes. 40 cts.

CONTINENTAL HARMONY. $1.50.

Ye Olde Folkes Note Bookes are printed at our Shoppe, from whence we send them, Poste-Paid, on ye receipt of ye retail price. Olde and Yunge love ye Ancient tunes.

POPULAR CANTATAS,
and more popular every season, are ESTHER, THE BEAUTIFUL QUEEN [50 cts.]; DANIEL [50 cts.]; BELSHAZZAR'S FEAST [50 cts.]; FLOWER QUEEN [75 cts.]; PIONIC [1.00]; HAY-MAKERS [1.00]; CULPRIT PAY [1.00]; MUSICAL ENTHUSIAST [50 cts.]; WINTER EVENING ENTERTAINMENT [1.00]. May be given with or without costumes.

FINE COLLECTIONS OF EASY MUSIC.
Winner's Band of Four. $1.00.
Musical Garland. Violin, Piano accompaniment. $2.50.
Musical Flowers. Flute, Piano accompaniment. $2.50.
Violin Amusements. $1.50.
Flute Bouquet. $1.50.

Sold by all the principal music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

CHARLES SUMNER.
A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

KANSAS, COLORADO, NEBRASKA, CALIFORNIA.—The Spring tide of travel Westward has fairly set in. Thousands are migrating to Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and especially California. To such, as a cheap and desirable route to destination, we commend the Missouri Pacific Through Line, by way of St. Louis and Kansas City. Call upon or address Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis, who will cheerfully furnish you correct and complete information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, time-tables, &c., for gratuitous distribution.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.
Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.
By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS OF—THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.
Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.
Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

10 CENTS
Will make you an ANNUAL SUBSCRIBER to FOUR NUMBERS of

EHRICH'S QUARTERLY,
containing prices, descriptions, and fashion-plates of Ladies' and Children's Suits, Ladies' Underwear, Infants' Wear, Real Laces and Dress Trimmings, Hats, Feathers, Flowers, Ribbons, etc., etc., together with the choicest selections of Literature, Wit, and Wisdom.

Our Quarterly will place within your reach the best goods at the lowest prices. Only 10 cents for a year's subscription. First issue now ready. Subscribe at once.

EHRICH & CO.,
287 and 289 EIGHTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.
Please state in what paper you saw this advertisement.

PREMIUM CHESTER WHITE
PIGS.—$15 each, $28 a pair. Chester County MAMMOTH CORN, and Imported BELGIAN OATS. 4 lbs. by mail, $1; peck, $2; one-half bushel, $3; Circulars and Sample Packages of Seeds free for two Stamps. Address N. P. BOYER, Parkersburg Chester Co., Penn.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION OF MONCURE D. CONWAY'S SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU GOING WEST?—If so, and you desire full and reliable information as to the cheapest and best route to Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, California, Oregon, or any of the Western States or Territories, we recommend that you call upon or address E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo., who will cheerfully answer all questions, and furnish you with maps, pamphlets, time-tables, rates, &c., free of charge. Now is the season of low rates, and applications should be made at once.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION. Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers, P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People"; and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Southern, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE, 256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES CONCERNING AMERICA.
By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.
Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.
A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION.
By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!
A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FREE DISCUSSION
is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS AT BELFAST.

Seventh Edition, Containing the First and Second Prefaces replying to his Critics, an extract from the Manchester Lecture, and the paper on "Scientific Materialism" in full. 120 pages. Price 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF MORSE'S NEW BUST OF THEODORE PARKER.

Cabinet size. Price 50 cents. Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.
Also for sale at the office of THE INDEX.

REASONS FOR USING THE EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO. G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn., —AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 3 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full gilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1875.

WHOLE No. 278.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

THE ATTACK of the Catholics on the school system is admirably exposed in an article which we copy from Harper's Weekly in another column.

FATHER SCHAUER, of Buffalo, lately declared that "the public schools have produced nothing but a godless generation of thieves and blackguards."

FATHER SASSIL, of Iowa, exclaims in a Des Moines paper: "Say, therefore, that the greatest shame, instead of gem, in the crown of America, is the public schools!"

THE JAPANESE have celebrated the two thousand five hundred and thirty-fifth anniversary of their empire. What a parvenu this country is, to be sure, to make such an ado over the prospect of becoming a centenarian!

REV. JOHN WEISS is delivering his brilliant lectures on "The Women of Shakespeare" in Wesleyan Hall, in this city. He takes decided ground against the Baconian theory of the authorship of Shakespeare's plays.

A GENTLEMAN in England has purchased the larger part of the third edition of Mr. Conway's Sacred Anthology, and presented it to the Brahma-Somaj of India. The fourth English edition of this valuable work will soon be issued, two editions having been issued and sold in this country.

ON THE fourteenth of April, the Anti-Slavery Society of the United States held their hundredth anniversary in Philadelphia. Benjamin Franklin was at one time President of this society, the pioneer services of which have been lost sight of behind the eclipsing fame of later reformers. Let the "original Abolitionists" have their due!

AT THE recent Methodist Conference in Newark, Rev. W. I. Gill was charged by Rev. J. Atkinson with the most "atrocious heresy," as the Independent phrases it. What sort of heresy is that? We have heard of "atrocious" crimes; but to intimate that any "heresy" can be "atrocious" is simply absurd. Belief is a purely intellectual act, while atrocity is a moral quality; and an "atrocious heresy," or misbelief, is as impossible as a pea-green thunder-clap.

HERE is a bit of private information: "The Liberal Religion Association of Cairo, Ill., has challenged President O. A. Burgess, of the North-Western Christian University, to meet B. F. Underwood in a second debate on the Bible; the same to be reported and published for general circulation. A debate occurred between these gentlemen on the same subject at Cairo, last December; but it was not reported, and the Liberals claim that Burgess' friends have grossly misrepresented it."

THE VIOLENT utterances of Catholic priests, such as those of Fathers Walker, Schauer, and Sassil, against the common schools, would be at once repressed by the higher authorities of the Church, if they were not approved by them. Discipline in that Church is altogether too perfect to permit any other conclusion. The deliberate conspiracy against the education of the people proved by these facts must be met in the most uncompromising manner, or the foundations of the republic will be destroyed within a generation.

THE "First Liberal League of Milwaukee," as we have just been kindly notified by the Secretary, was formed on March 3 with fifteen members. Mr. Theodore Fritz was elected President, and Mr. D. C. Züning Secretary. Fifteen live members are better than fifteen thousand sluggish ones, and are quite sufficient to accomplish a great deal, if they devote themselves to action rather than to talk. Talk enough will come out of the action, provided it is judicious, above-board, and bold. We hope to hear good news from this League before long.

WE ARE glad to learn from G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, that this well-known firm "have taken charge of the publication of the books and sermons of the Rev. O. B. Frothingham. They will issue at once a new and revised edition of The Religion of Humanity, and will publish in the fall in new and attractive shape the Stories from the Lips of the Teacher and Stories of the Patriarchs. The series of the Sermons will hereafter be published semi-monthly." All this is good news for the radical cause. Mr. Frothingham's reputation is growing rapidly every year, and this new announcement is only one of many proofs of it.

THE CELEBRATIONS at Lexington and Concord on the historic nineteenth of April were attended by swarming thousands. All the genius and patriotism of the country have been kindled by the glorious memories of that birthday of independence, and the great traditions of liberty have blazed into new splendor at the beginning of this second century of the national life. It was a privilege we shall not soon forget to be allowed to tread the "hallowed ground" of Concord on that day, to stand by historic graves, to catch the inspiration of remembered heroism, and to witness the outpouring of a nation's homage to the magnificent self-devotion of those "embattled farmers." There is more to say than can be said, and silence may be excused when so many tongues are eloquent. But the freedom that was won by the fathers is a sacred heritage to the sons; and what was conquered by blood and tears must be more than defended by moral fidelity. The talent has been entrusted to us: shall it be buried in the ground?

"BISHOP FERRETTE'S Religious Liberty Platform," the opening paper of last week's INDEX, ought to be read with great attention by all who are interested in the religio-political question. It is an extremely able and instructive article. The demands upon our pen are so exorbitant that we were unable to accompany it at the time with the many reflections it suggested; but the general topic is too important not to be widely discussed. Bishop Ferrette argues that the State should refuse to recognize sectarianism on the ground that it is essentially immoral and detrimental to the public welfare; while yet he admits that the State ought not to interfere with the "free exercise of religion." He would refuse incorporation to sectarian societies, cancel all sectarian conditions in private contracts, and make all property owned by sectarian societies the civil property of their members, which it is not to-day. His arguments are very cogent, and would be entirely convincing, were it not for a difficulty which perhaps he can remove. Is not the "religion" itself of the sects so essentially "sectarian" that it would be impossible to suppress the sectarianism without persecuting the religion? We admit that sectarianism is immoral in its tendencies; but this only proves that Christianity itself is so far immoral. If we could see our way clear (as possibly he may enable us to see it) to some solution of this difficulty,—if we could only see how to escape the necessity of legally recognizing the existence of sectarianism, without "prohibiting the free exercise of religion" when religion itself happens to be essentially sectarian,—there could be no doubt of the justice of Bishop Ferrette's position. In truth, there is no "religion" but Free Religion which is not also "sectarian"; and to subject sectarianism, therefore, to civil disabilities, even on the justifiable ground of immorality, would really be persecuting the sects, or at least seems to be. And, strenuously insisting on the rights of free thought, we would not persecute anybody's thought—even though sectarian and immoral. It is only when thought passes into act, and violates equal rights, that it becomes amenable to the law. We hope to hear again on this subject from our able contributor.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Free Religion not Anti-Christian.

BY REV. EDWIN S. ELDER.

I have long felt that injustice is done to the Free Religious movement by those who insist that in its nature and aim it is anti-Christian; and, further, that every one identified with the movement should put himself in an attitude of hostility toward Christianity.

Of course every one's attitude toward the Christian Religion is determined by his definition of Christianity.

If, as is asserted, in a recent earnest appeal to Radicals in THE INDEX, "The Christian Religion and its Church stand arrayed against civilization, science, progress, freedom, truth, the higher ethics of Nature, the permanent and truest welfare of mankind," then the scientist, the advocate of freedom, whoever would contribute toward the permanent welfare of mankind, should wage uncompromising war against the Christian religion and its Church, and should also proclaim his anti-Christian position and purpose.

That very few Free Religionists do this, I believe, to be attributed not so much to mental blindness or moral weakness as to a conviction that their attitude, spirit, and purpose are not properly characterized by the phrase anti-Christian.

A majority, if not all, of those who are interested in or identified with the Free Religious movement will admit that Christianity (whether identified with the personal faith of one individual, the Prophet of Nazareth, or with a faith in or concerning Jesus as the Christ, or with that great theological and philosophical system which for fifteen hundred years has been designated Christian) has its limitations and its defects. And while all will admit that the teachings and life of Jesus have contributed immensely to the actual religion of to-day, yet they will also deny the identity of the New Testament religion with the most rational and most spiritual religion of the present. They will insist that the faith of one individual living in one remote age of the world is, and must be, partial; inadequate to the varied experiences, the altered conditions, and enlarging life of to-day. Many will declare that Christianity has been so intimately associated with certain errors that they no longer care to call this religion Christian. Yet they do not feel the hostile spirit; they cannot assume the anti-Christian attitude.

In insisting upon the anti-Christian position as the one to be taken by Free Religion, Mr. Abbot raises the merest accident of the Free Religious movement into undue prominence. The critical, destructive, negative functions of the movement, which, if the movement has any right to be, are incidental and subordinate, are made the most prominent. The essential spirit and purpose of Free Religion are subordinated to an accident. The Free Religionist is made an opponent of error rather than the representative of truth; his face is turned toward the superstitions that have been and are, rather than toward the truer faith that is to be.

1. In order to determine the true relation of the "Free Religionist" to Christianity, it is necessary to have a definite idea of the nature both of Christianity and Free Religion, and their relations to each other. An inadequate definition of Christianity will mislead.

Those who define Christianity with reference to its universal element will insist that it is at one with absolute religion.

Those who ignore the universal element, and define Christianity with reference to what is peculiar to it, will to a great extent identify it with error; and will insist that, in so far as Free Religion is truly religious, it is anti-Christian, and that every Free Religionist is, whether consciously or not, an opponent of Christianity.

The term Christianity is synonymous with the "Christian Religion." This, like every other religion, contains two elements: first the universal truths of religion, which are to be found in each particular religion; and, secondly, an element peculiar to itself. In the phrase "Christian Religion" we have the two words that stand respectively for the two elements, the particular and the universal. The contents of the universal elements are hinted at in the words Duty, Righteousness, Purity, Aspiration, Holiness, Devotion, Love to God and Man. These are to be found in the religion of every civilized people. The peculiar element is expressed by the words Christ, Trinity, Vicarious Atonement, Personal Savior, Imputed Righteousness, Faith in Christ.

Christianity, then, is in its nature complex. It is a religion by virtue of its universal element—"Christian" by virtue of that which is peculiar to itself. Yet it is the habit of one class of writers to ignore the particular element in their definition; while another class identifies Christianity with that which is peculiar to itself.

Those who have outgrown nearly every dogma peculiar to Christianity,—such as that of the Trinity, the preexistence of Christ, salvation through his death,—very naturally insist that their personal faith is Christianity; or, in other words, they identify Christianity with that portion of it which they accept, which is its universal element. This identification of a part with the whole is not the result of independent reflection, but of inherited prepossessions. On the other hand it is the habit of a few to identify Christianity with those dogmas that constitute its particular element. They ignore its universal element, by which it is a religion.

It is evident that these prepossessed or prejudiced and partial definitions will be productive of nothing but controversy and misunderstanding. For to the one Christianity stands for all that is best in the purest morality and the most spiritual religion of to-day; while to the other the same word stands for all that is most erroneous in Christian theology, and most dangerous in the sectarian spirit, aims, and endeavors of the Catholic and Evangelical Churches. Whoever studies the Christian religion, either in the New Testament or in the eighteen Christian centuries, will come to the conclusion that in its entirety it is neither wholly true nor wholly false: but, like all systems, institutions, individuals, like all products and expressions of human thought and experience, it has its excellences and its defects, its inevitable limitations that will be outgrown, and its eternal truth. While we may separate these two elements in our thought, they are, and have always been, united in the religion itself. Nothing less than both taken together constitutes the Christian religion.

Inasmuch, then, as Christianity has been and is composed of these two elements, one of which is the universal truth of religion, the anti-Christian position is unphilosophical. It expresses an indiscriminating antagonism toward both error and truth. It is based upon a partial and very inadequate definition of Christianity.

2. There is another consideration that must not be lost sight of in the endeavor to determine the relation of Free Religion, and the consequent attitude of Free Religionists, toward Christianity.

The philosophical student of religion discovers the significant fact that religions are born, not made. That each particular religion is the result of the gradual transformation of preexisting religions. The New Religion may be said to have both a father and a mother; that is, it is either a modification of the old by contact with another faith, or it is a result of the union of certain elements and tendencies of different religions. Judaism was greatly modified by contact with the religion of Persia; while Christianity (or that which has for more than fifteen hundred years been known as Christianity) was the result of a union between the Messianic ideas of the Hebrew faith and certain ideas of Greek philosophy.

During the first three centuries, the Jewish element was in the ascendant. Since then, Christian theology has been essentially Greek, or at least a compromise between Hebrew monotheism and its tendencies, and the polytheism of the Greeks.

We have in the appearance, growth, and gradual transformations of Christianity, from the disciple's earnest expectations of the immediate return of Christ, through the various controversies of Christendom, to the latest phases of Christian faith,—in all this we have the result of one continuous process. There is a historical continuity extending from the first to the nineteenth century; nor is that continuity interrupted by the appearance of Free Religion. Each phase of Christianity has differed but little from the one immediately preceding. Free Religion differs less from the most liberal Christianity than the faith of Channing differed from the Orthodoxy of his time. When Channing affirmed the identity of religion with goodness, righteousness,—when he affirmed the integrity and perfectibility of human nature,—he emancipated religion from dogma, from dependence upon all historical persons and events, though it might continue to be closely associated with certain persons and events. The movement from Luther to Channing, from Channing to Parker, and from Parker to the Free Religious Association, is one continuous movement.

Free Religion and the most liberal Christianity touch each other. Unitarianism has emphasized the universal element of Christianity, and at the same time accepted much of the particular element. This latter element has been gradually losing its hold upon the minds of many, until what they call Christianity is natural or Free Religion; so that there are many who call themselves Christians, who differ from the "Free Religionist" only in name.

It is a significant fact, as showing the historic relations of Free Religion to that phase of Christianity which needs the word "Liberal" to describe it, that, with but few, if any, exceptions, the most prominent representatives and exponents of Free Religion are, or have been, Unitarian clergymen. In men like Wasson, Frothingham, Weiss, Johnson, Longfellow, Potter, and Gannett, Christianity has passed into Free Religion. Nowhere in the history of religions is there a finer illustration of the law of evolution. The Free Religious movement is both literally and figuratively the child of Unitarian Christianity. And I am fully persuaded that the relation of one phase of thought or religion to that of which it is the offspring is not that of antagonism.

If the philosophy of evolution be true, it would seem to be the function of each movement in religious thought to fill the future with its positive faith rather than to attack the faith of the past. Each faith is the fulfilment rather than the antagonist of that which preceded it. The energy expended in combating the old is far better employed in establishing the new.

The old is never wholly false. Every dogma of Christendom represents a truth. Each Christian dogma contains as much truth as those who framed it could see; as much of truth as many who accept it can comprehend. If the dogma is less than the truth, if it is a narrow and one-sided statement, it will be outgrown. Its natural rejection will result from the perception of the larger truth. Until this larger truth is perceived, all attack on the dogmas will avail nothing. When the larger truth is perceived, all opposition to the dogma will be superfluous. These dogmas bear a relation to the minds of those who are satisfied with them, similar to that which the language of children bears to the thoughts of childhood. The vocabulary of a child is limited by his ideas; as his knowledge increases, his vocabulary will enlarge.

Limitation in the mental, moral, and spiritual faculties produces and necessitates a corresponding limitation in the perception, statement, and reception of the truth; or in other words the broadest and deepest truths of religion can be apprehended only by the fully developed moral and spiritual faculties. There are those to whom God in Christ is all of God of which they can have a conception. Indeed there have been those whose conceptions of God were expressed by a visible idol. The idol was not the cause of their limited conceptions; on the contrary, it was their limitations that necessitated and gave rise to the idol.

To me the idol is nothing but a block of wood or stone. But my destruction of the idol will not remove the mental and spiritual limitations that necessitated it. I render the cause of truth a poor service in merely breaking the idol. The worship of that idol is an essential step toward the worship of God in spirit and truth. What is most needed is to raise the idolater above the possibility of worshipping an idol. The means to be employed is the truth itself. The method is that of affirmation, not that of denial and antagonism.

This brings me to my final objection to the anti-Christian position.

3. To my mind "anti-Christian" stands for an erroneous method. It would make error its objective point. It is based upon that popular fallacy that error must be combated and destroyed before the truth can be established; that the darkness must be dispelled before the light can shine. It is, however, the light that dispels the darkness; it is the truth itself that dispels the error.

Mankind grow out of errors and resulting evils. Man is led by the beauty of the truth rather than driven by the deformity of the error.

If Radicals or Free Religionists entertain ideas, or represent principles which they believe to be essential to human welfare, let them put the emphasis upon these ideas and principles. If their method is superior to that which has been employed throughout Christendom, let them show its superiority by the results of its application. If certain evils exist, if certain dangers threaten, if the wealth of churches is exempted from taxation, if the efficiency of public schools is injured by Christian sectarianism, if there be any danger that that same sectarianism, or any other—Jewish or Buddhist—will be embodied in the Constitution, what ought to be done to remove the evil and avoid the danger? My answer is, Create a sentiment that will inevitably discontinue the evils, and discourage the effort of sectarian fanaticism. But these evils and efforts are the product of inadequate or erroneous ideas. These will disappear only as the truth itself is proclaimed and disseminated—for mankind are led from the error, not so much by denunciation and direct attack, as by the careful statement of the truth concerning those subjects upon which there is so great misconception. The actual and only remedy for the erroneous conceptions and resulting evils and dangerous tendencies of Catholic and Evangelical sectarianism is to be sought in the earnest and enthusiastic dissemination of those ideas of which the Free Religious movement, more than any other, should be the representative and exponent. In so far as mankind are converted to the larger truth, the error is left behind. But it is not true that, in so far as errors are attacked, the truth is established. Now in the method of the anti-Christian the error is made the objective point. Truth is considered chiefly in its relation to some error. As health is something more than the antagonist of disease, light more than the antagonist of darkness, so truth is more than the antagonist of error. But the tendency of the "anti"-Christian attitude and method is to consider truth in its one relation to some error, and to array the universal ideas of natural religion in opposition to the inevitable limitations of a historical system. The Free Religionist claims to employ and represent the scientific method. Is this "anti"-spirit and attitude in the least scientific?

Does the geologist make Genesis the objective point of his labors?

Would it not be childish in him to array his theories and his facts of geology in antagonism to the dream of some ancient poet, and to direct more attention to the old dream than to the discoveries of the new science? Is it necessary for him to exert himself directly against the Mosaic cosmogony? Will not the truth of geology dispel the errors of Genesis? Is it not enough for the scientist to state the facts quite regardless of all those notions that are inconsistent with them?

I am of opinion that the importance of directing the attention of mankind to what is vicious in conduct, ignoble in character, and erroneous in opinion, is greatly exaggerated. Denunciation of wickedness contributes but little toward the reformation of the wicked. The discrediting and exposure of error of itself adds but little to our knowledge of truth. Criticism and attack of the vices and superstitions of the past or present are useless, if they reveal no positive truth.

The "Free Religionist" should sustain a relation to religion similar to that which the true artist bears to art, or the scientist to science; that is, he should be the representative and exponent of positive ideas rather than the critic and opponent of those opinions which he has outgrown and rejected.

All real reformatory work is constructive and creative. Now the anti-Christian position has the appearance of being almost entirely destructive; not because it is exclusively destructive, but for the reason that the emphasis is put upon the incidental feature of the Free Religious movement instead of being put upon its essential element and purpose.

The Free Religious movement is to be the representative and exponent of positive ideas. Indeed, it will be a movement only as it represents ideas. It is these positive ideas that give it a right to be and a work to do. It will do but little toward leading mankind toward the truth until it becomes the exponent of conviction. Enthusiasm in behalf of universal ideas will constitute its motive power. Without conviction and enthusiasm, it may be a brilliant critic of superstition, but will not be a representative of religion. It should seek to discover and disseminate the truth rather than to criticize error. I conceive it to be the work of the Free Religious movement to affirm the reality of religion, the validity of the religious sentiment, the integrity of human nature, the immediateness of those relations subsisting between the individual soul and the One in All, the Soul of the universe; to make more operative man's consciousness of his relation to God; to deepen the sense of moral obligation, and to insist upon the application of the moral law to all the concerns of individual and social life; to insist upon the entire separation of Church and State; to furnish a practical solution of the problem involved in the relation of science to religion, and by a faithful study of the religions of the world to determine their relations to each other, and, if possible, discover and state the laws of religious evolution; to formulate, in short, a philosophy of religion. And, last but not least, it will remain for the Free Religious movement to be the representative and exponent of a more natural, more rational, and more purely spiritual phase of religion than has been heretofore expressed in any system as represented by any sect. This work I call creative. It will be done on a high plane of thought. To do this work, it will not be necessary to descend to the noisy arena of antagonism with superstition.

Sectarians have shut themselves up within their little sects, and erected high walls. Now it is unnecessary to tear down those walls, or to build others; it is for the Free Religionist to entice mankind out of their narrow and dimly-lighted apartments by showing them something better than can be found within.

Let him who would lead the world toward the truth exert himself in behalf of the dissemination of whatever of truth he has found; and, in so far as his truth gains acceptance, will the error silently disappear, even as dreams before the morning light.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

INDIVIDUAL FREEDOM.

In the interval between the conception in the soul of abstract principles of right and the embodiment of these in conduct lie all the error, misery, and crime of life. As there has never been a beginning, as the germs of all that is and will be have always existed, so those same spiritual germs, the embryo plan and purpose of human development, were simultaneous with human creation. Old as we are, familiar as our sensations, close as our blood and muscles, all-penetrating, inseparable, ever-active, we carry about this embryo with us, which embraces the whole moral code, the ideal of manhood and womanhood. Theoretically none are ignorant of it, none distort it, none are perplexed or mystified about it; it is the simplest of all things, and yet the most absolutely incomprehensible; transparent as a dew-drop, its depths are unfathomable.

So we are set to work here in the world with the draught before us, and well supplied with tools and instruments. It is the work of a mechanic, an artist, a saint. Pre-ordained and inevitable, as much as the formation of a planet, or the unfolding of a flower, it nevertheless seems an utterly abortive attempt on the part of human incapacity. Feeling a hitch somewhere, the discomfited and nonplussed doer has attributed the difficulty to lack of freedom. He was hampered, interfered with, tyrannized over, his natural powers repressed; no one could effect anything with so many clogs. Do away with the emperor, the Pope, caste limitations, rigorous and binding laws, supremacy of all sorts; give the individual full scope in the exercise of his rights, and he will immediately expand into his grandest proportions. The experiment has been tried here; all the old-time hindrances have been removed; we live under a republican form of government, in a union of equality, and justice, and fraternity, enjoying the best conditions ever vouchsafed to any people. By an almost sudden turn, that much-coveted boon, individual freedom, has been placed in our hands. Guaranteed by the constitution, blazoned on all sides, prated about, exulted over, employed in and out of season, what do we really do with it? How far, and in what way do we understand it?

Providence has either paid us an immense compliment, or staked against fearful odds, in yielding us a privilege that gods only could use with discretion. It is indeed giving reins to lawlessness, untold power to imbecility, all the resources of wealth to the untried hand of a beggar. And verily the result has proven it. We are the laughing-stock of the unemancipated races abroad, as having essayed to walk on stilts and tripped; we are a mortification to ourselves for having been unequal to the support of our own greatness. The worst of curses is an inappropriate blessing.

Freedom—that means the opportunity to do as we like, as we think best; it means entire exemption from control. Granted. We take the next step, and come again to that chasm between definition and practice. We can do as we like. Americans have no sweeter solace than that thought. It is the running accompaniment to all their acts, recreations, and pursuits, their boast as superior beings, their defence when assailed. It gives them all the latitude they want, and with the accelerated velocity of unrestraint lands them straight into license. There is a slight curb in the after-clause, "as we think best"; but that is very elastic, and generally can be made to stretch over the most protuberant of desires. In the seclusion of the inner chamber, where no eye sees and no ear overhears, it must be an honest nature indeed that does not take some advantage of a good opportunity. "As we think best!" We wait a moment to decide, and in that moment the true instinct is lost. Temptations throng upon us; it is delicious in the first place to assert ourselves, to oppose the views of others, to pursue a slightly eccentric course. Then it has not been proven as yet precisely what is right; we will try a little, for nothing would we so like as what is now made possible and easy for us; so there is no more resistance on that head. With the gratification of self, action grows arrogant, personality magnifies rapidly, and very soon encroaches on the boundaries of other individuals, equally pretentious, and spreading at the same fast rate. Then whose freedom is to be respected? For one of the two will have to yield.

This species of collision, of daily occurrence, the subject of debate, legal process and private consideration, is the only limitation set upon the reckless incursions of so-called freedom; but it is as irregular and inadequate as the misguided impulse itself. It is, perhaps, better that the thing should be checked; yet being checked in this way only makes it rebound in another direction. Thence there is a continual clashing of interests, a chafing and rubbing, which intensifies the desire for freedom; each person accuses some other person of tampering with his rights, of standing in his way, of meditating injury. The effort for liberty immediately degenerates into a fight; and, as each one claims all space, it is a pretty hard thing to decide to whom the ground belongs. No apportionment being possible under the circumstances, all hands are plunged back into first principles, and find themselves in very narrow quarters. The cynical growl, declare freedom a sham and a cheat; there is no such thing. The pious see the chastening hand of the Lord in it, the way of righteousness is narrow, the broad road leadeth to destruction. The covetous and obstinate regard it all as ill-luck or accident, which does not deter them at all from trying the same game again. The weak sigh and complain that they can never succeed in anything, some one else is always ahead of them, they are domineered over and abused, and might just as well give it up first as last. The rogues keep on, and win the day; at least it is said that they do.

The idea of equity is lost in the general mêlée; sharps have a right (?) to gain possession of all the money they can; monopolists have a right (?) to accumulate power, influence, lands, exclusive and unrestricted control; social disturbers have a right (?) to untrammelled action, regardless of consequences; free-lovers have a right (?) to the free exercise of their affections, no matter what family they enter and break up, what purity they defile; the hypocrite has a right (?) to profess one thing and do another, to despise truth and honor; the drunkard has a right (?) to his glass, the gambler to his cards, the profligate to his vice;—who has a right to object to all this, to say "thus far and no farther"?

As a nation we stand aghast at the fierce encroachments made by all the dangerous and unenlightened classes in the name of freedom. We are threatened right and left. There are the Democrats who claim a right to their own rule; the South, which cries aloud against injustice and despotism because it cannot supersede the present semi-civilized condition with total barbarism; the Catholic power, which asserts its divine right to universal supremacy; and amid all this clamor, rebellion, and actual violence, the only ones deserving of freedom in the remotest degree are completely despoiled of it.

Judging from appearances, the question unavoidably arises, "Is there any freedom? Is it not a chimeric, a delusion?" There undoubtedly is freedom; the soul does not cheat itself; what it has always affirmed, always believed, and hoped for, and loved for, is true. We are born to freedom. But again, what is it? Evidently far from what we have considered it to be, differing in every particular from the will-o'-the-wisp which has always eluded us.

We have just the freedom that a single instrument in an orchestra has. We, like it, have our own part to play, a part whose melody and meaning cannot be discerned except when in concert with the rest, a part entirely commensurate with our quality and capacity, tone and register. We are one of a body, inter-dependent; we must neither be subordinate nor predominant as a rule, but be in harmony, whether the coloring of the composition requires us to take the lead or to sink to a sotto voce. Orchestras are of many grades; we will take the poorest, or rather, less than an orchestra, a street band. Imagine one of the instruments in the hands of a twelfth-rate performer; there is license in its workings. It is out of tune to start with; the player, having no ear, gives false notes,—having no knowledge, misplaces the chords,—having no training or skill, blunders throughout, and makes the wretched composition more wretched in the treatment. The player and instrument both have something extremely enjoyable to a careless, easy-going nature; there is, beyond doubt, a certain freedom in playing one chord as well as another, in being sublimely oblivious to time, and in following a hit-or-miss ear instead of strict musical rules; it is also preferable not to have a leader with an inexorable baton. Then, to sum up all the advantages, there is no critical audience, no newspaper slashers, no steep mount of fame to climb, no failure that could cause a moment's grief. Strolling musicians have an immunity from all the risks and trials of artists.

With one stride let us pass to the finest of orchestras, in which each instrument is a picked instrument, each player endowed with more than ordinary talent. The composition being rendered is one of the grandest works of one of the great masters. The requirements laid upon every man, from the conductor down to the drummer, upon every instrument, are fairly appalling; every sense is strained to apprehend, every nerve to execute; no laxity, license, or freaks now. The instrument must be in perfect condition; each tone not only true, but exquisitely refined and ideal; the rhythm steady beyond the possibility of an oscillation, the precision absolute. The instrument is bound by countless laws, mechanical and mathematical as regards mere executive work, scientific as regards musical structure, phrasing, modulation, and psychical when mere manipulation enters into the realms of expression. Then skill is transcended by inspiration; then art becomes the expounder of the highest. But that instrument, restrained to the uttermost, not allowed the slightest quiver of uncertainty, the slightest substitution of its own for what is written, held resolutely to the highest standard, made to obey not only notes, and measures, and signs, but the most delicate, almost imperceptible, shades of expression, and not only that but the coloring and descriptive effect which take their way unguided over dizzy heights into new expanses of beauty,—that instrument, where is its freedom? Where is ours? In obedience.

Through the straight and narrow path of obedience we attain perfection, the mastery of all the lower elements, all the physical forces; perfection reached, we are ushered into the sphere of inspiration, and that is a self-illumination which renders our acts wise, our bearing firm and independent, our freedom unimpaired. A swift summary this of a process that may occupy eternity. Nevertheless it is the process we are all engaged in.

Like the instrument, when the mechanical portion is completely mastered, when there is no longer any obstacle, any difficulty, then and then only is there an opportunity for abandon, for impassioned feeling and the ecstatic flights of genius. With a perception of a great design in our being and destiny we are grateful for every law, however severe; accept every limitation as an added security against lapses and damage. Every barrier becomes a safeguard, every hazard a warning; in the right direction we find a path open; when we find it closed we shall turn back.

Those whose lives are most harmonious, who have the best balanced characters, are seldom heard complaining of lack of freedom. Being large in themselves, possessed of good judgment, power of intellect, strong, hearty sentiments, they feel no sense of cramped within, and consequently none without. Being expansive, they naturally expand their circumstances; having no morbid or irrational cravings, life yields them what they need; being individuals in the true sense, all things succumb to them. There is a royalty which knows no oppression, no inimical force, no terrors; which commands through its birthright, which goes whither it listeth, and has whatever its aspiration is fixed upon. This never counts its possessions nor bewails its losses, never suspects a hindrance nor meets with a reverse. Through a magic of its own it transforms all things into good, its enemies do it the most service, calamity breaks into a glory, and the powers of evil flee impotent before it.

The lower and ruder the nature, the more does it clamor for freedom. Weeds take more license than nicer growths; run wild. They are not prohibited, for they are of no value anyway, and only cover waste space. The savage has more liberty, much more, than the civilized man; is not burdened with a tithe of the latter's responsibility. So in our own midst, the coarser and more ignorant the person, the fewer demands and restrictions put upon him; he may have no restraint whatsoever but the fear of the law. A grade higher, and public opinion answers the purpose; a grade higher than that, and the moral sense exerts an influence; but many grades must be reached and passed before self-hood alone can keep one to a true poise, and the ideal be the aim of every conscious moment. The child has an amount of liberty that any adult would scorn to have; in fact excessive liberty is a sign either that one is worthless or too puerile even to do harm, on the same principle that comets are allowed to course round in the way they do because they are uninhabitable, gaseous refuse. The instant a thing is of any value, it is conserved, put into an established orbit, and set to some use. Those erratic individuals who disclaim law and order, accuse fate of imprisoning them, and break loose from all enclosures, have no reason to feel proud of themselves, and their escape will but lead them into a bitterer thralldom; for there is a thralldom and oppression, there are despots and tyrants, and there are slaves and victims by the score. It is right that it should be so. None suffer from it that ought not to; there is not a shadow of injustice or hardness in the dispensation. Weakness only finds its master, wrong only finds its lash; the strong and the good need never fear either. Authority cannot lift its voice to one who knows what to do and means to do it. Those who run after license find a bond which no force can break, no art undo; the whole horrid conglomeration of prisons, fetters, inquisitorial torment and executioners, is on the forbidden territory. It all belongs to the department of retribution—retribution for deficiencies and defects just as much as wrong-doing. If we are below the standard, we must be brought up to it by one means or another; if we persist in being children after the period of maturity has come, we must be taught. Stern dealing reduces sentimentalism to sense.

Let us observe the effect of passion, any passion, upon one addicted to it. Indulgence seems freedom, enjoyment; and reason is coerced to sanction it. Ere long, as in the case of the drunkard, the craving increases, gratification must needs be more frequent, and so what was optional at first is now imperative, and abstinence is at the cost of physical pangs. Passion puts a very high price upon its paltry delights, and makes its victim vulnerable to every form of woe. For one run of luck the gambler has agonies of suspense, the horror of ruin and its reality; a merry blaze of excitement was wished for, a consuming fire by night and by day is gained. The passion of love is an ecstasy, the elixir of life. People would quaff it, would quaff it often. They make themselves susceptible, nourish ardent emotions, fill their heads with romance, and watch for an opportunity. With the whole being in gaslight and folly, any trivial charm or grace, a glance of the eye or accidental clasp of the hand, is sufficient to fire the feelings, and the person gives up to the blissful intoxication. To resist it would be prudish, cold, unnatural; are not men and women created for this thing? Is not society organized for this species of interchange, with all the auxiliaries of wealth, pleasure, fashion, personal beauty, vanity and arts to promote it? Men are trained to be irresistible, women to be fascinating, in order that they may cast potent spells over each other; intrinsic worth is nothing; the glamour of false attractions is all. Conquest of hearts is perfectly legitimate, the inalienable right of every man and woman; therein selfishness has its empire. Likewise hearts have the indisputable right to be taken captive; they invite the flattering siege. All this is freedom in the broadest sense. What comes of it? The person open to passion attachment, seeking it, regarding it as the end and aim of life, is credulous, unsuspecting, indiscriminating, averse to analysis of traits, for that cools the fervor directly; it is so much sweeter to assume that the beloved object is angelic. The question is not what is the character of this man or woman, is he or she fit to be trusted, liked, respected; but what is the nameless charm that attracts, the cause of the involuntary admiration, the magnetic drawing? Of course the only answer is an increase of the intangible, delicious something; and the mysterious syren-power lures into flirtation, intrigue, seduction, marriage,—vile amours under either or all of these forms. If the coquette and the libertine were always pitted against each other, they would serve each other right; and, while their operations lasted, society would be relieved from their depredations. But, unhappily, they find no field in each other; they must have the innocent, unsophisticated and confiding to work upon; hence those babes, who go forth crowing over their right to love everybody and to idolize whom they choose, fall right into the trap. Susceptible men become the sport of sensuous and designing women, cool enough withal to make their wicked propensities serve their calculations; tender-hearted, sentimental women, who would not for the world think ill of any one, become the easy prey of base men. To have the affections open is to be exposed to the most frightful of perils, for this freedom to love anybody is practically to have one's innermost soul invaded and laid waste. We are not free to love any but the one entitled by the highest considerations to this love, one with whom God in some sense has put us together, whether in friendship, affection, or conjugal attachment. All else is vice and profanation, followed by disagreement, hatred, betrayal, violent ruptures, and the disgrace of all concerned. The affections, more than our secret aspirations, more than our religion, more than our essential being, must be kept under lock and key; instead of being on the surface ready to be swooped up by any fish-hawk, preserved in the deep, sacred recesses, to which none but the true possessor can ever find the way.

Love should be rare as the diamond, not as cheap and common as the pebbles under our feet.

But, alas, the whole harm and the worst harm is not in being taken possession of by the wrong party, by an unauthorized stranger; the love-nature is the seat of the emotions, of thought, of sensation, hence of conscience, as conscience is moved by feeling. Influence there is all-powerful; if baneful, it is equivalent to having the devil lay hold of the rudder and lead us straight to perdition. There is the old saying, a house divided against itself cannot stand; and this is one of the most awful illustrations of it. If half of the demoralization prevalent comes from the promptings of evil inclinations and ugliness in the individual, the other half is assuredly due to pernicious alliances; the natures become adulterated.

The trouble is too much freedom, such as it is. What is the remedy? A return to monarchy, religious bondage, strict espionage, and authority? By no means. This is artificial, and it is of no use to give the ascendancy to an identical evil. If the subjects do not know how to behave, the king knows no better; if the divine law is not in the heart, the head of the church will not have it; the same elements that exist in the unit, exist in the mass, and, unless the unit is purified and exalted, endowed with intelligence and noble aspirations, the mass will continue to seethe in discord and corruption. The restraint must be interior, the presence of moral responsibility, the clear, unwavering sense of right, of allegiance to the Divine Spirit. Each person must be a law unto himself.

MARIE A. BROWN.

PAROCHIAL AND "GODLESS" SCHOOLS.

The Board of Education has received from the Roman Catholic Committee of the parochial schools two propositions as the grounds of union with the public schools. The first is that the parochial school buildings shall be leased to the board for school purposes, subject to the rules and regulations of the school system; the second is that the present teachers shall be retained if found qualified, and that the children shall be taught the Roman Catechism in the school-rooms before or after school hours. These are the opening propositions, and their scope may very easily be seen in the light of the fact that these parochial schools are established by the Catholics for sectarian purposes, that they are under the strictest Catholic supervision, that the teachers are appointed as Catholics who can be trusted to teach the tenets of the sect, that the pupils are children of Catholic parents, and that the object of the schools is to keep the pupils from the "godless" public schools.

Now if the Catholic clergy are honest in denouncing the public schools as "godless," it is evident that they cannot mean to merge their own in them, for that would be to make their own schools "godless." But if they do not mean this, they intend to retain the virtual control of them. It is therefore plain either that the Roman party has abandoned its purpose, which is not supposable, or that its present proposition is a desperate although veiled attack upon the public school system. The Roman priests and party intend to change the parochial schools into public schools, or they do not. If they do, there can be no possible question between them and the Board of Education except that of rent or sale of buildings. If there is any other question, and the account of the meeting of the Board and the Committee shows that there is, it is because they do not intend to make such a change, but, under the form of union, to make the public pay for supporting nurseries of the Roman creed. That, and nothing else, is the precise purpose of this negotiation, and the Board of Education should be aware that the plan is thoroughly understood by the public.

An important contribution to the discussion of the question since our last issue is the protest and memorial which has been widely circulated and signed in the city, and which presents the case against the union with great force and simplicity. The protest asserts most truly that our school system, by bringing all the children of every kind together, tends to produce that common sympathy which is vital in a republic. The school assembles the children of all natures, sects, and parties, and is itself the symbol of that equality which our institutions are meant to secure. This equal association is an attrition that serves to rub away the little differences which in youth are easily removed, but which in adults become tough and sharp. And this is one of the very things which are most distasteful to the Roman priesthood. It relaxes their despotic hold upon the young members of their Church, who, by constant contact with children of all denominations, insensibly become more generous and free in their religious sympathies.

The protest also affirms as a principle of distribution—if the public money could be lawfully devoted to sectarian instruction—a division among the sects in proportion to the amount of taxes paid by each sect, so that none may be compelled to pay for the increase of another. This is a view not always clearly understood. If the public money could be divided, it would be because of the desire of sects to have sectarian schools—schools to teach sectarian tenets,—and it would be only fair that no sect should be allowed to force other sects to pay for its propagation. But this is by no means the desire of the Roman sectarian party which is attacking the school system. The amount of taxes which it pays is quite out of proportion to the number of children that it supplies; so that it is really asking not for an equal and proportionate share of the school money, but for one vastly disproportionate to the amount it furnishes. If the State undertakes to divide citizens into sects, let it do the work thoroughly; and if the Roman party wishes to have public money to pay the expenses of teaching children Roman Catholic doctrines, let it have the exact proportion of the amount of taxes it pays. The proposition is so preposterously impracticable that it should dispose of the whole scheme.

We repeat—and it should be constantly repeated until the Board of Education hears and heeds—that there is no way of merging parochial schools in the public school system except by absorption. The law is precise and inexorable, and any "arrangement" is but an evasion of the law. If Catholic schools with Catholic teachers appointed by Catholic priests, schools established to teach Catholic doctrines, are to be received as public schools under the school laws and to be supported by public taxation, upon the sole formal condition, which from the necessity of the case cannot be observed, that there is to be no religious instruction in school hours, then Methodist and Baptist and all other sectarian schools must be received upon the same terms. And when that is done, the whole system will have been overthrown, and the public schools will have become sectarian. The Pope may well make his Archbishop of New York a cardinal if his priests have succeeded at the end of the first century of American independence in destroying the public school system of the United States.—Harper's Weekly, April 24.

"PSYCHO."

THE NEW CARD-PLAYING AUTOMATON.

The new automaton invented by Mr. John Nevil Maskelyne and Mr. John Algernon Clarke, which appears twice daily in Messrs. Maskelyne & Cooke's entertainment at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, is not a deception like Baron Kempelen's renowned chess-player. That, though it astonished all Europe late in the last and early in the present century, was but in part mechanical; and the chess-playing was really performed by a man inside—a Polish patriot named Worosky, who, having lost both his legs in battle, was able to conceal himself in very small spaces within the figure and the box-table at which the figure was seated. Neither is the new automaton of the same class with Vaucanson's flute-player, which was exhibited and explained to the French Academy of Sciences in 1738. That superb piece of mechanism imitated the movements of the body, the fingers, the lips, the tongue, and the management of the breath of an expert performer on the flute. Sir David Brewster has recorded the fact that "for many years it continued to delight and astonish the philosophers and musicians of Europe"; but, like a barrel organ, the machine only executed those particular airs which it was arranged to play. The marvel of the new invention of Mr. Maskelyne and Mr. Clarke consists in these distinctive features: the figure has no living being within it; it is perfectly isolated from any connection—mechanical, electrical, magnetical, or otherwise conceivable—with any operator at a distance; and yet, nevertheless, it plays the game of whist with no little skill, performs arithmetical calculations, obeys by its movements the directions of any person in the audience, and accomplishes a number of very surprising feats with cards chosen and names written by the audience.

"Psycho," as the automaton has been named, is a figure in Oriental costume, sitting cross-legged upon a small box or pedestal; and, besides being too small to contain even a dwarf or mutilated man, is inspected through openings in the box and in the body of the figure. Mr. Maskelyne, moreover, allows any person from the audience to ascertain for himself that no spaces whatever are hidden by mirrors or any other contrivances. "Psycho" is just what he appears to be—a piece of mechanism, with the wheels, weights, strings, and levers visible, without trick or concealment. He is first seen upon a table; but, to isolate him from external control, he is then placed upon a stand of thin, transparent glass—this consisting of one single piece—thoroughly examined by the audience before being set clear away from the back or side scenes, and, in fact, in the centre of the stage. There is no attachment of any kind, the automaton resting loosely on the glass support, and in any position; and persons from the audience are allowed to watch as closely as possible round the figure while it is at work, and to re-examine the interior when they please. Under these searching guarantees that "Psycho" is perfectly self-acting, what is he seen to do? If any person gives him a sum to calculate in addition, subtraction, multiplication, or division, he shows the answer, one figure at a time, by opening a little door and sliding the figure in front of the aperture with a movement of his left hand. There is no pre-arrangement or collusion in this; for he proceeds to exhibit any numbers which anybody may call for. He plays a game at whist with any three gentlemen who may like to take a hand with him.

The three players seat themselves at a side table and cut to decide who shall be "Psycho's" partner; and, after dealing, the thirteen cards for the automaton are placed on a quadrant holder under the radial sweep of the figure's right hand, the cards standing upright, so that he can seize any one with his thumb and finger. "Psycho" turns his head, and looks up or down, apparently studying the hand of cards on his quadrant; and when his turn comes to play he finds the best card available to him, raises it, holds it up in full view of the spectators (so that there is no trickery or substitution), and then puts it down in front of the quadrant. He will hold up any card again and again as often as desired by any person in the audience, and shakes hands with his partner at the conclusion of the game. He plays a good game; and, unless matched against very scientific players, commonly wins when he happens to get fair average hands dealt to him and his partner. Then follows a series of further illustrations of "Psycho's" mysterious power of intelligence. You help yourself to a card out of a pack, and he tells the suit and rank and number of spots by means of strokes on a bell. You privately mark any card in a pack which you shuffle and hold in your own hand; and upon the pack being placed in front of the automaton he instantly finds the identical card, and holds it up, without possibility of substitution or deception. Again; you shuffle the pack, Mr. Maskelyne holds it behind him in full view of everybody, and "Psycho" tells the names of all the cards in succession, though the conjuror himself has not seen even the backs of them. Finally, Mr. Maskelyne informs the audience that the automaton is constructed to perform a number of other marvels of mechanism (not yet finished) by the aid of "secret intelligent forces." How long this "dynamic mystery" may remain unsolved, in an age when the usual resources of conjurors are very well understood by many people outside the profession, it would be unsafe to predict; but for complete novelty of the effects produced, this new automaton outdoes everything which has appeared since the subtle inventions of Robert Houdin.—London Times.

KINDERGARTENS FOR NEGLECTED CHILDREN.

A CIRCULAR.

Eight months ago two Kindergarten Schools were established in Boston, one at No. 223 Hanover Street, and one at No. 201 North Street, in a room furnished by the North-End Mission.

The object of these schools was to collect some of the neglected children who swarm in the streets, while yet too young for the Primary Schools, and give them facilities for intellectual and moral training at an age most tender and sensitive to every surrounding influence.

Even at the early age of three years children begin to use the vile language and copy the actions of persons in bad localities, as happier children in happier homes learn at that period their first loving words. Their plastic minds are open at this early stage to every surrounding impression, and a better training for criminal life could hardly be devised than the present method of neglect for these first years of little children.

So soon as we are able to provide for the ignorant and neglected class of people schools for their children from the earliest years, and thereby stimulate the moral and intellectual growth, we shall diminish not only the number of inmates in jails and penitentiaries, but pauperism in general will be sensibly lessened.

These Kindergartens for the poor are designed to teach the little ones habits of cleanliness and order, calculated to have an effect upon their homes as well as upon the children themselves; also by tender and affectionate care the teachers hope to win their love for better things.

By this early training it is believed that many children who might otherwise become worthless members of society may thus receive a foundation for future habits of industry and usefulness.

The two schools to which we have referred have thus far been quietly carried on by the efforts of a few friends, who have cheerfully borne the expense of one hundred dollars a month for both, until such time as the work might no longer be considered an experiment.

It has been proved desirable to continue these schools, and to plant others as soon as means shall be provided.

Two excellent teachers, both of them trained kindergartners—one from Madame Krieger's, the other from Miss Garland's, Training School—have taken up this work of training neglected children from choice. Under their care these schools are no longer an experiment. The public are cordially invited to visit and examine the work for themselves. All willing to further the work are invited to send their contributions to

MRS. JAMES T. FIELDS,
148 Charles Street.
MARY J. SAFFORD BLAKE,
16 Boylston Place.
MR. OTIS CLAPP,
3 Beacon Street.

MR. EMERSON'S "HISTORICAL DISCOURSE" AT CONCORD.

Forty years ago—almost half-way back to the day of the fight—the little town of Concord celebrated its second centennial, and Mr. Emerson gave the address. In the "order of exercises" for the day it is set down as an "Oration by Rev. Ralph Waldo Emerson." This is of an earlier date than any of the addresses which he has hitherto thought fit to preserve in his volumes; and the title-page, in the words "Republished by request," reminds us that even now we should hardly have the satisfaction of reading this one if it were not for the fast-approaching centennial return of another famous day in the Concord annals.

Those who are interested in Concord will need no recommendation of this little pamphlet, and at this particular time there are few who are not interested in Concord. Mr. Emerson had to tell of the founding of the town, of the Indian wars, and of many other matters. He gives also, of course, an account of the fight on the nineteenth of April. He mentions in an appendix (which was originally printed with the address in 1835) the sources from which he had drawn his information, and then adds an interesting narrative of the transaction, written by his own grandfather on the day of the fight,—as to which narrative he says, "a part of it I discovered, only a few days since, in a trunk of family papers." His grandfather, the Rev. William Emerson, was at that time minister of the parish, and the occupant of the "old manse," close by the battle-field, which he had built not many years before; he died soon after, a chaplain in the army at Ticonderoga.

This little address is interesting for its record of many curious details, for certain sagacious comments on events, and for its full and exact references to the original authorities. These, however, are merits which one can find elsewhere. There are other things in it which some will value more,—sundry hints of what they will recall in Mr. Emerson's verse, and some of the earlier gleams, here and there, of the genius that has grown within these forty years to be one of the chief things in the literature of our English tongue. We add a single quotation. The speaker is giving some account of the town-meeting:

"Here the rich gave counsel, but the poor also; and, moreover, the just and the unjust. He is ill-informed who expects, on running down the town records for two hundred years, to find a church of saints, a metropolis of patriots, enacting wholesome and creditable laws. The constitution of the towns forbid it. In this open democracy, every opinion had utterance; every objection, every fact, every acre of land, every bushel of rye, its entire weight. The moderator was the passive mouth-piece, and the vote of the town, like the vane on the turret overhead, free for every wind to turn, and always turned by the last and strongest breath. In these assemblies, the public weal, the call of interest, duty, religion were heard; and every local feeling, every private grudge, every suggestion of petulance and ignorance was not less faithfully produced. Wrath and love came up to town-meeting in company. . . . The ill-spelled pages of the town records contain the result. I shall be excused for confessing that I have set a value upon any symptom of meanness and private pique which I have met with, in these antique books, as proof that justice was done; that if the results of our history are approved as wise and good, it was yet a free strife; if the good counsel prevailed, the sneaking counsel did not fail to be suggested; freedom and virtue, if they triumphed, triumphed in a fair field. And so be it an everlasting testimony for them, and so much ground of assurance of man's capacity for self-government.

"It is the consequence of this institution that not a schoolhouse, a public pew, a bridge, a pound, a mill-dam, hath been set up, or pulled down, or altered, or bought or sold, without the whole population of this town having a voice in the affair. A general contentment is the result, and the people truly feel that they are lords of the soil. In every winding road, in every stone fence, in the smokes of the poor-house chimney, in the clock on the church, they read their own power, and consider, at leisure, the wisdom and error of their judgments."—Advertiser.

IT IS SAID that the founders of Rome gathered from all parts of the neighboring country, and composed entirely of men, went to a festive assemblage among the Sabine hills, carried off the maidens and made them wives. Afterwards, when war broke out between the people of the Sabine territory and the men of Rome, and the two warring hosts encountered each other in battle, the daughters of the Sabines, now Roman matrons, rushed in between their Roman husbands and their Sabine kinsmen, forbade the war and obliged the hostile tribes to make peace and dwell together thereafter in amity. If the women of this age can do for the civilized world what these women did for the Sabine territory, they will lay mankind under a debt which the fervent gratitude of all succeeding generations will but partly repay.

When a battle is fought, women come and bind up the wounds of those whose bodies are torn by cannon-balls and grape-shot; they tend them in hospitals; they watch night and day by the bedside of those who are delirious with pain; they smooth the pillows of the dying. Shall they be limited to this? Are they to make no effort to prevent the evil which they so tenderly seek to mitigate? Must they always wait till the mischief is done and then seek to repair it, which they can only do in small part? Is there no hope that by standing on the threshold they may resist this great evil and forbid its entrance? This is a question which the present age may solve, and let us hope that it may be in the interest of peace.—W. C. Bryant.

SPEAKING of Mill's Essays on Religion, in which, to the surprise of his friends and enemies, he acknowledges the weight of the arguments for the divine existence, and speaks with reverence of the character of Christ, The Presbyterian moralizes thus:—

"A more miserable position can hardly be found in all the realm of thought. He would have been glad to have dismissed the Christian religion, or substitute for it a religion of humanity; but he is compelled to pay a tribute to the character of Christ, and to acknowledge that it has taken a great and salutary hold on the modern mind. In this painful uncertainty he laid down his pen and passed into the world where all things are made manifest."

Who art thou that judgest thy neighbor? How do you know that he was uncandid in studying the question of theism? How do you know that "he would have been glad to have dismissed [sic] the Christian religion," but was "compelled" against his will to acknowledge the goodness of its Founder and the salutary influence it has exerted? As for this "miserable position," that is not so clear. The man who is honestly and faithfully searching after truth, no matter on what subject, though he remain in doubt, is in the most glorious and happy position conceivable. A thousandfold better the humble seeking doubter than the conceited, unreasoning, bigoted dogmatist.—Independent.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

IN A DUNGEON.

BY GRACE MORVEN.

I.

One sat within a dungeon dim, and saw
No glimpse of busy life: the sunshine sweet
Fell o'er the dusty floor like sand of gold.
Only a narrow strip of sky appeared
Through grated window high; sometimes a bird
Skimmed by in rapid flight; sometimes a cloud
Went slowly floating o'er; sometimes a star
Looked in, through lonely watches of the night:
Or wrathful tempest filled with gloom the cell.
But once he climbed the dungeon wall to see,
Across the rippling river at its base,
Sweet sights of happy life and summer days,
And white-winged ships go sailing out to sea.
And thus went by his life, till Death's release.

II.

Prisoned, like him, by clogging walls of flesh
And senses dull, we catch but casual glimpse
Of God's fair, wondrous universe. Our thoughts
Are circumscribed by petty plans and hopes
Of Earth's ambition, and we wear strong chains
Of Mammon; weakly pleased by glittering bonds,
As once a Grecian prince, refusing iron,
Wore tamely silver chains the "Lion-King."
In mockery gave! Or, if we catch a strain
Of harmony divine, and, looking up,
See larger breadths of sky revealed, a wider world,
We sink again to Life's most sordid cares,—
Letting our souls starve, seeking not to reach
God's grand, high purpose in our earthly lives.

SENECA, Mo.

LEXINGTON—1775.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

No maddening thirst for blood had they,
No battle-joy was theirs who set
Against the alien bayonet
Their homespun breasts in that old day.

Their feet had trodden peaceful ways,
They loved not strife, they dreaded pain;
They saw not, what to us is plain,
That God would make man's wrath his praise.

No seers were they, but simple men;
Its vast results the future hid;
The meaning of the work they did
Was strange and dark and doubtful then.

Swift as the summons came they left
The plough, mid-furrow, standing still,
The half-ground corn-grist in the mill,
The spade in earth, the axe in cleft.

They went where duty seemed to call;
They scarcely asked the reason why;
They only knew they could but die,
And death was not the worst of all.

Of man for man the sacrifice,
Unstained by blood, save theirs, they gave.
The flowers that blossomed from their grave
Have sown themselves beneath all skies.

Their death-shot shook the feudal tower,
And shattered slavery's chain as well;
On the sky's dome, as on a bell,
Its echo struck the world's great hour.

That fateful echo is not dumb:
The nations, listening to its sound,
Wait, from a century's vantage-ground,
The holier triumphs yet to come,—

The bridal time of Law and Love,
The gladness of the world's release,
When, war-sick, at the feet of Peace
The hawk shall nestle with the dove,—

The golden age of brotherhood,
Unknown to other rivalries
Than of the mild humanities,
And gracious interchange of good,—

When closer strand shall lean to strand,
Till meet, beneath saluting flags,
The eagle of our mountain crags,
The lion of our Mother-land.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 17.

Chas. Storrs, $5; Lucius Slade, $3.75; Mrs. G. R. Russell, $3.20; Mark T. Adams, $3.20; J. R. High, $1.60; G. W. Lewis, $3.20; J. Andrews, $1.60; H. N. Carver, $3.20; J. J. Hall, $1.60; C. C. Harwood, $1.60; J. R. Buckell, $1.60; T. Frestome, $1.60; M. P. Morrison, $1.60; Lewis Creieling, $1.60; W. C. Allen, $1.60; J. S. Bender, $3.20; Wm. Hill, 20 cents; A. M. Lathrop, $3.20; Adam Wolf, $7.75; M. A. Tripler, $3; John Landen, $3; John Weiss, $3.20; C. M. Lawler, $3.20; Enos Hillis, 50 cents; Alvin Hoyt, $3; ———, $1.20; E. Case, $1.50; A. Risk, $3.30; Nathaniel Little, $3.20; E. P. Hatfield, $3.20; G. W. Low, $1.60; W. S. Church, $3.20; J. H. Clewell, 75 cents; Thos. Douglas, $3.20; E. B. Babcock, $3.20; Edw. Brown, $13.20; Moses Milkman, $3.45; Chas. T. Burrell, $4.75; Matt. H. Ellis, $1.20; Julius Kirschbaum, $1; D. A. Robertson, $3.20; H. Nye, $3.20; E. W. Gunn, $3; Johannes Ellenbaas, $4.25; Henry Moore, $5; J. V. R. West, $1; R. Pritchett, $1.50; John Alexander, $2.40; S. W. Ayres, $1.20; Wm. Ingram, $3.20; O. L. Ashenfelter, 75 cents; E. M. Marshall, $3; Henry Athorp, $10; E. M. Davis, $1.30; M. T. James, 75 cents; S. C. Alvord, 10 cents; Cash, 50 cents; J. W. Judd, 50 cents; S. C. Gale, 40 cents; R. Owen, 30 cents; C. H. White, $1; M. H. Phelps, 50 cents; D. W. Pond, 80 cents; Benj. Hollowell, 25 cents; Miss Dana, 30 cents; Miss E. Johnson, $1.50; Harry Hoover, 30 cents; M. B. Sibley, 25 cents; R. L. Patton, 25 cents.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 22, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

THE "Free Congregational Society" of Florence, Massachusetts, held their annual meeting on April 5, in their fine new Cosmian Hall, which was dedicated so happily in March, 1874. The treasurer's report showed the Society out of debt, the debt of last year ($1400) having been entirely paid by voluntary contributions. From the name of their Hall, the Society have acquired the local soubriquet of "Cosmians"; and the report of the Executive Committee, read by Mr. Seth Hunt, the chairman, recommends its formal adoption as "short, comprehensive, pleasing to the ear, and more clearly descriptive than such epithets as Liberals, Radicals, Free Congregationalists, and Free Religionists." For about a third of the year the Sunday meetings have been sustained without the aid of any regular or imported speaker,—an example of self-help worthy of respectful attention elsewhere. Much value is placed on the Sunday School, which as conducted is an institution wholly unlike what is usually known by that name. The musical, theatrical, and social entertainments given by the Society from their own resources have been very successful. Altogether, this is one of the most interesting organizations on a free thought basis to be found in the country, and is exerting a wide influence.

THE NEW "IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT."

Rev. Edwin S. Elder, minister of the Unitarian society at Lexington (famous as the spot of the battle whose centennial anniversary was commemorated last Monday, and quite as notable for being the birthplace of Theodore Parker), makes a calm and thoughtful argument, in the leading paper of this issue, against the position that Free Religion is opposed to Christianity. The ground he takes is more radical than that taken by Rev. Minot J. Savage some weeks ago in these columns, and probably will come nearer to the average opinion of our readers; yet we fail to be satisfied even by this gentle-thoughted writer that our own ground is a mistaken one. Every man best serves his generation by adhering faithfully to the truth that has dawned on his own mind; and we know that a response drawn from the fountain of innermost conviction will best please Mr. Elder. His essay is a model for imitation in omitting all mere personal references, and in confining itself to the general question under consideration; and we are under cordially acknowledged obligations to him for contributing it to THE INDEX.

The sentence with which Mr. Elder opens states that "injustice is done to the Free Religious movement by those who insist that in its nature and aim it is anti-Christian; and, further, that every one identified with the movement should put himself in an attitude of hostility toward Christianity." Again, a little later, he says with reference to a "majority" of those connected with this movement: "They will also deny the identity of the New Testament religion with the most rational and most spiritual religion of the present. They will insist that the faith of one individual living in one remote age of the world is and must be partial, inadequate to the varied experiences, the altered conditions, and enlarging life of to-day. Many will declare that Christianity has been so intimately associated with certain errors that they no longer care to call their religion Christian. Yet they do not feel the hostile spirit; they cannot assume the anti-Christian attitude." (The italics are ours.)

Considering the fact that Christianity has always laid so much stress upon emotions, sentiments, and feelings, as important above everything else, perhaps it is a not unnatural misapprehension that, when we conclude Free Religion and Christianity to be radically opposed to each other, we should also be imagined to be urging radicals to "feel the hostile spirit." But this is nevertheless a very grave and injurious misunderstanding. We have made our appeals to intellect and conscience, to "those who think and those who dare"; but not to feelings or emotions, or to those who are governed by them. It is no object of ours to stir up animosity or hatred against the Christian religion, much less against those who believe in it; we cherish no such sentiments, and should be greatly sorry to see them appearing anywhere. The anti-Christian attitude we take is forced upon us by the calmest and coolest reflection on the fundamental principles, the cardinal ideas, the intellectual, moral, social, and political tendencies, of the Christian religion; it involves no excited feelings or ebullitions of wrath, no bitterness, no malice, no hatred; it only involves the clear perception that Free Religion and Christianity cannot thrive or permanently exist together, that each opposes and tends to destroy the other, and that by their inherent nature fidelity to either sets one in opposition to the other beyond any possibility of escape. Men may not comprehend their own position; they may conceive it to be other than it is; but the real relations of things do not depend on anybody's comprehension or non-comprehension, and will ultimately force recognition of themselves even upon an unwilling world. It ought not any longer to be thoughtlessly charged upon us, or carelessly taken for granted, or ignorantly supposed, that we would inculcate any antagonism of feeling at all against Christianity; it ought to be seen and acknowledged that our protest against it rests solely upon intellectual and moral convictions, and not in the slightest degree upon any private pique, any personal grievance, any "hostility" of "feeling" of any name or sort; and we earnestly request all who would not do us a wilful injustice to appreciate the fact that we wish no one to have any "hostile spirit"—that what we wish is simply a recognition of the real state of things, and an earnest, high-minded, self-sacrificing discharge of the duties which that state of things imposes. Whatever feelings may come in the wake of clear perception, high moral purpose, and consistent action, they cannot be otherwise than worthy of the noblest spirit; and, knowing this, we would place all emphasis on these more important things, and leave feelings to take care of themselves, as they will and must.

But Mr. Elder, even while declaring that those for whom he speaks "cannot assume the anti-Christian attitude," nevertheless himself attributes it to them in unmistakable language. Just read over again carefully the passage we have quoted above; note how they are said to "deny the identity" of Christianity and Free Religion, and to "insist" on the "inadequacy" of the former to meet the wants of the modern world. Does not every one who thus "denies" and "insists" take an anti-Christian position so decided that it cannot possibly be misconstrued? Is there a Christian on this planet who would not instantaneously recognize this position as neither friendly nor neutral, but on the contrary positively anti-Christian? With the utmost respect we must say that Mr. Elder does not perceive the true character of the position he himself takes in this matter. He "assumes the anti-Christian attitude" without knowing it, and just as emphatically as any one could assume it. He disclaims "feeling a hostile spirit," but so do we; the essence of the "anti-Christian attitude" is not in cherishing hostility of feeling, but in the intellectual and moral rejection of its ideas, claims, and authority, and this rejection he makes as unequivocally as ever we have done. Without being conscious of the fact, he shows all through his essay that he repudiates without reserve the most solemn claim of Christianity to the belief and obedience of every human soul; and yet he thinks he can do this without being anti-Christian! Well, this is precisely the case with thousands and thousands of liberal people in this age; they think they are either Christians or at least friendly to Christianity, when the whole tenor of their thoughts, words, and actions is to weaken the world's faith in its doctrines and to withdraw men's souls from its influence; they imagine they are doing nothing against it, when they refuse personally to acknowledge its sway, to accept its doctrines, to obey its authority. How can they be so utterly unaware of the necessary results of this rejection? If everybody should reject it in the same manner, the Christian religion would most certainly be as dead, as thoroughly and totally destroyed, as the Paganism of ancient Rome; and whoever rejects it for himself alone contributes just so much to its direct destruction. What, if not this, can it be to "assume the anti-Christian attitude"? The only difference in this respect between Mr. Elder and some others is that he assumes the anti-Christian attitude without knowing it, while they know exactly what they are doing.

At the same time Mr. Elder appears to recognize the contrariety between Christianity and Free Religion to some extent, when he refers to our emphasis of it as "raising the merest accident of the Free Religious movement into undue prominence." He admits a "critical, destructive, negative function of the movement," though holding it to be "incidental and subordinate." Very well: he will find the intrinsic positiveness of this movement most emphatically recognized by us from the beginning. Did we not begin the first page of the first issue of THE INDEX in 1870 with "Fifty Affirmations," in which he will find the distinction between the "universal and special elements" of Christianity, on which he now lays so much stress, stated with entire clearness, fulness, and force? For the sake of showing how little chargeable THE INDEX is with ignorance or neglect of this all-important distinction, it may be permissible to quote here a few of these "Fifty Affirmations" which teach it, and to add that we never had seen the distinction drawn in this manner at all. In fact, Mr. Elder seems to favor the very phrases we then employed in stating it:—

1. Religion is the effort of man to perfect himself.
2. The root of religion is universal human nature.
3. Historical religions are all one, in virtue of this one common root.
4. Historical religions are all different, in virtue of their different historical origin and development.
5. Every historical religion has thus two distinct elements,—one universal or spiritual, and the other special or historical.
6. The universal element is the same in all historical religions; the special element is peculiar in each of them.
7. The universal and the special elements are equally essential to the existence of an historical religion.
8. The unity of all religions must be sought in their universal element.
9. The peculiar character of each religion must be sought in its special element.

22. Christianity is the historical religion taught in the Christian Scriptures, and illustrated in the history of the Christian Church.

23. It is a religion in virtue of its universal element; it is the Christian religion in virtue of its special element.

42. Christianity is identical with Free Religion so far as its universal element is concerned,—antagonistic to it so far as its special element is concerned.

Again, in the first issue of THE INDEX for 1871, another positive statement was published under the name of "Modern Principles: a Synopsis of Free Religion," of which the beginning was as follows:—

1. Regarded as to its universal element, Christianity is a beautiful but imperfect presentation of natural morality.
2. Regarded as to its special element, Christianity is a great completed system of faith and life—a coherent body of doctrines logically developed and organized as an historical power by the Christian Church. It claims absolute control over the collective life of society and the outward and inward life of the individual. It rests this claim on the supernatural revelation of the will of God; that is, on the principle of DIVINE AUTHORITY.

Again, in the first issue of THE INDEX for 1872, in the "Impeachment of Christianity" itself, we were careful to recognize the fact that Christianity has been and still is more or less useful to the world:—

Christianity is the great system of faith and practice which is organized in the Christian Church; and its history is the history of the Christian Church. Such, I believe, is the definition which it has made for itself; and such is substantially the only definition of it which will abide the test of time.

Thus defined, I recognize with gratitude the great good which Christianity has done in the past, and is to some extent doing in the present. Nothing can long endure which has not struck root into the true, the admirable, the everlasting; and Christianity has endured for nearly two thousand years. But it is a product of humanity, and everything human is born to die. To-day Christianity is dying a lingering death—to be prolonged until its usefulness to the world shall have been wholly exhausted. To many it is dead already, and the number of these is increasing day by day. For these I speak.

These papers were representative ones, intended to be comprehensive statements, which the weekly editorial cannot always be. Let them speak for themselves as to the perception or non-perception of the distinction justly emphasized by Mr. Elder as so important. They should show that, when we consider the anti-Christian attitude as involved in the very essence of Free Religion, and not as a mere accident of it, the view we take has not been formed in ignorance of this distinction; and that we do not hold, as Mr. Elder suggests, that "Free Religion is anti-Christian" because we "ignore the universal element" of Christianity. The real strength of our position cannot possibly be appreciated until it is better understood than this. Instead of being "undiscriminating, antagonistic towards both error and truth," in that we oppose Christianity when it contains universal truths as well as special errors, we have taken the utmost pains to discriminate between the two. On the contrary, in his reluctance to accept the inevitable attitude of opposition to Christianity as a whole, Mr. Elder himself seems to fail in discrimination by apparently befriending "error and truth" at the same time. If he should only say, as we have said in the passages quoted above, that Free Religion is identical with Christianity so far as it is really universal and true, and antagonistic to it only so far as it is special and false, then he would indeed discriminate—and substantially agree with the views he now controverts.

Nevertheless, there is real force in the difficulty which Mr. Elder means to bring up, and we wish to meet it in its fulness. The difficulty, which we long ago carefully considered, is this: if Christianity contains both a universal spiritual and ethical element which is true, and a special historical and dogmatic element which is false,—if, moreover, these two are indissolubly connected,—how is it possible to oppose Christianity without opposing the true, or to befriend it without befriending the false? How is it possible either to oppose or to befriend Christianity as a whole, when it is partly true and partly false? Can you shoot the wolf without shooting the sheep he is carrying off?

Let us suggest an illustration which is more true to the facts of the case. All living tissues are composed, as science tells us, of one and the same life-stuff, or "physical basis of life," as Huxley called it. This universal element of all organisms is protoplasm, without which there can be no organism at all. Now suppose a traveller is assailed in the forest by a panther, which is a peculiar organism composed ultimately of the same protoplasm of which the traveller himself and all other organisms are composed. What shall he do? He has no quarrel with protoplasm; he thinks very well of protoplasm; in fact, he could not conveniently get along without it. But this particular aggregate of protoplasm which now threatens to assail him with teeth and claws is something that he must quarrel with, or else be digested by. He is not anti-protoplasm, but he is certainly anti-panther; so he concludes not to be perplexed by the co-existence in the beast of both universal and special elements, but to shoot it as a whole. He cannot possibly kill all protoplasm, but he must kill this form of it or be killed himself. Now this is a crude representation of the fact as respects Christianity. The protoplasmic universal element, out of which all religions are built up into peculiar organic forms or institutions, cannot possibly be harmed by anything that happens to these; it is as permanent as man, and will survive the death of Christianity as easily as it survived the death of Grecian mythology. To oppose these institutions and the dogmas they express is not to oppose the universal element, but rather to seek for this very universal element a higher form of embodiment, better adapted to the condition of the modern world. The special element of Christianity, which Mr. Elder rejects as much as we do, is precisely that which gives all its organic shape and life to the religion; and to oppose Christianity as a whole, notwithstanding the fact that universal and special elements both enter into it, is really only seeking to emancipate the universal element from the limitations which are imposed on it by the special element—only seeking to leave it free to create such new organic forms as shall be in harmony with man's present needs. This work of disintegrating the old for the sake of the new is going on all about us; every one helps it forward who forbears to labor actively in the defence of the old; and whoever does help it forward is not working against the universal truth which Christianity has hitherto very imperfectly embodied, but rather doing his best to hasten the advent of that better embodiment which is surely coming. He is anti-panther, but not anti-protoplasm.

No space is left us for further consideration of Mr. Elder's paper; and we regret we cannot dwell on some of his points which remain untouched—especially the point that "Christianity has passed into Free Religion," as if in the course of natural evolution. We should like to show that Free Religion had its origin in influences long antedating this generation and wholly independent of Christianity in any form; that it is the legitimate offspring of a mighty outside secular life acting upon the Christian Church, and developing within the latter that which is now born out of it, as the heir of both. The continuity of evolution is indeed preserved, but in a far higher and profounder sense than Mr. Elder seems to suggest. But all this can now only be hinted, and left to the reader's private thought.

"KINDERGARTENS FOR NEGLECTED CHILDREN."

In November, 1873, a lady and gentleman of Boston became specially interested in the little children that swarm in the streets of the North End, growing up to a dismal future in the midst of squalor, vice, and wretchedness. For several months they visited this dreary region of the city, so slightly known to its happier inhabitants, and spent several hours every Sunday in amusing, instructing, and caring for these neglected little creatures. Their whole object was to benefit them in this world, dismissing all concern for another; and this feature of their work, which was indeed the living inspiration of it, will command the sympathy of all our readers. One might imagine that no obstacles would be wilfully thrown in the way of such an undertaking; but superstition stepped in, as usual, to defeat the humane purpose not governed by itself. A Catholic mob, stirred up by a jealous priest who suspected this was some artful attempt to proselytize the children (and it must be confessed that ordinary Protestant charity gives good ground for such suspicions), was excited one Sunday afternoon against these unselfish missionaries of natural humanity, and they escaped with their lives only by the aid of the police.

But others had become interested in these unpretentious but most noble endeavors. Private meetings were held in the spring of 1874 to sustain them: money was raised; clothing, books, and other necessities were contributed; two Kindergarten schools were established, which have been continued to the present time. It has been an experiment in the application of radical ideas to the uplifting of degraded humanity; and, though it is far too early to give any account of results, the promise of great good is unmistakable. Having had personal knowledge of the enterprise from the beginning, we can venture to guarantee the genuine usefulness of it; and we hope that most generous response will be made to the circular on behalf of it which is printed with the above caption in another column.

In consequence chiefly of the proved utility of these two Kindergarten schools, the Boston School Committee passed the following order at their meeting of March 23, 1875:—

"Ordered, That the Committee on the Kindergarten School consider and report to the Board at its stated meeting in May next whether it be expedient to establish at the beginning of the next school year six schools for Kindergarten instruction; to place one of these schools in Charlestown, one in Roxbury, one in East Boston, one in South Boston, and two in the central districts of Boston; to admit children to these schools at three years, and to continue the course of instruction during four years. Referred to the Committee on the Kindergarten School."

Kindergarten schools are not wholly a novelty in Boston. There has been an excellent public one on Somerset Street for four years; it is a decided success. There are also four private schools of this class, one being the Training School of Miss May Garland, a pupil of Madame Kriege, at 98 Chestnut Street, where twelve or fifteen teachers are fitting for this particular vocation. The others are those of Miss N. Moore, on Mt. Vernon Street; of Miss A. C. Rust, on West Brookline Street; and of Miss Mary S. Fuller, in Roxbury. But there was no other school of this sort for the neglected children of the city until the enterprise above described was started; and the benefits of the two now sustained by private beneficence are so great and so evident, and are doing so much to stop the black stream of pauperism and crime at its very fountain-head, that those who would be wisely liberal ought not to withhold lavish support of them. By-and-by the community will most certainly be induced to make the Kindergarten a part of the public school system; but meanwhile private benevolence must furnish the demonstration of its usefulness in the degraded quarters of the city. Listen, then, to the gentle appeal of the circular, the signers of which need no introduction, least of all a recommendation, where their names are known.

We only add that all who are interested in learning about Fröbel and his Kindergarten system should apply to E. Steiger, 22 and 24 Frankfort Street, New York City, who has published at his own expense and gratuitously distributes many instructive tracts on this subject, and of whom more elaborate treatises can be ordered in English, German, and French. The Rhode Island State Medical Society has recently recommended "that the Kindergarten system should be engrafted upon our public school system"; and we venture to say that the importance of this measure, not only in a purely humanitarian aspect, but also with reference to the gravest questions of social science, will become daily more and more apparent.

WISCONSIN UNITARIAN CONFERENCE.

A Unitarian Conference in Massachusetts, even in old Essex County, is as different from a Wisconsin Unitarian Conference as a Massachusetts pancake is unlike a Western one, which becomes a "fritter" after it passes a certain undefinable meridian of longitude. A Unitarian Conference in New England is a conference of Unitarians; and Unitarians, for the most part, are those people who have sainted Channing, who open their back door to Orthodoxy and bolt their front door to Radicals, and make pilgrimages to biennial conventions where they reaffirm their allegiance to the gospel of Jesus Christ, and work to "build up the Kingdom of God,"—in which phrase they include all questions of education, philanthropy, and reform.

These are the sort of people who usually make up the rank and file of New England Unitarian Conferences. They are rather proud of the name Unitarian, and most of them insist that you call yourself a Unitarian, or at least a "Christian," in order to be welcomed into full fellowship.

Now, we have just attended a Wisconsin Unitarian Conference at Zanesville, which was, so far as we are informed, the most catholic and hospitable organization in the country, called by the name "Unitarian." It was, in fact, a Free Religious Convention. Although it was advertised as a "Unitarian Conference," it was expressly stated in its circular of invitation that, "this Conference recognizes as members all those who may attend in the spirit of co-operation, its aim being to work for the advancement of truth rather than for any dogma, and for humanity rather than for any sect; and holds the name Unitarian in no narrower sense than that of an effort to unite the best methods and spirit of all denominations under a peace that may become universal." Here is no test-word, creed, or creedlet which you must accept.

It is true, that it is a misnomer to call such a Conference a "Unitarian Conference," for it is not a Conference of Unitarians only, but a Conference of Unitarians, Universalists, Independents, and Spiritualists. For the sake of consistency, the name should be changed; and we have the best reason to think the good sense of the members will adopt a less sectarian name in less than two years. But the fact that in Wisconsin we have had a Conference attended by about fifteen to eighteen ministers, some from Northern Illinois, willing to stretch the name "Unitarian" out of all definite and traditional shape, in order to get a fellowship as big as the heart and broad as humanity, proves that Wisconsin "Unitarians" are practically Free Religionists, in their breadth of sympathy and freedom of fellowship.

There are some among them who think it is possible to save the Unitarian name from grounding, and so work manfully at the pumps; but the general opinion is getting to be that the ship is too waterlogged to make much head-way in the West, and she had better be abandoned. If Unitarians during the last ten years had been willing to let their name run ahead like a "flying ideal," it might, perhaps, have expanded to meet the expanding wants, and have been to-day in the West the synonyme of Liberality; but we think the time is now past. The action of the denomination at Syracuse, New York, Boston, and especially at Saratoga, has given to the name a circumference altogether too small to embrace the unorganized and floating faiths. It may catch the renegades from Orthodoxy, but it cannot sweep into its communion the great body of the unchurched; and the name and faith that can do this will supersede the name and function of Unitarianism in the West. We already have a Wisconsin Union Conference which is composed of exactly the same elements as our late so-called Unitarian Conference. There is no occasion for two names of the same thing. They will soon be merged into one, and that one will be in name, what it is in fact, a Union Conference.

One objection which we heard once urged against a broader fellowship by Unitarians, was that the Spiritualists, even the long-haired Spiritualists, might send delegates enough to out-vote and capture the Convention. There were Spiritualists in our Wisconsin Conference, several Independent ministers, and at least two Universalists; and yet we saw no dark plot to capture any of the Unitarians, their treasury, archives, or honorable name and prestige. On the contrary there was sympathy enough to warm us, diversity enough to provoke debate, common sense enough to tolerate difference, common interests sufficient to coöperate, and a common love of truth and right to make us feel that it was good for us to be there, and to resolve to meet again. W. H. S.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Mr. A. W. Stevens' article entitled "After No, Yes," in THE INDEX of the 4th March, is so extremely valuable and suggestive that I cannot but hope it will be reprinted as a tract or hand-bill for the widest possible circulation. With his kind permission I shall reproduce it here in London, and make it known in every direction.

There can be no doubt that what he says of pure negations is strictly true. However necessary they are as pioneering work, they can never be made a substitute for the affirmations we seek to verify, and on the truth of which so much of man's well-being and progress depends.

The present attitude of many minds, even among the scientific, towards the affirmative side of religious inquiry is anything but respectful and encouraging. Where there is no open scorn, there is the contempt of a significant silence. Of course there are exceptions to this, as in the case of the late Sir Charles Lyell and, I think I may say also, in the writings of Professor Tyndall. It strikes me, however, that the prevailing indifference to, or contempt for, all religious inquiry is most certainly to be excused on the following grounds:—

(1.) Religion hitherto has been presented in a most unfavorable light, as teaching theories of cosmogony utterly at variance with recently discovered and well-proved facts; and as enforcing those exploded theories upon our acceptance as Divine and never-to-be-questioned truths.

(2.) Religion hitherto has been set forth as hostile to the scientific spirit of inquiry and demand for reasonable evidence. It has not been content to assert that which is contrary to facts; it has denounced the criticism of its own assertions as impiety.

(3.) Scientific men have been further outraged by the partly absurd, partly immoral, conceptions of God and man which religion hitherto has insisted on as final and unalterable truths. So that the alienation is on a twofold ground. Religion has been an affront to their consciences and understandings, not merely as students of science, but also as men.

(4.) There is as yet no alternative between the hostile religion and the state of complete irreligion, well put before the scientific and irreligious world. Whatever great and noble efforts have been made by some advanced Unitarians, by Theodore Parker, by THE INDEX itself, and by the no less zealous, if less conspicuous exertions of individuals, these efforts have not yet resulted in a concise, coherent, and explicit declaration of what may be reasonably believed. We have, in fact, no formulated creed, with its supports or proofs ready to submit to the scientific as an alternative to the creed they abhor. I do not think we are to blame for this; but I point to the fact as one among the grounds on which the whole subject of religion is often superciliously dismissed by the scientific as unworthy of human attention.

What we are aiming to do, each in his own way, as free-thinkers, is to present to this age our own sincere convictions supported by the best reasons we can find. In the very nature of things, our views must be more or less divergent; and as we start with the firm persuasion that much must ever lie beyond our ken, we refuse to lay down as dogmas even the most cardinal of our cherished doctrines. We bind neither each other nor ourselves, and we dread, perhaps morbidly dread, to tabulate and formulate our doctrines, lest we should even seem to be falling into the old error of dogmatizing.

While this hesitancy is most becoming on our part as professed seekers after truth, and has its great advantage in encouraging all to make individual researches, it acts unfavorably on those who reject religion altogether, for there is nothing, focussed before their minds, for them to examine.

We cannot, therefore, blame them for their scorn of religion, so long as the only idea which that name calls up is one which is hostile to truth and repulsive to the imagination.

The value of Mr. Stevens' advice becomes still more apparent when these causes of disaffection towards religion are recognized. Surely we ought to be able to put forth some kind of religious manifesto which shall be guarded all through and from end to end against the fatal mistake of dogmatism. Surely a man may say without danger of scorn from the scientific, "I believe in God the Father Almighty," if he add to it the confession that these terms are only used because they are the best and simplest to convey the impression on his own mind, and that they are even to himself utterly inadequate to express the whole truth as it appears to him, much more inadequate to express the truth as it actually is. Neither the Orthodox nor the irreligious can be expected to care deeply for mere negations. The former will only too gladly see how futile is such opposition; the latter will take but a passing glance, may nod his assent, and will quickly turn and go on his way, forgetting even the brief pleasure he felt in the discomfiture of his foe.

Leaving aside, just now, the necessity for regarding the welfare of mankind, it is a mistaken policy towards those whom we most desire to cultivate, and from whom we hope to learn our best practical knowledge, to leave them unprovided with any alternative to the religion which they despise.

Soon the scientific spirit of inquiry will reassert itself in this deepest and highest of all regions of thought, and not only will men of science profit by the culture of this side of their nature, but they will bring to our aid their own highly-trained powers of investigation, and perhaps unfold to us truths yet undreamed of, while correcting our undetected errors.

Manifestly, this is a period of transition, imposing upon us especial duties and lines of conduct; and I think Mr. Stevens' word of warning will be responded to by many more hearts than he dreamed of reaching when he wrote them for your readers.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S.E., March 27, 1875.

Communications.

THE CENTENNIAL OF RADICALISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—With reference to the suggestions made by E. C. Alphonse, in your issue of April 1, regarding a convention of Radicals in 1876, I would state that the last triennial convention of the Freie Gemeinden (German Independent Congregations), held in Sauk City, Wisconsin, last June, in addition to a resolution commendatory of the course of THE INDEX, and recommending the formation of Liberal Leagues by all the Freie Gemeinden, passed a resolution fixing a convention of all the radical elements among the Germans to be held at Philadelphia in 1876, and to be prepared by a committee appointed by the Executive Committee of the "Union of German Independent Congregations in North America," in connection with a Local Committee of the Freie Gemeinde at Philadelphia. As the latter, in a largely attended meeting held yesterday for the purpose of discussing the steps to be taken for bringing Mr. Nieland's naturalization case, reported in your number of April 1, to a decision before the higher tribunals of the Supreme Court and the court of public opinion, was unanimously in favor of joining the Liberal League recently formed here, the two proposed conventions (of American and German Free-Thinkers) could perhaps be so arranged as to be held about the same time, so as to bring the liberal movement among the two nationalities into one channel; which I think could be but beneficial to the liberal cause in general, as it would tend to give additional strength to the isolated endeavors of both. What do you say to it?

Yours most sincerely,

A. LOOS.

PHILADELPHIA, April 12, 1875.

[First of all, we must congratulate the Freie Gemeinde of Philadelphia on their spirit of determination to right Mr. Nieland's wrong, and express the hope that they will adhere to that purpose with indomitable resolve. They cannot fail; for failure itself in a brave attempt is victory. Nothing would so rouse and electrify the sluggish radicalism of the day as a new Thermopylae.

Next, we are very glad to learn that the radical Germans propose to assemble at the Centennial in 1876. Perhaps this step may be the nucleus of a grand movement.

But, lastly, we do not like to hear of "two nationalities" in this matter. We are all—Germans, English, French, Scotch, Irish, or what not—but one nationality. We are all Americans, all fellow-citizens; nothing less, nothing more. Emphatically we disapprove of the perpetuation of all such distinctions as these. Every man, of whatever nation by birth, who is devoted to cosmopolitan principles (and "America" means nothing else), should forget the accident of his birth in the superior claim of essential human rights. Instead, therefore, of "two conventions," we wish there might be one; for union is strength. With this modification we most cordially sympathize with the effort to have the general liberal movement well represented in 1876; and if large, wise counsels are favored, and all small ambitions are forgotten, we shall rejoice to work towards this end to the extent of our power.—ED.]

IS CHRISTIANITY A "CONSCIOUS IMPOSTOR"?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your answer to the communication of Mr. LeSueur, printed in THE INDEX of April 8, you say that "the main point at issue is the true relation between those who want liberty of thought to be unlimited and a great institution which wants to limit it."

1. Apparently this is only asserting in other words what Mr. LeSueur charged upon you as the "fallacy beneath all your reasoning"; namely, "that Christianity is a conscious impostor; that she knows she cannot prove her case, and therefore lays an embargo on human thought." That this in your judgment is not a fallacy, I take for granted from the fact that you are content to rest under the charge that it lies beneath all your reasoning.

Yet you do not here, and have not elsewhere so far as I know, adduced one particle of proof that it is truth. You cite history to show that the Church has restricted individual liberty; but this is no proof that in so doing she consciously and wilfully imposed a wrong upon the world.

For the sake of plain speaking, and in order that all your readers may get at the root of the difference between yourself and Mr. Morse, are you willing to say that Christianity is a "conscious impostor"?

If yes, it might not be irrelevant to inquire what sort of universal religion is likely to result from a scientific study of the facts of religious history, when the religion of the most civilized nations of the earth is branded as an imposture. Does not anti-Christian in this sense of the word mean anti-religion?

2. If you refuse to say that Christianity is consciously in error, then, descending from generalities, might it not be worth while to particularize those whose liberty it endangers or attacks?

If the Church conscientiously believes her doctrines—no matter what those doctrines are,—whose liberty is thereby abridged? Not the churchman's, for surely a man ought to have liberty to define his liberty if he wishes; and one cannot see that it is another's business to decide for him when he shall be satisfied, and when dissatisfied, with the amount of freedom he enjoys. Not yours, it appears; for no one has thus far interfered with your right to express your opinions.

3. So far as a benighted Christian intellect can discern, the question comes to this at last: whether Christianity in its successive stages has been the development of man's religious faith, or whether it has been a cunningly devised system by means of which priestcraft has ridden the race. If the former be true of it, Christians have had, and still have, all the liberty they desire; and may grant to the rest of the world the same privilege without becoming anti-Christian. If it be the latter, I know not where to look for any facts which warrant us in ascribing to religion anywhere reality or power.

With great respect,

A MINISTER.

BROOKLINE, Mass.

[That we did not reply to all the points of Mr. LeSueur's long article in a brief note at the end of it, is no ground for inferring that we admitted their correctness. It ought by this time to be well understood that we are obliged to let many statements with which we disagree appear uncorrected in these columns.

1. We do not consider Christianity a "conscious impostor"; neither does this "fallacy" have anything to do with our argument. If the Church relied on human reason to "prove her case," then the suppression of human reason, of which the Church is always more or less guilty, might fairly be taken as a proof of conscious imposition. But the Church relies on Divine Revelation, not on human reason; and she honestly suppresses reason because it is fatal to Revelation. She could not be honest in her devotion to Revelation in any other way; and so evident a consideration should have prevented the charge that we think "Christianity a conscious impostor."

2. By suppressing reason to the full extent of its power, no matter what its motives, the Church fetters the intellects of its own members and of all outsiders to the same extent. When it burned heretics, one would think its interference with liberty sufficiently plain. It cannot burn heretics to-day; but it can excommunicate them, proscribe them, brand them as morally bad or "infidel" because they do not believe its doctrines, and in various ways and degrees lay honest disbelief under disabilities. The treatment of Messrs. Thorne, Treat, and Nieland is quite too recent to be forgotten in this connection; will "A Minister" deny that Christianity was at the bottom of it?

3 We regard Christianity as one stage of human development, just like the institution of chattel-slavery; but that does not prove that it is anything else than slavery. Slavery itself has had its uses in the past, and we have heard before now of contented slaves. All this is irrelevant to our argument, which is that Christianity (of course honestly) always opposes free thought, that free thought is to-day a necessity, and that all free thinkers, whether they know it or not, are in spite of themselves helping to undermine the very foundations of Christianity. —ED.]

THE "DEMANDS" CHALLENGED.

FRIEND ABBOT:—

Your reply to my objections to the "Demands of Liberalism," in THE INDEX of March 11, seems at call for a rejoinder, inasmuch as my position does not appear to be fully appreciated by you, or at least the answer is not altogether satisfactory.

1. In referring to the question of marriage, I did not wish to be understood as denying the correctness of your position; on the contrary I think you are quite right. I used the comparison only as an argument against prohibitory legislation on the question of the Bible as a text-book in the public schools.

You argue that "marriage is a civil contract, and is therefore a proper subject for legislation," and intimating that the Bible is not. How, then, about your prohibitory legislation on this religious subject? You say farther on (in paragraph 5) that the "Bible is not a text-book of anything except religion." Has it not a historical value, aside from the mere theological doctrines which some men want it to teach?

Mr. Frothingham, if I mistake not, values it principally as a collection of ancient Hebrew and early Christian Literature. Mr. Conway's Anthology seems to me to be much more exclusively a text-book of religion than the Bible itself. But I can see no possible objections to the "scientific study of theology" even in the public schools, with such text-books (among others) as the Sacred Anthology and the Bible, provided that competent, unprejudiced instructors be secured.

2. I confess my ignorance of the laws "enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath," probably because of never having had occasion to notice, practically, the limitations of my personal liberty, though working or playing whenever I chose. But in presenting my former criticism, I supposed (which I doubt not is the general impression) that your phrase "directly or indirectly," in that Demand, was intended to cover more ground than simply those laws which in set terms refer to Sunday as the Sabbath. It was because your critic did read carefully what he criticised, that he referred to that Demand as advocating the entire repeal of all Sunday laws. What you "have said again and again," outside of those demands, was not the subject of my criticism. And if you still insist on that particular Demand, I think it would be well to qualify it with some explanation equivalent to that which you have given me.

3. Your picture of taking off our hats to the family idols of another seems to me to be an entirely new and original conception of your own brilliant imagination, for I never experienced any such servitude as is there portrayed. I have always understood such proclamations to be simply recommendations to the people to abstain from their ordinary occupations, and assemble in their respective places of worship. If one who esteems it a privilege to act in accordance with the suggestion is accustomed to worship in the forest or by the seaside, his personal liberty is no more ignored than is that of the wealthy, well-dressed Episcopalian, sitting in his cushioned pew, in the "dim religious light" of the sanctuary. And what more easy and practical way of making known the time of such "religious festivals" than by proclamation of President or Governor; provided, as I said before, that there be no compulsion in the matter?

4. It seems hardly fair to go back into the past for a definition of Christianity or Christian morality. Burning people for heresy can hardly be said to be a part of the Christianity of to-day, even admitting that essential Christianity has been the cause of such injustice in the past. And as to the "natural morality," to the requirements of which you claim that all laws should be conformed, I am reminded of Mr. Savage's suggestion concerning the private dictionary which the Editor of the THE INDEX does at times seem to desire to establish as the universal criterion.

6. Your last question was answered before you asked it, in the corresponding paragraph of my first communication; but you do not directly answer my question in that same paragraph; but, instead of doing so, put the same question to me in a different form.

Do you wish me to understand that in your search after truth you do not care whether or not people think that you fairly represent the cause of Liberalism? That is what your evasive answer seems to imply; for you say "let feelings take care of themselves," and that seems to mean other people's feelings than your own.

7. And now, having reviewed the principal features of the former argument, allow me to state my position in a different form.

THE INDEX is devoted to Free Religion; so says its own advertisement, and so is it regarded by its readers; and it is of the utmost importance that it should fairly represent the attitude of Free Religion, not only towards truth and liberty, but towards Christianity and all other named religions.

And what do the Demands imply? How would any one reading for the first time those Demands, in connection with the advertisement in another column, interpret them? Would they not be considered as the very basis of Free Religion?

Now I am well aware that for a time there was printed in THE INDEX, underneath the "Demands of Liberalism" and "Form of Local Organization," an explanatory note to the effect that, so far as he, the editor, was concerned, the above was the platform of THE INDEX.

So far as he was concerned, then, it was also the platform of Free Religion. But is it the platform of Free Religion? And to-day, that little note of explanation having somehow slipped from its position, THE INDEX, with its demands, stands to the world as an emblem and type of Free Religion! I suppose that the note was crowded out by something more interesting in its character.

But suppose, for the sake of following out the argument, that it should be placed back in its old position; what then?

In your criticism of Mr. Savage's article in THE INDEX of March 11th, you say that, having undertaken to champion and protect Unitarianism, "he has no right to say that he answers for himself alone. . . . We asked him to answer for Unitarianism; and we deny that he can do that without going to the collective utterances of the Unitarian denomination. By these utterances and acts alone must Unitarianism be judged."

If, then, THE INDEX is devoted to Free Religion, by the utterances and acts alone of the Free Religious Association should it be judged. And if I read the F. R. A.'s constitution understandingly, each individual should be allowed to interpret those utterances for himself.

The mere heading "Demands of Liberalism," in a paper devoted to Free Religion, is enough to lead one to suppose that Liberalism is only another name for Free Religion, which view may or may not be correct, according as the two terms are defined.

Hoping that I have this time made myself more fully understood, I am

Yours for justice and equality,

MARCUS T. JAMES.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., March 16, 1875.

[It is a matter of regret that we could not notice this article before; but we do so at our earliest opportunity, with necessary conciseness.

1. To legislate that the Bible shall be excluded from the schools, on the ground that its being there is a violation of the equal rights of the citizens, is perfectly consistent with the principle that there shall be no legislation on the subject of religion; for such a step would be simply maintaining justice between man and man, which (we are sorry to say) is no part of religion as popularly construed, but is the well-understood function of purely civil government.

The Bible, when read "without note or comment," as is now required in our schools, has absolutely no "historical value." It has historical value only when accompanied with such notes and comments as no Bible-believer would wish it subjected to. Further, the common schools are no place for the "scientific study of theology," which is far above the comprehension of school children.

2. The seventh "Demand" is already as clear as the English language can make it, within the limits of our power of expression; and we must rely upon the general intelligence not to throw out of it as meaningless the sufficient "qualification" already there.

3. Governors and Presidents, in their official action, represent the whole people. If they officially appoint or recommend Christian fasts or festivals, the whole people appoints or recommends them. But for the agent to do what his principal protests against is wrong; and a part of the people, at least, protests against any official recognition of Christianity by their executive agents. Such recognition by them is a recognition by the whole people; and therefore, when the Governor takes off his official hat to Christianity by appointing a Christian fast, he takes off Mr. James' hat, and our hat, and everybody's hat, to the idol of only a part of the population. There is far less "imagination" in this comparison than bald and prosaic fact. We object to being thus compelled, through official action by which every citizen is committed, to pay homage to what we consider superstition.

4. Is not Christianity a fact of some two thousand years' standing? How then is it possible not to "go back into the past" for a definition of it? But if Mr. James prefers to invent on the spot a brand-new definition of the fact, without the slightest reference to the fact itself, and to confine himself to the present exclusively, we inquire whether he or the present Christian Church has the better right to say what Christianity is? We think it fairer to take the Church's definition of it, whether it comes from the past or not; and, in propounding his newly-invented definition, we respectfully suggest that it is he, and not we, who would impose on the great public a "private dictionary" of his own. Could anything be plainer?

5. Mr. James is mistaken in thinking we gave an "evasive answer" to any question he put. We may be in error, and undoubtedly are at times; but we never evade. His question was this: "Are not such Demands more likely to create a feeling of antagonism than to convince any one of the truth of your position?" This was our reply: "It is our duty to make sure of the truth of our position, and to let 'feelings' take care of themselves." We meant to be understood, and supposed we should be understood, in this terse answer, as saying substantially that we are not at all solicitous as to what "feeling" the Demands may create; that we cannot tell what "feeling" they may create; that we have no means of knowing or supposing that the "feeling" will be uniform on the subject; that very likely some will "feel" one way, and others another way; that what we are solicitous about is to make the Demands express exactly the requirements of justice and truth, and then leave them without concern to produce such effect as may be natural or inevitable; that we never waste our thought on calculating what effect our words may produce, but devote it all to making them express the truth, in the best form we can achieve with sole reference to the truth itself. All this was boiled down into two lines in the answer complained of as "evasive"; but condensation is not evasion.

Now to the question above we say that what we "care" about is whether we do "fairly represent the cause of Liberalism"; and we "do not care" what people think on that subject, except as what they think is deserved. If we have succeeded in "fairly representing" this cause, and people find that out for themselves, we are exceedingly glad; but if they fail to find it out, and misjudge us accordingly, our sorrow is very moderate. We have been misjudged and misunderstood too much not to have learned how to endure such calamities. By no means are we indifferent to "other people's feelings"; but, if the truth itself hurts them, that is no reason for toning down or shading off. The rarity of conscientious truth-telling comes mainly, we believe, from a tenderness for prejudices which is practical cruelty in the long run; and the wisest benevolence dictates to speak all truth that is needed in the clearest and most direct matter possible.

6. The "Demands of Liberalism" represent nobody's view but our own and that of those who may approve them. The "explanatory note" was omitted through the necessity of saving space, but was there so long that it can hardly be forgotten yet; its substance is still implied in the standing headings of the editorial pages.

Has THE INDEX ever published any "Demands of Free Religion"? Wait, at least, till it does, before holding it responsible to the Free Religious Association—of which it is not a member. The network of inferences above ingeniously woven is too loose to hold the bird; it flies through the meshes without grazing a feather.

7. We have patiently met Mr. James's points one by one, and at greater length than we could do again. In return, we now repeat the question which we put to him before, and to which he has made no answer whatever: "Is not the principle of the separation of Church and State the great bulwark of all our religious liberty?" If he replies in the affirmative, then we ask him to point out a single one of those Demands which is not absolutely, logically, and evidently required by that principle.—ED.]

THERE IS NOT a joyful boy or innocent girl, buoyant with fine purposes of duty, in all the street full of eager and rosy faces, but a cynic can chill and dishearten with a single word. Despondency comes readily enough to the most sanguine people. The cynic has only to follow the hint with his bitter confirmation, and they go home with heavier step and premature age. They will themselves quickly enough give the hint he wants to the cold wretch. Which of them has not failed to please where they most wished to please? or blundered where they were most ambitious of success? or found themselves awkward, or tedious, or incapable of study, thought, or heroism, and only hoped by good sense and fidelity to do what they could and pass unblamed? And this wicked malefactor makes their little hope less with satire and scepticism, and slackens the springs of endeavor. Yes, this is easy; but to help the young soul, add energy, inspire hopes, and blow the coals into a useful flame; to redeem defeat by new thought, by firm action,—that is not easy, that is the work of divine men.—R. W. Emerson.

BUTLER'S Analogy shook, instead of strengthening, the religious faith of Pitt.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.

13	25	8
26	51	6
52		5

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON, has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution", by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. WASSON, T. W. HIGGINSON, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents; singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
ATERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition, 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	1.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of A. A. Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse, The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance, The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image, The Marble Faun, The English Note-Books, The American Note-Books, The French and Italian Note-Books, Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1836 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp, C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.
The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON
English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

ABOUT CHEAP RATES WESTWARD.—We have frequent inquiries about the cheapest rates, best route, &c., to Western points. We cannot undertake to answer such questions in detail. It is evident that many of our readers are seeking new homes and fortunes in the West, and for complete and reliable detailed information about that country—from Missouri to Oregon and California inclusive—we do not hesitate to commend them to Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent of the Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis. Mr. Ford has thousands of pamphlets, circulars, time-tables, maps, rate-sheets, etc., for free distribution, and answers all questions, promptly and cheerfully, without charge.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,
NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,
Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS AND AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.
Complete files for inspection of advertisers.
Lists sent upon application.
Send for estimates.

TWO NEW BOOKS.
MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dame Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

MUSIC BOOKS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Father Kemp's Old Folk's Concert Tunes. 40 cts.

CONTINENTAL HARMONY. $1.50.

Ye Olde Folkes Note Bookes are printed at our Shoppe, from whence we send them, Post-Paid, on ye receipt of ye retail price. Olde and Yunge love ye Ancient tunes.

POPULAR CANTATAS,
and more popular every season, are ESTHER, THE BEAUTIFUL QUEEN [50 cts.]; DANIEL [50 cts.]; BELSHAZZAR'S FEAST [50 cts.]; FLOWER QUEEN [75 cts.]; PICNIC [1.00]; HAYMAKERS [1.00]; CULPERT FAY [1.00]; MUSICAL ENTHUSIAST [50 cts.]; WINTER EVENING ENTERTAINMENT [1.00]. May be given with or without costumes.

FINE COLLECTIONS OF EASY MUSIC.
Winner's Band of Four. $1.00.
Musical Garland. Violin, Piano accompaniment. $2.50.
Musical Flowers. Flute, Piano accompaniment. $2.50.
Violin Amusements. $1.50.
Flute Bouquet. $1.50.

Sold by all the principal music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

CHARLES SUMNER.
A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

KANSAS, COLORADO, NEBRASKA, CALIFORNIA.—The Spring tide of travel Westward has fairly set in. Thousands are migrating to Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and especially California. To such, as a cheap and desirable route to destination, we commend the Missouri Pacific Through Line, by way of St. Louis and Kansas City. Call upon or address Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis, who will cheerfully furnish you correct and complete information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, time-tables, etc., for gratuitous distribution.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.
Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.
By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of TWO DOLLARS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS OF—
THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

10 CENTS
Will make you an ANNUAL SUBSCRIBER TO FOUR NUMBERS OF

EHRICH'S QUARTERLY,
containing prices, descriptions, and fashion-plates of Ladies' and Children's Suits, Ladies' Underwear, Infants' Wear, Real Laces and Dress Trimmings, Hats, Feathers, Flowers, Ribbons, etc., etc., together with the choicest selections of Literature, Wit, and Wisdom.

Our Quarterly will place within your reach the best goods at the lowest prices. Only 10 cents for a year's subscription. First issue now ready. Subscribe at once.

EHRICH & CO.,
287 and 289 EIGHTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.
Please state in what paper you saw this advertisement.

PREMIUM CHESTER WHITE
PIGS.—$15 each, $28 a pair. Chester County MAMMOTH CORN, and Imported BELGIAN OATS. 4 lbs. by mail, $1; peck, $2; one-half bushel, $3; Circulars and Sample Packages of Seeds free for two stamps. Address N. P. BOYER, Parkersburg Chester Co., Penn.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION OF MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU GOING WEST? If so, and you desire full and reliable information as to the cheapest and best route to Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, California, Oregon, or any of the Western States or Territories, we recommend that you call upon or address E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo., who will cheerfully answer all questions, and furnish you with maps, pamphlets, time-tables, rates, etc., free of charge. Now is the season of low rates, and applications should be made at once.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.
Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.
"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.
FOSTER & Co., Publishers, P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

THE ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,
256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES
CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.
Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.
A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION.
By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!
A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FREE DISCUSSION
is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS AT BELFAST.

Seventh Edition,
Containing the First and Second Prefaces replying to his Critics, an extract from the Manchester Lecture, and the paper on "Scientific Materialism" in full. 120 pages. Price 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF MORSE'S NEW BUST OF THEODORE PARKER.

Cabinet size. Price 50 cents.
Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.
Also for sale at the office of THE INDEX.

REASONS FOR USING THE EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.
G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,
—AND—
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed very loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.
Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full gilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 1875.

WHOLE No. 279.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, undilutingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

RHODE ISLAND has $4,117,200 of exempted church property.

THERE IS an unusual increase of dementia among the inmates of the Liverpool work-house, attributed to religious excitement. For particulars apply to Moody and Sankey.

DR. KENEALY lost his motion for a Royal Commission of Inquiry on the Tichborne case by a vote of 433 to 1, in the House of Commons. He and George Francis Train are kindred spirits.

THE Moral Education Association will hold a meeting at 3 Tremont Place on Friday, May 7, at 3 P. M. Paper by Mrs. K. T. Woods. Subject: "Mending the World." All cordially invited.

IT IS a matter for regret, on the part of all who admired the great philanthropy of Mr. James Lick last summer, that he should now attempt to revoke his trust-deed. Probably this cannot be done; and the attempt will only destroy the beauty of his act.

REV. MR. GOOSLEY, of South Carolina, has been voted $300 by the House of Representatives in that State for praying "with credit to himself and satisfaction to this House." That is what used to be paid for a substitute by a single conscript in the war. The House got their substitute cheap.

"SPEECHES and songs in honor of the minute-men of a hundred years ago are very well in their way. But a dozen living minute-men in each State would be of more value than a catacomb of the dead bones of heroes." So says the New York Tribune of the Concord and Lexington Centennials. What religious radicalism wants just now is a "dozen living minute-men." They would find plenty of work to occupy their leisure with.

MR. JOHN FRANCIS SMITH, of Providence, R. I., who has contributed several notable articles to these columns, announces that he is prepared to lecture to "Free Religious and Free Thought Audiences" on "The Scientific Spirit" and "Labor Problems, and How to Solve Them." The former lecture "attempts to show (1) what the scientific spirit is not, (2) the causes of its absence, (3) what it is, and (4) that there can be no 'salvation' without it." The other "presents specific methods for insuring a more equitable distribution of the products of industry." We entertain no doubt that these lectures will prove able, instructive, and interesting.

MR. HOLYOAKE, in his "London Letter" of this week, considers Messrs. Moody and Sankey as unpromising representatives of American culture; and few of our readers will question his judgment. Mr. Varley, however, who is attempting to evangelize the Bostonians, misrepresents English culture with equally distinguished success. He told the story of King Uziah in Tremont Temple last week, who was smitten with leprosy in the forehead for "invading the priest's office," and declared that "the blight of leprosy upon the forehead indicated the effect of unbelief upon the intellects of young men." As Naaman was cured of his leprosy by bathing in Jordan, we expect that there will be a general rush this summer for the Charles River. What a blessing is the institution of free public baths!

CAN it be considered honorable, or even honest, journalism to clip out extracts from the sermons of distinguished preachers, write their names at the end with a recent date, and insert them in a paper as original contributions to its columns? Yet this is habitually done by the Golden Age, which also habitually omits to give credit for what it borrows. This may be good "Christianity," for which the Golden Age is a zealous pleader; but it would be very poor "Free Religion." It is a cause for wonder how a paper conducted on such principles could have ventured to publish the article on "Fraudulent Fame," which appeared in the Golden Age of March 27, and which we copy elsewhere just as it appeared, signature and all, without asking whether "Conscience Plain-speech" really wrote it for the Golden Age.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Pall Mall Gazette says of Moody and Sankey's revival in Great Britain: "I am willing to believe that this movement may produce some not altogether unwholesome effect among a very low class—if it reach them; that class possibly whose fixed tenacity of certain public institutions may perhaps interfere to some extent with their attendance upon Messrs. Moody and Sankey's ministrations. But even with that class the effect would be purchased at a certain cost to that self-respect which humanitarians inculcate. If reformation by the lash is undesirable, it is difficult to understand how reformation brought about by the dread of even more unpleasant bodily consequences can be quite healthy. The operation of the fear must be much the same in both cases, and if the whipping-post at Newgate is more directly present to the imagination of Bill Sykes than the fires of hell, any trifling defect in distance may well be compensated by difference of penalty."

MR. ELIZUR WRIGHT has succeeded in getting his new "Massachusetts Family Bank" incorporated, for the purpose of insuring lives under policies stipulating cash surrender values and of receiving and investing savings. The capital stock is fixed at half a million dollars, the shares at fifty dollars each, and the maximum annual interest at eight per cent. The special peculiarity of this bank is to furnish new facilities and inducements to poor men to insure their lives for the sake of their families, the deposits or such portions as are needed to pay the premiums being transferred annually from the savings bank account to the life insurance account. Of course any surplus is to be retained to the credit of the depositor. This plan seems to us to be one of the most genuinely useful and philanthropic that could be devised; for whatever induces or aids the poor to save their earnings tends to foster that thrift which is their supreme benefactor. The incorporators are Elizur Wright, William Claflin, F. W. Bird, Samuel E. Sewall, John Botume, Jr., and W. L. Burt. The project is one of the best "Boston notions" yet started, and will probably become popular all over the country.

THE New England Methodist Conference at Springfield, Mass., which was attended by nearly two hundred clergymen, and concluded its sessions on April 14, took action on two important public questions. With reference to church taxation, it adopted the following resolutions, which were to be forwarded to the Governor and the Taxation Commission:—

Resolved, That in a Commonwealth like Massachusetts, where the establishment and maintenance of churches, hospitals, and the higher institutions of learning are chiefly left to the spontaneous liberality of public-spirited citizens, a statute exempting from taxation the property used and occupied for religious, charitable, and educational purposes by corporations created by the State is right in principle and beneficial in its influence.

That, under existing circumstances in Massachusetts, the effect of a repeal of the exemption and an enforcement of taxation would be simply to lighten the just public burdens of the illiberal at the expense of the more generous and public-spirited; in other words, would be to change legislation which is directly promotive of beneficent public spirit for legislation repressive of it.

With reference to the Bible in the schools, the following was reported by the Committee on the Bible Cause:—

Resolved, That the reading of the Bible in our public schools, when enforced by legal sanction, is an obligation inconsistent with our republican form of government, the principles of our Protestant religion, and the teachings of the Bible itself.

What a muddle the Methodist mind must be in, to favor all these resolutions at the same time!

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Buddhism Notwithstanding:

AN ATTEMPT TO INTERPRET BUDDHA FROM A BUDDHIST STANDPOINT.

AN ESSAY READ TO THE CHANNING CLUB, NORTHAMPTON, MASS., APRIL 8, 1875.

BY DYER D. LUM.

"My law is a law of grace for all," said Gôtama Buddha twenty-four centuries ago; and this law, then first made known to suffering humanity, has led countless millions to rise superior to the pains of existence, and to attain that rest for which we are ever aspiring—Nirwâna. This law knows no race, no sex; for it is the language of our higher nature, and commands itself to the artisan and the laborer in every land, as well as to the thinker and the seer; and has received the grateful homage of Aryan, Turanian, and Mongolian races. Believers in the efficacy of this law are flocking to your land, where they find its central truths already widely spread and adopted, and awaiting only recognition as such, offering a bountiful harvest to the missionaries who will yet spread a knowledge of them in the name of their great Expounder.

Professor Max Müller says: "What our great poet once said almost prophetically of languages may also be said of religions—'He who knows only one, knows none.'" But how are religions to be studied? Certainly not in the mere examination of their ceremonial rites and forms of worship, nor in a critical investigation of their doctrinal beliefs; these are but the outward coverings, the dry husks of religion, into the significance of which we can never penetrate, unless we understand the vital principle which they represent, and which animates and endears them to the hearts of their acceptors.

METHOD OF INQUIRY.

In endeavoring to set before you the vital principles of the religious system made known to the world by Gôtama, the hermit of the race of Sâkyas, I have a twofold object in view; to give you an outline of that religious philosophy as held by an intelligent Buddhist, and, in defending it as the true method of salvation, to set forth the reasons why I cannot accept even the "Liberal" form of Christianity which, you so earnestly insist, not only "touches Buddhism at all its good points, in all its truths, but to all this it adds—how much more!" supplementing its highest truths, you claim, with higher incentives to right-living and noble action.

The first Buddhist king, in the third century before Christ, had to remind the assembled priests at the great council which met to settle the Buddhist canon that: "What had been said by Buddha, that alone was well said"; and it is still more necessary to-day to recall our attention from the traditions which ecclesiasticism has collected about the person of the great Teacher, and already to discern the central truths which characterized his teachings. That we can, in a measure, distinguish between Buddhism and the personal teachings of its founder, as well as between Christianity and the doctrines taught by Christ, is now acknowledged by able Oriental scholars.

Niebuhr has said that, "Unless a boldness of divination, liable as it is to abuse, be permitted, all researches into the earlier history of nations must be abandoned." How much more important is it, where the origin of a religious system is concerned, skillfully to discriminate between actual occurrences on the one hand, and the artificial setting on the other, in which loving but credulous minds have preserved them! Such investigations, however, will altogether fail of their purpose, if coldly conducted in a purely critical manner. While historical research should certainly be conducted with unimpassioned zeal, yet, to be earnest and effective, the heart must glow with sympathy towards the subject under investigation. To understand Buddha, we must bring to our task a mind fully in sympathy with his central ideas; within our breasts must glow the same sacred flame which, kindled on the altar of his soul, led him to that life of self-sacrificing devotion which stands out alone and unique in the world's history; we must be capable of grasping the lofty ideal that filled his mind, and actuated him in his life work. Having once firmly grasped these central principles, the words of the Teacher become luminous with new meanings; the ideas of the speaker being known, we are enabled to look through the words, as it were, and detect the very thought they were designed to express.

Whilst this "method of loving sympathy" may often enable us to read between the lines, and more fully set forth the cardinal ideas of the Teacher, we should carefully guard ourselves from the fatal error of constructing an ideal character into whose sentences we may interpolate the conceptions of a later and more advanced age, or the mistaken notion that we can draw a sharp line of demarcation between the established system of belief and the teachings of its founder, by regarding the organized church and its dogmas as something altogether independent of, and not derived from, the principles as first set forth.

We must not forget that the central ideas of the Teacher may carry with them in their logical development, not only what was not uttered by the speaker, but even what he would not have accepted; and yet to him must be accredited these results, however repugnant they would have been to his mind if foreseen. Legitimate deductions worked out in dogmas and creeds by succeeding generations, if palpably erroneous, are evidence not of apostasy from, but rather of weakness and error in, the cardinal teachings on which they were founded. In our attempt to compare the Buddhist and Christian religions, at the close of this essay, we shall find occasion to recall this truth. Sympathy, therefore, should never lead us to violate the rules of historical criticism, nor to attempt to supersede them. With these views, you will, I doubt not, heartily concur; and I hasten to present you with a brief sketch of Gôtama Buddha and his teachings.

WHO WAS BUDDHA?

I seek to draw your attention to the fundamental principles of Buddhism, to its underlying verities, the law made known by Buddha. Dismiss once for all from your minds the senseless charge of idolatry and "Joss-worship," and examine with me into its claim to present the only method of salvation of any practical value known to man. We must transport ourselves to Central India, where, in the sixth century before Christ, there lived a man whose exalted character and religious utterances have brought comfort and peace to millions of sorrowing hearts, and who to-day is nominally revered by nearly one-third of the inhabitants of the entire globe; whose magnificent protest against Brahminism, uttered in the name of religion, and in the interests of humanity, founded a system unique in the history of human thought, rendering his name as well as his thought imperishable wherever mental liberty is loved. Gôtama, or, as he is sometimes called, Sâkyas-Muni, the hermit of the race of Sâkyas,—the prince, philosopher, and saint, the founder of Buddhism, has never been surpassed as an original thinker; and his reflections on the secret of existence—man's destiny—still claim the careful attention of the thoughtful mind.

Brahminism, the religion of the Vedas, had already grown hoary with age, and in its logical development had succeeded in crushing out of the heart all feeling of the brotherhood of man by the growth of the caste-system. Starting from God, or spirit, as the first cause, there had logically resulted an ultra-spiritualism, or idealism, recognizing nothing but God: matter being but the illusive forms which spirit assumes. Brahminical speculations, therefore, centred entirely on Deity. God was all-in-all, absorption in the Divine the goal to which human destiny tended. Hence, religion consisted in the study of the Infinite, and the relations existing between the Infinite and the finite. From the very nature of their premise, the Brahmins necessarily lost sight of man. They soared in the clouds of metaphysical abstraction, and not only forgot, but ignored, the matter-of-fact duties of life. This being the logical result of their system, we are not surprised to find that the laws governing the organization of society received no humane amelioration from religion, but resulted in that rigorous and inflexible system of caste, never elsewhere so fully developed. Receiving no check from the Vedic religion, the influence of caste was supreme when Gôtama first sought to interpret the riddle of existence.

What humane impulse could originate in a system of religious belief which declared as fundamental dogmas such views as these:—

"God is concealed in all things." "He fills the all." "The Spirit is one and everlasting." "Divine, without form, is the Spirit, pervading the internal and external of beings; unborn, without breath, shining elevated above the highest and unalterable. Out of him comes the breath of life, the mind, and all senses." "The man who perceives in his own soul the supreme Soul present in all creatures acquires equanimity towards them all, and shall be absorbed at last in the highest essence, even that of the Almighty himself."

Educated in this school of religious speculation lived Gôtama, the son of an Indian king, a member of the highest caste, surrounded with all the luxuries parental love and kingly power could provide, and carefully nurtured in the sciences and manly accomplishments of his age. Married to a young and beautiful princess, formally recognized as heir-apparent, he passed his days to all appearance free from care in honor, luxury, and comfort; yet beneath a quiet exterior great thoughts were agitating his mind. His intercourse with the outward world was not of a character to bring him into contact with vice or misery; yet, through the royal splendor and behind the obsequious lackeys ever surrounding his chariot, penetrating eyes were searching for realities. On one memorable occasion he beheld a wretched and decrepit old man, supporting his tottering, trembling body with a crutch; and it is narrated that "he was deeply moved at the sad sight."

Again he witnessed what was equally strange to his eyes, a man rolling in agony from a loathsome disease, and a decomposing corpse; "and his heart grew more and more sorrowful." While pondering on these scenes, he beheld a mendicant monk whose calm and peaceful demeanor was in striking contrast with the hideous forms he had looked upon. The Siamese Life of Buddha relates that, "reflecting on what he saw and heard, he said to himself, 'No being that is born can escape age, sickness, and death; happiest by far is the lot of a monk.'" This was the only escape from the cares and anxieties of life known to the age. The Hindus were familiar with instances of the power of ascetic penances; but in Gôtama's case the motives to take ascetic vows were markedly different from the spirit of the time. The great problem filling his mind was human suffering, the sorrow incident to age, sickness, and death. Being inevitable, must we tearfully submit, or could we surmount the sorrow thus entailed upon us? Yet to take the final step, to assume the garb of a mendicant monk, would involve the sacrifice of family, wealth, and power,—all that he had been accustomed to hold dear. While this struggle was passing in his mind, his wife gave birth to a son; but even this new tie could not divert his thoughts from the consideration of the four motives to pious reflections described in the memorable scenes which had filled his mind with anguish,—that is, age, disease, death, and religious life.

While the palace was filled with rejoicing, and all had given themselves over to pleasure, Gôtama determined to devote himself to religion. Carrying this resolution into speedy execution, he forsook parents, family, rank, and luxury. Leaving a kindly message by promising to return to "wipe away the tears of my family with the most excellent of ketches—the teachings of the true law," Gôtama fled to distant regions to attempt to solve the problem which had rendered life in idleness and luxury unbearable. For six years, from his twenty-ninth to his thirty-fifth year, he practised asceticism in accordance with established usage. So severe were the austerities undergone that disciples followed him with pious reverence, happy to minister to his simple wants.

"THE WHEEL OF THE LAW."

After six years of vain endeavor, Buddha renounced the system of mortification, and sought to regain his health. His disciples forsook him, and again he was alone with his questions unanswered. Were they indeed unanswerable? Awakened from his fond dream of perfection through penance and bodily mortification, he still sought with undiminished purpose to solve the problem of life; and, starting from a different stand-point, he arrived at definite conclusions. These conclusions, the fundamental dogmas of Buddhism, have been formulated as the "Four Sublime Truths," and are as follows:—

- "1st. That sorrow ever attends existence.
- "2d. That the cause of sorrow lies in the passions, or desires.
- "3d. That cessation of sorrow can be procured by the extinction of desire.
- "4th. That desire can be extinguished by holiness (literally, by entry into the paths)."

The method by which this conquest of sorrow is achieved is called the "Eightfold Path," and consists of—

1. Accuracy in doctrine.
2. Accuracy in thought, ending all doubt.
3. Accuracy in speaking, or use of words.
4. Accuracy in works, or conduct.
5. Accuracy in life, free from sin and ambition.
6. Accuracy in application.
7. Accuracy in memory.
8. Accuracy in meditation.

In this "law," Gôtama beheld emancipation from the bonds of sorrow. He believed that he had penetrated to realities; illusion and doubt disappeared; and he became the Buddha, that is, the enlightened, the awakened, HE WHO KNOWS. Let us examine this "creed," and endeavor to view it, not as a mere schedule of doctrinal affirmations, but to discover the thought of which they were the expression; to find the spirit which fills them and which has awakened an answering response in so many sorrow-laden hearts.

The promulgation of this law was a protest against the whole system which Brahminical thought had instituted; for it proclaimed man to be the sole object of thought, human perfection to be the aim of religion. Mr. Hodgson, a long and careful observer, says: "The one infallible diagnostic of Buddhism is a belief in the infinite capacity of the human intellect." The language of Buddhist writers is: "Man is capable of enlarging his faculties to infinity." This was the central thought in Buddha's mind, and herein he took a radical departure from the Brahmanic system; for that, in affirming the metaphysical belief that the Infinite is all, had failed to realize the presence of the finite. Buddha, recognizing the finite as alone solvable, affirmed man as the sole object of thought. The first grand fact of existence he proclaimed to be sorrow; that is, discontent, unsatisfied aspirations. All existence is subject to change and decay. The laws of Nature are alone inflexible; to know these laws, and to place ourselves in unison with them, would lead to emancipation.

Buddha recognized two orders of existence, the phenomenal and its underlying reality, the material and what is termed the spiritual. How far could he penetrate toward their essence? The material he proclaimed to be illusory, impermanent; containing naught of permanency but the unknown force of which it is a manifestation. Man, being conditioned in finite existence, can know nothing of final causes, can form no conception of the underlying element of phenomenal existence. Huxley, in declaring that "every form is force visible," but restated the affirmation of Buddha that all existence was phenomenal. Matter is more illusory than a passing dream, ever shifting and changing. Nought is invariable in Nature but that which underlies all phenomena. That which perdures is eternal and immutable; and, while our knowledge of Nature is only of the phenomenal, it necessarily remains beyond the grasp of our faculties. Physical Nature, then, failing to reveal to us a knowledge of the real, shall we look for it in mind?

This led to the query, What is mind? What is that by which we realize the impermanency of material existence? Anticipating the results of modern research, he declared mind to be another form of manifestation of force. The substratum, or underlying element, of mind, is force; mental action but its phenomenal manifestation in finite existence. Mind cannot create ideas; it can merely combine, or transpose simple ideas, thereby forming complex conceptions. We deceive ourselves in fancying that we have an intuitive perception of outlying goodness, love, or virtue. "As far as language is concerned," says Max Müller, "an abstract word is nothing but an adjective raised into a substantive; but, in thought, the conception of a quality as a subject is a matter of extreme difficulty, and in strict logical parlance impossible." Buddha thoroughly analyzed the mental faculties, and saw that in none was the permanent realizable. He saw, to quote in the words of modern text-books, that "consciousness is a succession of changes combined and arranged in special ways." The real self, however, he declared to be something deeper and fuller than consciousness or personality; but in its essence, like the ground-work of material existence, it must remain unknown. Matter and mind, instead of being two opposite modes of existence, are in reality but two modes of manifestation of force. Mental action, like material existence, is phenomenal. Buddha fully realized the fact that consciousness is persistent; that mind, while giving out its own phenomena to all appearance, and consisting in successive states, perdures through all. There is something underlying phenomena, and a ground for it; a condition for mental action, not however in any sense peculiar to mind in man alone, but also in animal forms.

But, having reached this conclusion, had he authority for asserting that the aggregate of mental functions known as mind is an immortal entity? This power within and underlying all mental phenomena eludes our finite vision, and escapes the closest scrutiny. We behold but the continent of the power, and witness but its phenomenal effect. Attempting to define or to name it, and we annex it to the phenomenal. But does not this which perdures, while silent as to its essence and its origin, become pregnant with meaning when questioned as to its future? "Nothing can extend beyond its limits," is a trite axiom; but what are the limits to the mind's craving?

The mind is compelled by its own nature to be ever struggling, aspiring, striving for a higher condition, yet always conscious of its chains and limitations. How can sorrow be overcome, this ungratified craving be realized, while the mind remains subject to change and limitation? Sorrow, or this insatiable yearning of the mind, we recognize as an inheritance of existence; and escape from it, therefore, must be deliverance from the bonds of existence. What do the intuitions of the mind indicate? What is the lesson taught by the aspirations of the soul,—if we may so designate the unknown element? To the Brahmin this inherent discontent was evidence of our deficiency, the soul thereby proclaiming its divine origin in its efforts to be freed from a debasing connection. To the Christian, these aspirations, this ever-repeated struggle and ceaseless longings, are the glorious token of immortality, and the promise of an ever-upward flight in an endless duration, ever receiving and ever craving additional knowledge. But to Buddha aspiration did not stand out alone and unique in the universe, a promise never to be fulfilled, but always to be infinitely short of realization; a goad to be forever driving us on and on through the vistas of eternity toward illusory allurements of rest, peace, and knowledge.

These aspirations toward the Infinite, we are constantly assured by Christian divines, are peculiar to man. We are often reminded that it is a well-understood law of Nature that, for every form possessing life, there are natural provisions for the complete expression of that life; that its highest possible expression will be attained. In obedience to this law, the farmer sows his seed, believing that its life will find full expression and reach its ultimate in the ripened grain. Of all the beasts of the field we find none where the highest requirements of their being are not complied with. We are assured that they remain the same as in the past; that they come and go, generation after generation, and that this sameness, this perpetual level, results from the fact that their highest aspirations are met, that the requirements of their being are fulfilled; but that in man alone have those deep aspirations overreached all earthly possibilities, and overleaped all earthly forms; and deduce from this they the conclusion that we are immortal. Poetically expressed:—

"Are there not aspirations in each heart
After a better, brighter world than this?
Longings for beings nobler in each part,
Things more exalted, steeped in deeper bliss?
Who gave us this? What are they? Soul, in thee
The bud is budding now for immortality!"

Such is the argument; but does an endless conscious existence meet the requirement? Our inherent aspirations are not for "worlds," or "beings," or "things," but for that of which we know not; and we have no right thus to confuse these aspirations with our imperfect and comparative definitions of them. Are they to receive complete expression in an infinite prolongation of the struggle? Buddha saw in the soul no will-o'-the-wisp, no mere ignis fatuus. The soul, or that algebraic X, the unknown factor expressing the basis of mind, was no huge interrogation point, still more to complicate the riddle of existence. He saw in these longings but another form of sorrow. Struggle, discontent, is the soul's inheritance; rest, peace, knowledge, is the soul's requirement, the true necessity of its nature. Necessarily antagonistic, we never see them harmoniously blended. How, then, obtain relief? Only by the attainment of that which the soul ever craves, the realization of its aspirations,—the infinite perfectibility of man." To attain this, recognized by each mind as its highest ambition, even aspiration must be overcome. But aspiration is the result of limitation, and limitation is the definition of conscious existence. To offer us an endless personality in immortal existence, however soothing and soporific to some minds the belief may be, does not meet the requirements of the case; as an answer to the problem it is merely an evasion, for it leaves the soul's requirements unfulfilled. To meet the demand is to extinguish aspiration. If the affirmations of the soul are to be trusted, the demand must be met. Buddha, with firm reliance on "these glorious instincts," declared that it would be met, that it was an imperative necessity from which there was no escape; consequently involving freedom from the circle of finite existence, that the "wheel" of personal existence must be broken.

While other races have feared death, the down-trodden people of the East feared life. To live was want, privation, struggle. Reflection convinced Buddha that this was the expression of mental life, independent of all circumstances. To live was unsatisfied desire, and denial of the soul's aspiration. To live was to confine the mind, to limit its powers. To live, though it were in a fabled Paradise under the approving smile of a God, would still be subjection to sorrow—the grand fact and inherent curse of existence.

The road to deliverance was not through outward observances or sacrificial offerings, but by obeying the laws hedging in the soul. Knowledge alone was the gate to rest, to complete emancipation, for the assertion of the poet that—is not only baseless, but a gross blasphemy. To understand himself, the laws of his being in order to conform therewith, the nature of existence, and the true road to soul-rest—these were the chief objects of human thought. But how attained? How bring the demands of our nature in consonance with the laws of the universe, that, by obedience to and harmony with these methods or laws of Nature, the soul might attain its goal?

"Knowledge is but sorrow's spy"—

Obviously by moral training, a pure life, the subjection of the passions by asserting and maintaining the authority of the real over the transient. As ignorance is the chief cause of sorrow, so in knowledge we find its cure; for knowledge is not a mere intellectual process, but moral culture, the perfection of our whole nature.

"KARMA."

Buddha taught that every one's merit and demerit, called by Buddhists "Karma," is the shaper of his destiny. Of soul we know nothing; to Buddhists it is an empty word devoid of meaning; yet, whatever it may be, we may confidently assert that moral worth alone can benefit it. Karma is the law of consequences, every act carrying with it its own compensation, entailing results from which there is no escape. In the metaphysical system of modern Buddhism the doctrine of transmigration is based on Karma. Buddha is traditionally reported to have said: "Karma is the most essential property of all beings; it is inherited from previous births, it is the cause of all good and evil, and the reason why some are mean and some exalted when they come into the world. It is like the shadow which always accompanies the body."

In this, however, we behold a very familiar truth; modern science is equally explicit in affirming the same idea. Past Karma, premerit, heredity, is the mighty power that antecedently moulds our characters, "and which," to use the language of a living scientist, "not only assigns to individuals their position in the surrounding world, but also helps them to attain it." Not, however, as fate, but in strict accordance with the moral responsibility of man. While by our own acts we may largely direct the development of our minds, it still remains true that what we are on entering life is the result of Karma inherited from the past.

As science, in the discovery of the law of selection, "has finally broken with the notion of design, which hitherto invested the organic world with perfection externally bestowed, and even in the province of intelligence and morality, where it is said with Schiller,

"So grows the Man as grows his greater aims," has secured admittance for the uniform method of natural science," so in Buddhism we find the same general conclusion reached by an opposite method. In the opening verses of the Dhammapada, containing the moral precepts of Buddha, it is said:—

"All that we are is the result of what we have thought; it is founded on our thoughts. If a man speaks or acts with an evil thought, pain follows him, as the wheel follows the foot of him who draws the carriage."

"All that we are is the result of what we have thought; it is founded on our thoughts. If a man speaks or acts with a pure thought, happiness follows him, like a shadow that never leaves him."

Ignoring final causes as beyond our ken, recognizing with modern science the limits of thought to lie in the "impossibility of comprehending the nature of matter and force," we find in Karma the supreme controller of destiny, no less obvious in the realm of moral relations than in the physical world. Moral power exists in will alone; but here we must not be misled into fancying that the word "will," the several processes of which we may analyze, affords us in its totality any explanation of the incomprehensible. Thought, under the guidance of will, not only can shape our destiny, but tell with untold effect upon succeeding generations. Merit and demerit, or Karma, in Buddhist thought, is of far wider application than to human actions alone; it pervades Nature, of which we are a part. In Karma, therefore, we recognize the supreme controlling power of the universe, giving us a moral government of the world, without a personal governor. This is not unintelligible to occidental forms of thought, for we find essentially the same idea in the words of the German Fichte: "The arrangement of moral sentiments and relations, that is, the moral order of the universe, is God."

But its value to us does not lie in its supposed definition of the moral order of the universe, but in its incentives to moral action. While its metaphysical side may be most justly expressed in the above words of Fichte, its practical worth is clearly given in these words of Emerson:—

"Fear not, then, thou child infirm,
There's no god dare wrong a worm.
Laurel crowns cleave to deserts,
And power to him who power exerts."

We cannot move but by the laws of our nature. The moral laws are channels of force as definable as physical laws, and our "innate consciousness of freedom" enables us to move with them, lest we be crushed in resisting them. This is the extent of our consciousness of freedom; it has no other. In a moral sense, "all that we are is the result of what we have thought," the result of Karma. From this there is but one escape—the emancipation attained only in "Nirwana."

"NIRWANA."

What is emancipation? Is it mere extinction, annihilation? Buddha termed the goal Nirwana. In the Buddhist Scriptures we find Nirwana characterized as follows:—

"The state that is peaceful, free from body, from passion, and from fear, where birth or death is not,—that is Nirwana." "Nirwana puts an end to coming and going, and there is no other happiness." "It is a calm wherein no wind blows." "There is no difference in Nirwana." "It is the annihilation of all the principles of existence." "Nirwana is the completion and opposite shore of existence, free from decay, tranquil, knowing no restraint, and of great blessedness." "Nirwana is unmixed satisfaction, entirely free from sorrow." "Nirwana, like space, is causeless, does not live nor die, and has no locality. It is the abode of those liberated from existence." "The wind cannot be squeezed in the hand, nor can its color be told. Yet the wind is. Even so Nirwana is, but its properties cannot be told." "Nirwana is not, except to the being who attains it."

Etymologically, Nirwana is free from wana, desire or thought. The Brahmins had shown the unreality of matter, and declared all things illusion and vanity, and found reality alone in spirit, Brahma. Buddha accepted the argument, and denied the reality of both, accepting the unreality of matter as the only existence. "NOTHING IS!" Emancipation, though consisting in the attainment of the endless void, is not annihilation. Not, as Baur states, "that all may attain unity with the original empty space, so as to unpeople the worlds," but the extinction of the transient, the liberation of the real, the complete antithesis of material existence. Nothing, that is no thing; the everlasting real, before which our imperfect tongues are speechless. It is no answer to call the future life spiritual, for spiritual is but an empty word, destitute of meaning. Notwithstanding all the speculations of Christian theologians carried on through the centuries, speculations conducted under "the glorious light of Christian revelation," the life to come remains to finite minds—nothing. What grander philosophical truth was ever uttered than that saying of Buddha: "To those who know the concatenation of causes and effects, there is neither being nor nothing."

We must ever bear in mind that Buddha's doctrine consisted of affirmations, not denials. We nowhere find him denying the multitudinous future worlds asserted by the Brahmins; he contented himself with asserting the inherent requirements of the soul. With his eye firmly fixed on its goal, all speculations on intermediate conditions were of no importance and unworthy of serious thought. Is it not true that aspiration is toward freedom, freedom from limitations hampering growth and entailing sorrow—toward the subjection of transient desires to the infinite realities of soul-life by obedience to the laws of the universe? Discontent comes through disobedience and ignorance; obedience to and harmony with law must bring rest. Emerson has said: "The soul knows only the soul; the rest of events is only the flowing robe in which all is clothed." To attain Nirwāna is but to give freedom to the soul, to remove the restrictions and limitations of phenomenal environments,—annihilation only of the "flowing robe," and the absolute liberation of the real and enduring. Life, past, present, and to come, involves personality, and personality is consciousness of limitation. We cannot even say that Nirwāna is "impersonal existence," for these words are mutually contradictory. Pain, suffering, agony, being inseparable from personality, we read in our own natures the glorious promise that even repentance for the past and aspirations for the future will be surmounted, and absolute rest, the soul's magnet, Nirwāna, be attained.

"The soul's deep longing for sublimer truth;
Its thirst for knowledge of itself beyond
The narrow fact of being; the desire
To grasp the infinite,"— is not "for man's illusion given," but is in itself a pledge of infinite possibilities. We have, then, every reason to gird up our loins in the warfare of life, and seek to aid the soul's aspiration for truth and virtue, confident that the soul within will respond to the soul without, and rest will be attained. Rest! Not in "the absorption of a drop into the sea, but the dilatation of a drop to the sea; not in submission to Fate, but in conquering Fate, scaling the throne of the Infinite, content with nought less than absolute sovereignty.

"Tossed on the shoreless sea of life,
Where ceaseless roll the waves of strife,
The wearied eye discerns no land;
Yet held by Buddha's four-fold way,
We calmly watch the billows play,
Nor craven seek a helping hand.

"No more we plead with tearful eyes
Miraculous aid from brazen skies,
Within us lie far higher powers;
Though demons cursed and gods divine
Against us all their arts combine,
We heed them not—the victory's ours.

"Let weaklings bend the knee and fall
Prostrate in worship to the All;
The human mind, self-centred, free,
Must conquer e'en the Infinite
And o'er it claim a victor's right,
Then fade into eternity."

[TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

MORE OF THE "MAIN BUSINESS."

MY DEAR MR. EDITOR:—

I am loath, for several reasons, to continue a discussion that, like so many, in THE INDEX and out of it, appears from the first to be hopeless, by reason of diverse understandings of arguments and readings wide of the intention, on both sides. Yet, since you so strongly affirm the importance of the question which has now been raised, perhaps in a more definite form than hitherto, I venture, without the least anxiety as to the result of the argument for its own sake, to send you a second letter for the sake of what I believe to be a view worthy of clear and earnest statement. Would that those writers who are abundantly able to give it such statement might at present accept your challenge, now, as always, given in the name of Truth! Meanwhile, however it may fare with my own endeavors at some sort of expression of well-cherished opinions (well-cherished, but relinquishable enough on proper showing of reason), I confidently look to see the opinions themselves at length vindicated, alike by able peers and by the course of events.

I have often noted with admiration how rarely the editor of THE INDEX leaves in his writings any place assailable even by the keenest criticism. It is therefore not without some diffidence that I shall have to consider his present argument as vulnerable at several points, even to the most ordinary discernment.

Certain recent discussions in THE INDEX warn me by their lawless discursiveness to keep, if possible, close to the questions already raised; and I will therefore try to follow your order of numbering divisions.

Passing over the first point altogether, as being one that had better never have been brought forward at all, because such merely personal disputes, aside from their unpleasantness, tend to overslaugh the proper argument itself, I take up the second one.

2. Your second point refers mainly to objects and methods, the former of which, you say, not the latter, are your chief concern. But this discussion turns first upon the Liberal League, which I take to be a method of gaining objects, and simply object to as being neither feasible nor rational. As to objects, unlike you, I firmly believe the radicals of America have the right ones in view, however dimly, and are tolerably filled with the purpose to gain them. So far as THE INDEX is concerned, it has indeed attended to both objects and methods; but, in my judgment, your great emphasis has on the whole been laid upon the latter—which I think, too, is quite right, since methods must be had and emphasis is required to secure their adoption, while objects distinctly exist and emphasize themselves. The difference as to methods is not, to be sure, the only difference; but it is the special difference which appears in this discussion of the Liberal League. You seem to admit this where you speak of the Liberal League as a "mode."

As to the "main business of religious radicalism in this country," which I suppose is its chief object, you may say "it is to finish the task of separating Church and State." This is astonishing to me, who know how grand and comprehensive is your idea of religion; or rather it would be astonishing, were it anything but the latest of numerous illustrations of the inconsistency between your idea of religion and of the work to be done in its name—the one broad and profound, the other by contrast narrow and superficial. If the radicalism stops anything short of the religion of Americans, it may as well be dropped at once. I should say that that which you call the main business is only one of the incidental and perplexing businesses which, always standing in the way of the main business, is never so much an obstacle as when put in place of this. The main business is something larger, more humane, more welcome and delightful than that! In truth, this question of main business is well called up, especially if we are to be made to think, unless we are very careful, that it consists in merely razing and carting away some old Puritan ruin, and not in planting the garden of Human Character. If the ancient ruin cumbers the ground, as it certainly does a large tract of it, it must of course be moved out of the way; the planting must be done at any rate. But, if we cannot yet come at the ruin over the intervening ground of rocks and wilderness, but must clear this first, then really it is easy to believe that faithful hands may be busy anywhere, working in the main business of making a well-planted garden of this country and this world.

I admit that what you call the main business will not keep itself in full view of Liberals as such, simply because to most of them it is nothing but an incidental and altogether subordinate business, which ought no more to be put for the other than the particular or the individual should be put for the universal.

It may be said that whatever stands in the way of a man, and keeps him from putting his hand to the task, is the thing that requires to be got out of the way, even though for the time being the general work must stop. Thus it may be said, "This disfranchising of a man here and there prevents him from casting his vote, and thereby restrains him from taking any part in the main business at all." If religion depended on the mere matter of voting, or on the exercise of any civil function, then this objection would have some weight; but since it does not so depend, it is clear that the disfranchised person may still be very religious, and a very efficient worker in the cause of universal religion. To say that the main business of religious radicalism is to remove political and sectarian abuses is no more true than to say that the main business of navigation is to remove dangerous rocks from the ocean, because now and then a vessel founders on them. In this case navigation itself is the main business; getting rid of rocks an incidental business, to get done as it can, while the other goes forward at all risks, and in spite of all hindrances. And the main business of religious radicalism is the furtherance of religion; this must be done at any rate,—can and may be done always and everywhere. Other things must get done if possible. And if only radicalism attends to this, its real work, it can afford to take with "sang-froid" "kicks and cuffs" from whatever quarter. "They deride thee, oh Diogenes!" "But I am not derided!" Plutarch tells us that, "when a hectoring and debauched young man rudely kicked Socrates, so that those in his company, being sorely offended, were ready to run after him and call him to account for it, 'What,' said he to them, 'if an ass had kicked me, would you think it handsomely done to kick him again?'"

The main business is not to answer "kicks and cuffs," but to work on with steady patience to diffuse a sort of character and manners which will themselves at last put such behavior out of fashion.

3. From what has been said it will appear that I cannot answer your "triple question as a whole," but must answer it in three parts. To the first part, "Do you not see that it is your main business to put an end to all outrages, little or great, upon the rights of American citizens because of their religious opinions?" I answer, according to the foregoing statement: No, that is not the main business at all, but only an incidental business. To the second part, as to "carrying the Demands of Liberalism and the Religious Freedom Amendment in some form or other," I answer: Yes, on the whole, I am aiming, and will aim, for that, with something more. And to the third part, "you cannot carry these measures without doing the work of the Liberal League, whether you choose to do it under that name or not," I reply: No, it is not yet so clearly the work of the Liberal League. If the Liberal League does this work, well and good; but it is the work of a larger than the Liberal League, and ought not to be identified with the less, but with the greater; namely, true American citizenship.

4. In your paragraph numbered 4, you resolve my argument into the opinion that "thought will do it all, without the aid of concerted action." This is not what I mean, nor what I said. I spoke of thought as the great agency, which you, of course, agree that it is; but I also spoke of it as having its messengers and means, through whose "action" it is clear that I meant its ends must be served. Not, however, "concerted," in the sense of being done under a specific name and ruler of organization.

After saying so much of the inadequacy of thought alone, which I fully agree with, you appear, strangely enough, to concede the contrary, which you wrongly represent me as affirming, for you tell us that "the Liberal League means nothing but thought." That this is not your meaning, however, is apparent from your further definition of the League, which is also an admirable definition of the much larger body of American Liberals, working in their independent ways, every one according to his several ability and circumstances, for the great objects dear alike to you and them: "A body of thinkers applying their intelligence methodically to the work of enlightening thoughtlessness on questions of profoundest import, and bringing about results in liberal legislation just as fast as they can win over the people to liberal ideas;" "the most peaceable and justifiable of all agencies, relying on persuasion and argument, on practical work and moral appeal."

An admirable statement, I repeat, of the character and efforts of thousands who do not and never will countenance radical organization. Short of violence, and open resistance to bad laws, which nevertheless are laws, with soldiers behind them, why may not those in their unorganized capacity do as much as the best-regimented forces that can be mustered? They could not work much differently under organization, nor in any way more effectively, that I can see.

I know that you do not "counsel rant and rhodomontade," nor "fierce, bitter, inflammatory speech, or disorderly and riotous action"; but it does not follow, because you do not counsel these, that there would be no danger of their occurring after the adoption of the method you do advise. Some or all of them, I think, would be sure to ensue, as the consequence of aggressive organization for the objects set forth in the Demands of Liberalism, if not on the part of the Liberals, then on the side of their stern opponents. My "argument goes for nothing," unless it goes for the depreciation of this most likely result of Liberal Leagueism. Already you have given us in THE INDEX specimens enough from the Orthodox side, of what might fairly come under some of the above names. But those are only faint forest adornings of what would follow if your ideas of organization were to be fully carried out.

5. That "conspicuous cases of outrage on the rights of free thought" may "be of a specially liberalizing tendency," you admit is "in one sense true, though in another it is totally untrue." I was looking at it in the sense in which it is true. Nor do I see that the fact that an outrage "creates no powerful protest" is any proof that it does not do a far greater good than the creating of a protest. If it starts a question in Orthodox minds, that may be better than the loudest protest from liberal mouths. But, in fact, the most servicable protest is not always loud-voiced; sometimes not voiced at all.

That any real outrage ever was done without creating, if not a protest, something better than a protest, in the souls of genuinely earnest men and women, or even without stirring somewhat of nobler thought or feeling in the mournful mass too dull to be in earnest at all, I for one will not believe. If we too blindly and hopelessly judge mankind in this regard, we may already be in "the outrage business ourselves," without knowing it. Worse than the denial, by stupid bigotry, of any man's right to do the things of a man, is the denial or doubt, by intelligent liberalism, of humanity's tendency to own and fulfil the claims of humanity.

If "there are two kinds of radicalism, one content with thought alone, the other eager to apply thought to the rectification of wrongs," I am not acquainted with the first kind, but only with the second; which, in truth, I must be allowed to believe is the only kind in the world. At all events, if there is such another kind as you describe, I pay it no fealty.

As to the infliction of wrongs upon individuals, it appears to be an inevitable thing, always, with its inevitable and otherwise unprocurable uses. If we may quote Scripture here, "It must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!" Yea; woe for the present; blessing by-and-by, for offender and offended, both.

6. No doubt you are excusable for not perceiving the relevancy of the last part of my letter—which so little expected to be analyzed and numbered at all. The meaning I thought would be got out of it is simply this: The very Orthodox will protest against outrages upon the liberals, and at length right the wrong where it is done—unless the liberals, by a too impetuous onset, frighten them out of their half-conscious sense of justice, and drive them, through fear of the destruction of their cherished institutions, which they have a right to cherish, to fortify themselves with the injustice they were about to condemn, and which is not much cherished, nor very extensively or frequently employed by them at present. Orthodoxy at present is in a very hopeful way as to getting enlightened. A strong virtual alliance of ours is quietly at work in Orthodox harness, doing good service for freedom, even though it be as unconscious of the fruits of its doing as are most creatures that wear harness at all. Wise Liberalism will watch, will even wait for these results, as well as strive for those of its own peculiar kind. This is not quite "an argument for not saying a word against any but next-door evils," though it may serve as an argument against running away from next-door evils to antipodal ones. If we run with our engines at every cry of fire, we may sometime find, too late, that we and they were most of all needed at home just then. As for elsewhere, there are firemen and engines also there, as faithful and efficient as we.

Let us make the Orthodox our friends, and not our foes, if a little wisdom will do it without cost of principle. Then be sure they will prove stronger guardians of civil and religious liberty than we can be yet! I have faith in American citizenship, quite apart from a distinct body of radicals, which makes me entirely sanguine of gradual righting of wrongs and undoing of heavy burdens. To join in any Liberal-League method would seem to discredit, and might betray, this larger and serenier faith.

In conclusion, I come back with you, and would add my strong emphasis to yours, upon the question of "main business." It is upon this question that radicals are and will continue divided—let us hope not forever. You say, it is to complete the separation of Church and State. I say, it is to carry toward completion the work of religious progress, with its chief end in the improvement of human character. To this the separation of Church and State is indeed necessary and important; but it is nevertheless, as I have said, altogether incidental, and not chief at all.

This is a question worth dividing over. Well may radicals hesitate, or refuse outright, to head any call which summons them to no larger work than the giving of the finishing-stroke to an already dying institution, neither more nor less than an obsolete remnant of what once seemed, and perhaps really was, an outgrowth of human necessity. Before you can rally your forces—though it may not be soon—under any name, the foe will have breathed its last, the corpse will have been buried, past all resurrection, beneath the mountain strongholds of American liberty.

It is because the Liberal League means the carrying of a single minor point, or, at most, a group of minor points, and not the main business at all, that radicals generally refuse to join or countenance it. They cannot undertake the prosecution of so small a main business as that! They have a something to construct which is of more importance than the destruction of anything. As for the foe of religious radicalism, like the foe of Cromwell, it is a "hydra." It was not Cromwell's main business to bruise any particular head of that hydra, but only his incidental business. His main business was to establish the Commonwealth in England. This he did, fighting the hydra as he could, as Carlyle has shown us.

American Liberalism has also hydra-heads to bruise, not a few. It must bruise them as it can. But its main business is the establishment of a Commonwealth of character. Let it attend to this, even though a comrade now and then (instead of a general killing and loss of the cause) falls a victim to the poisonous fangs of the monster adversary.

J. H. C.

NORTH ANDOVER, Mass., April 20, 1875.

[Our independent article of this week will be taken as a general reply to the above.]

If we at all misrepresented Mr. C. in "The 'Main Business' of Radicalism," in THE INDEX of April 15, we are extremely sorry; but we are perplexed to see how this was the case. When we "resolved his argument into the opinion that 'Thought will do it all, without the aid of concerted action,'" our chief emphasis, of course, was on the concerted (or organized) action. Mr. C. still opposes this, and thus justifies all we said. Further, in quoting what he calls our "further definition of the League," he misses all its point by not seeing that "body" meant organized body, and "methodically" meant by methods which are impossible without organization; the whole context shows this to have been our meaning. We intended, and intend, to declare that the public duties of radicalism cannot possibly be discharged without organization in some practical, efficient form.—ED.]

IS AN INFIDEL ENTITLED TO NATURALIZATION?

A correspondent in Philadelphia sends us the following statement from the Sunday Times of that city:

"Julius Nieland, residing at 410 North Tenth Street, made application to Judge Ludlow, in the Quarter Sessions yesterday, to be naturalized. His petition was filed up by a clerk in the court. F. Bulefeld made oath that Julius Nieland had been five years a resident of the United States, and one year of the State of Pennsylvania. Upon the parties appearing before Judge Ludlow, who was sitting in court room No. 2, he ascertained that the petitioner was an unbeliever, and endorsed upon the petition:—'Refused on account of being an infidel.'"

It thus appears that a foreigner, otherwise qualified to become a citizen of the United States, has been denied naturalization simply because he is an infidel. Let us inquire whether the action of the court was justifiable.

For this purpose we will assume the worst possible meaning for the word infidel, as used by the Judge in his endorsement upon the petition. The word has many significations, and we will give a number in order that the reader may select that which he esteems the most derogatory. According to Webster, an infidel is "one who is without faith or unfaithful; hence, a disbeliever; a free-thinker; especially, a heathen; a Mohammedan; one who disbelieves in Christ, or the divine origin and authority of Christianity." Now, is there any warrant of law for denying naturalization to a person merely because he happens to be included within one of these definitions?

The office of a State court in regard to naturalization is simply to apply the law of the United States upon the subject. Under the Federal Constitution, Congress is vested with power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. This power has been exercised by the enactment of the existing naturalization laws, which constitute the courts of record in the several States the principal machinery to do the work of admitting aliens to citizenship. The national government lays down the rule, and confides its enforcement to the State tribunals, which, however, are bound strictly to follow it. No State law relating to religion, therefore, can properly affect the action of a State court upon an application for naturalization; that application must be determined exclusively according to the laws of the United States.

These laws provide that the applicant for naturalization must satisfy the court that during the required term of residence in the country and State "he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same." The court can exact no other or additional mental qualifications on the part of the applicant. He who possesses these, and is otherwise qualified in respect to residence, cannot lawfully be denied naturalization. If, however, the fact of being an infidel necessarily imports that the applicant has not behaved as a man of good moral character during the period specified in the statute, then there is some excuse for the remarkable action of the Pennsylvania Court of Quarter Sessions over which Judge Ludlow now presides.

But it imports nothing of the kind. The natural and clear meaning of the language of the statute is opposed to such a construction. Indeed, people commonly speak of moral character in contradistinction to religious character, and it would be extending words far beyond their meaning to say that, when Congress prescribes good moral character, it means good religious character. Besides, it is not within the power of Congress to require any religious character whatever in the applicant, and an intention to do so therefore cannot be presumed. The Constitution of the United States contains two provisions concerning religion. The sixth article provides that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States; and the first amendment forbids Congress from making any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. To require an alien who applies for naturalization to show that he is not an infidel, is to require affirmative evidence of at least some religious faith on his part; and if the uniform naturalization law enacted by Congress did this, it would establish the necessity of some sort of religion, to that extent, and would, therefore, be in violation of the first amendment. According to Story, this amendment excludes from the national government all power to act upon the subject of religion. "Thus, the whole power over the subject of religion," says that eminent jurist, "is left exclusively to the State governments, to be acted upon according to their own sense of justice and the State Constitutions; and the Catholic and the Protestant, the Calvinist and the Arminian, the Jew and the Infidel, may sit down at the common table of the national councils without any inquisition into their faith or mode of worship."

Whatever may be the State laws of Pennsylvania with respect to religious liberty, a Pennsylvania court acting as a tribunal of naturalization can administer only the federal law, which in no wise relates to religion; and it cannot deny a right claimed under the naturalization statutes of the United States except on account of some disqualification recognized by federal law. Religious infidelity is not such a disqualification. The action of Judge Ludlow was based on the contrary assumption, and cannot be justified under the law.

We have considered the Nieland case in its legal bearings, merely; but it is also politically prophetic. It is a foretaste of the judicial intolerance and bigotry which may be expected when an express declaration of belief in the existence of the Deity shall have been incorporated in the Constitution of the United States.—New York Sun.

FRAUDULENT FAME.

There is too much of fame obtained by false pretences in these days. Certain women who wish to be thought highly of by the world, and have not the talent and culture to do their own work, have an easy way of obtaining short-lived fame. They hire addresses written for them which they deliver as their own before such audiences as they can entice to hear them. Or they get some obliging friend to write stories or articles which they palm off on unsuspecting editors as their own. Of course, women who do such things cultivate what is known as "cheek" in inverse ratio to the attention they have given to their brains; but so long as the "cheek" helps them to win notice and applause they are satisfied. Some recent instances of the kinds I have mentioned are quite enough to fill the heart of a true woman with regret for her sex. The ambition to dazzle and the determination to shine at any rate, no matter at whose expense, are too much for the conscience of some of our would-be ladies.

This is an age of shams and frauds. The desire to seem rather than to be eats the heart out of our morality, and makes society a great masquerade. Notoriety is mistaken for fame, and is sought at the expense of self-respect, decency, and truth. If any young woman who reads these few lines is tempted, for so-called fame, or position, or even for livelihood, to act the lie of giving as her own, to audience or to editor, that which another has written, let her reflect that she sullies the whiteness of her soul, and injures both herself and her sisters struggling in the race. For the injury is not confined to the person in fault, though that is serious enough, but honest, earnest workers are hurt thereby. If a woman of slight culture and little talent gets a cultivated graduate of Edinburgh University, or Yale, or Harvard, to write articles or lectures for her that are beyond the scope of other women, she injures by so much the chances of women who have not had extraordinary opportunity, or are not uncommonly gifted, but who are conscientiously doing their own work as best they can; she foists herself into the place of her superiors, and sometimes above them into places they are honestly and laboriously striving for, but find it impossible to reach. The beautiful young woman, with soft, fine voice, who thrills audiences with a lecture on themes only an exceptionally educated woman of extraordinary experience could discuss, much less comprehend, may succeed in exciting wonder and admiration in the hall; but what must be her mortification when she is asked to explain allusions and metaphors, and give her authorities for statements, when the brilliant performance is over? And more than one lecturer has drunk this bitter cup. It is wise to be safe, and safe to be true.

CONSCIENCE PLAINSPEECH.

NEW YORK, March 17, 1875.

—Golden Age, Mar. 27.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE FREE SPIRIT.

TWO MOODS.

I.

"The Truth shall bind," quoth he;
"No fetter else. Oh! free
My mind shall rove, and bring
Me home on buoyant wing
The boldest thought that flies:
Blest freedom else unknown.
All shorn the soul denies
All bounty thus to own."

II.

Then spake a voice in gentler strain,
Yet chanting still the high refrain:
"Nor rove will I to clip the wing
Of thoughts that fly and gaily sing.
Home, home I hie, all free to list
The silent song I ne'er resist."

S. H. MORSE.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 24.

Julius A. Zang, $2; J. R. Hains, $2; S. Case, $2; David H. Hester, $2; Jos. T. Weir, $2; E. Steenrod, 75 cents; Thomas Foster, 75 cents; J. Wilson, 50 cents; Joseph Knight, $3.20; Geo. McMurray, $3.26; Z. Sisson, $2; G. H. Parkhurst, $2; G. M. Newhall, $3.20; Alfred Rice, 25 cents; D. Thompson, $3; Wm. M. Cheever, $4.50; E. L. Crane, $3.20; N. Little, Jr., $5.70; Abram Rose, $5; Thos. Evans, $3; W. Ferguson, $1.80; Kelley W. Frazer, $5.20; Chas. Greaves, $1; E. Case, 20 cents; T. L. Brockton, $1.25; Thos. Davis, $10; Cash, 75 cents; J. D. Stranahan, 45 cents; A. W. Kelsey, 75 cents; O. B. Squier, 25 cents; Wm. Blynstone, 15 cents; J. M. Overbaugh, $2; N. E. News Co., $35.46; S. S. Hunting, 25 cents; Minot Gage, $2.50; Geo. W. Julian, $4; T. C. Evans, $1.50; A. M. Leslie, 25 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

RECEIVED.

Books.

PROBLEMS OF LIFE AND MIND. First Series. The Foundations of a Creed. Vol. II. By George Henry Lewes. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1875.
NATURE AND LIFE. Facts and Doctrines Relating to the Constitution of Matter, the New Dynamics, and the Philosophy of Nature. By Fernand Papillon. Translated from the Second French Edition by A. R. MacDonough. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
THE CHEMISTRY OF LIGHT AND PHOTOGRAPHY. By Dr. Hermann Vogel, Professor in the Royal Industrial Academy of Berlin. With 100 Illustrations. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
FUNGI: THEIR NATURE AND USES. By M. C. Cooke. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
OUTLINE OF THE EVOLUTION PHILOSOPHY. By Dr. M. E. Cazelles. Translated from the French by the Rev. O. B. Frothingham. With an Appendix, by E. L. Youmans, M.D. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
SCIENCE PRIMERS: Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer, F.R.S. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
BOYS AND GIRLS IN BIOLOGY; or, Simple Studies of the Lower Forms of Life. Based upon the latest lectures of Prof. T. H. Huxley. By Sarah Hackett Stevenson. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.
SEX IN INDUSTRY: A Plea for the Working-Girl. By Azel Ames, Jr., M.D. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1875.
THE WORLD'S SIXTEEN CRUCIFIED SAVIORS; or, Christianity before Christ. By Kersey Graves. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1875.
THE STREETER METHOD OF VOICE BUILDING. By Dr. Horace R. Streeter. Boston: 1875.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

SERMONS by O. B. Frothingham, at Lyric Hall, New York.—The Devout Life: Feb. 14, 1875.—The Dimensions of Life. SERMONS by the Rev. James C. Street, in Belfast, Ireland.—Science and Religion: Aug. 23, 1874.—Gratitude and Duty: Mar. 7, 1875.
SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, at St. George's Hall, London.—Theism the Religion for the Unlearned: Mar. 7, 1875.—The Bishops' Pastoral to the Clergy: Mar. 14.—Alienation between the Laity and the Clergy: Mar. 21.—The Gospel of Adversity: Mar. 28.
PUBLICATIONS of Thomas Scott, Esq., No. 11 The Terrace, Farquhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S. E.—On This and The Other World. By Francis W. Newman.—Positive Religion: its Basis and Characteristics. By the late Rev. James Cranbrook.—Consequences. By Moncure D. Conway.—Signs of the Times. April, 1875.
REPORT of the Joint Special Committee on the Subject of "Property Liable to and Exempt from Taxation." State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations. Providence: 1875.
AN OPEN LETTER to the Members of the Massachusetts Medical Society on the Nature of Disease. By Edward E. Denniston, M.D. Boston: A. Williams & Co. 1875.
BOSTON UNIVERSITY YEAR BOOK. Edited by the University Council. Vol. II. Boston: 20 Beacon St. 1875.
THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. April, 1875. Boston: L. C. Bowles. 1875.
THE SANITARIAN. May, 1875. New York: 234 Broadway.
THE HERALD OF HEALTH. May, 1875. New York: Wood & Holbrook.
THE WESTERN. April, 1875. St. Louis.
THE PENN MONTHLY. May, 1875. Philadelphia: 506 Walnut St.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 29, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), Editorial Contributors.

NOTICE.

The Fourth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held in Toledo, Ohio, at No. 35 Monroe Street, on Saturday, June 5, 1875, at 2 o'clock P. M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The eighth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston as follows:—

May 27th, 7½ P. M. Session in Horticultural Hall (Lower) for business and for free discussion on the objects and work of the Association.

May 28th. Two sessions in Beethoven Hall (Washington Street, near Boylston), at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M. for essays and addresses. Essay at the morning session, by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Forces in Religion."

Essay at the afternoon session, by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion."

Addresses will follow each essay, the speakers to be announced hereafter.

Friday evening, May 28th, there will be a social festival in Parker Memorial Hall, Berkeley Street, for brief speeches, music, refreshments, conversation, and for subscription to the funds of the Association.

It is hoped that as many of the members and friends of the Association as possible will be present at this annual meeting. Members who cannot be present are hereby reminded of the annual subscription fee, which it is desired they should send to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

ROBERTS BROTHERS have issued, in a very neat little book of 223 pages, Mr. William B. Weeden's studies on The Morality of Prohibitory Liquor Laws. He takes decided ground against such laws, and considers in successive chapters "Temperance and Abstinence," "The Working of Prohibition," "The Grounds of Prohibition," "Prohibition and Regulation," "Another System," and "Immoral Law-Making." All who are interested in this subject on either side ought to be acquainted with the views here so calmly yet forcibly presented.

THE APPLETONS have issued another volume of their valuable "International Scientific Series" in the Doctrine of Descent and Darwinism, by Prof. Oscar Schmidt, of Strasburg. It is marked with the explicitness—which might even be called bluntness—that distinguishes the Germans from the English in their treatment of the Darwinian theory. No doubt is left in the reader's mind that Prof. Schmidt believes in this theory; he extends it beyond Darwin; and his book is full of attraction and instruction for all who are not indisposed to learn the conclusions on which the radical German mind is fast settling down.

THREE volumes of D. Appleton & Co.'s new "Popular Science Library" have been already issued: Health, by Dr. Edward Smith, The Natural History of Man, by Prof. A. de Quatrefages, and The Science of Music, by Sedley Taylor, M. A. They are compact little works of the highest character on the subjects of which they treat, containing each nearly two hundred pages, and being admirably adapted for the use of the general public. P. S.—A fourth volume of this promising series is just received, the Outline of the Evolution Philosophy, by Dr. M. E. Cazzelles, of which Mr. Frothingham is the translator. The price of each volume is one dollar.

PUBLIC-SPIRITED RADICALISM.

The comprehensive object of all radicalism in religion is enlightened fidelity to the ideal.

The ideal is twofold, private and public. It concerns personal character and national character—duties as an individual and duties as a nation; and these are indissolubly connected. On the one hand, no personal character can be full and fine in a high sense which circumscribes itself by the narrow circle of self and selfish interests; it must be public-spirited, devoted to universal ends, alive to all the obligations of citizenship in the broadest meaning of the term, or it is miserably defective and petty. On the other hand, no national character can be independent of the personal characters of which it the fused or organized whole; the character of a nation is the aggregate character of its citizens, put into the form of permanent institutions and laws, general customs and collective acts.

Personal character, then, involves a great deal more than the manner in which the individual conducts himself in his private relations, for it takes in the entirety of these plus his relations to and influence on the nationality in which he plays a constituent part; he cannot rid himself of a certain degree of responsibility for the soundness of the civic life in which he is immersed—for the healthiness of the arterial circulation of the body politic in which he is a vital blood-disc. First as an organism with an independent action of his own, and secondly as a dependent part of a vaster organism whose life is yet partly his, the individual who takes in the remoter relations of his own existence knows how much is implied by enlightened fidelity to the ideal.

Religious radicalism, therefore, cannot without self-mutilation restrict itself to the small field of "human character" as this is customarily conceived; that is, solely to the right ordering of conduct in the private transactions which constitute our dealings man with man. It embraces this, most assuredly, but vastly more also; and the radicalism which does so restrict itself,—which is unconscious of its public obligations,—which has no fiery soul demanding rectitude and justice in all public as well as private transactions, and making it a part of personal virtue to be keenly sensitive to national dereliction or disgrace,—lives in the moral universe like an eyeless fish in the Mammoth Cave. It must not, on pain of imperilling every precious liberty that has been gained in the world's long struggle of the many against the few, be considered a reputable or even an innocent thing to be careless of the right or wrong of State policies, administrations, or acts. If America has one enemy more insidious than any other, or more likely than any other to accomplish the ruin of the republic, it is the individual citizen's disposition to wash his hands of all public concerns, and entrust the defence of the sheepfold to wolves in disguise. No matter what is his excuse for shirking his public responsibilities or denying his complicity in all public acts, the result is at last the same in general disaster and blotted public fame. If the citizens cannot scrape up interest enough, or time enough, or virtue enough, to attend to their citizen-duties, and so let the frequent commission of wrongs by public officials become a settled part of the conduct of public affairs, the practical treason they are guilty of by this neglect is not one whit palliated by the plea that they were attending with scrupulous fidelity all the while to their private duties; no, not even if they were cultivating their own characters with all the aids of the hothouse.

On every citizen lies a heavy burden of responsibility for the character of the laws and institutions he lives under; and the degree of success which he has achieved in cultivating his own character may be pretty accurately measured by the degree of interest he takes in the proper discharge of his public duties. Not until the private life broadens out into universal relations, and becomes conscious of its indissoluble connection with the life of the world, can it be otherwise than meagre in quantity and poor in quality. But when these universal relations are comprehended and felt, the highest welfare of all becomes straightway the supreme good of each, to be toiled for, sacrificed for, lived for, died for, if need be. He who indolently ignores, or fastidiously declines, or disdainfully denies the obligation of doing his utmost, whether little or great, to make the laws, institutions, and customs of his own country more pure and just, betrays a most serious defect of personal character, which cannot be repaired by any amount of assiduousness in the cultivation of individual virtues in other relations. Citizenship carries duties as well as rights, responsibilities as well as privileges, obligations as well as opportunities; and no man can be a good man in the highest meaning of the word who is insensible to or neglectful of these great and vital relations of citizenship.

It is on these general grounds that the objects of the Liberal League seem to us to be important public duties of all who intelligently cherish radical principles in religion. The existing connection of Church and State, unperceived by so many and disregarded by a large number of those who do perceive it, renders the general social environment, which acts so powerfully on every private character, a repressive rather than a developing influence in more ways than one. What is of more consequence than to encourage free thought on all religious questions, and the free expression of it? How else can the highest truth in these great matters be seen, felt, and acted on? If it is true, as we believe, that the evils against which the "Demands of Liberalism" and the "Religious Freedom Amendment" are directed operate to retard, in a great but unsuspected degree, the free movement of thought respecting the highest relations in which the individual is placed, is it not plain that the religious radical owes it to his race to attempt to remove them? How can it be to him a matter of indifference that the general intelligence is checked and hindered in its development by the continuance of the present semi-establishment of the Church in this republic? In themselves alone the various evils specified may seem trivial and scarcely worth removing; but in their aggregate influence they are a serious usurpation, against which every citizen who believes in purely secular government ought energetically to protest and labor. The Rights of Man are the very foundation of the republic; and the chief of these rights are infringed by any control exercised by the Church over the action or institutions of the State. To carry forward the development of the American idea of absolutely secular popular government seems to be the chief duty of the American citizen; and it was solely with this purpose that the Liberal League was proposed. It is not a small matter; it is not one towards which any radical citizen can be consistently indifferent. What the New York Tammany Ring was in politics, that is the quasi-established Church in religion—namely, a depraving public influence; and every wise patriot ought to interest himself in its removal. "True American citizenship" is bound to exert itself actively, and not only by individual but by combined action, to secure the complete fulfilment of the national ideal of a State absolutely free from the Church. Whatever covers up or conceals this high obligation ought to be profoundly regretted: and the time will surely come when the whole matter will be seen in its true light. Concerted action is indispensable to accomplish the end aimed at; but it is a great mistake to suppose that we would stickle for any special form of such concert. What is needed is simply a general appreciation of the value of the central object, and a general devotion to it; all else is subordinate. Instead of being unimportant and insignificant evils, the abuses pointed out by the "Demands of Liberalism" are imperilling the highest public interests, as even a careless eye may discern in the school question now looming up as a great public issue. Is it not time for radicals to shake off the insouciance which characterizes the majority of them to-day? Will they not, in some way approved by them (we care not what), take up the large duties imposed by their principles, and prove that Radicalism is not only intelligent but also public-spirited?

THE PLATFORM AND THE PARLOR.

Different periods of social progress make use of different methods and instrumentalities. The time was, in this country, when the people generally looked to the pulpit and the preacher for nearly all their instruction. Then, one minister served a whole township, and he was almost the sole magnate in that little realm. Not only on Sunday but at all times, not alone on religious but on nearly all subjects, the people of his parish went to him for counsel and advice. He was, par excellence, the learned man and the good man of the town. Old and young alike respected him, and sought his wise direction. The office which the good minister has performed in the social evolution of this country has been full of helpfulness and benefit, and none but the narrow-minded and prejudiced will fail to acknowledge it with all heartiness of respect and gratitude.

But the minister's day of preëminent usefulness in our civilization is going by. It may not entirely have passed, but it is rapidly passing. The pulpit has been supplanted largely by the platform and the newspaper. The lecturer and the editor have pushed the preacher from his exclusive seat of supremacy, and won their own way to the appreciation and confidence of the people. The churches are empty now as compared with the halls where skilled speakers instruct large and attentive audiences upon almost every subject of popular interest; while the eyes that scan the newspapers for information are legion compared with the ears that are bent still to catch the utterances of the pulpit.

The lyceum has been an extraordinary civilizer of the American people. From the beginning, it has been wonderfully enterprising in utilizing the best talent of the land, and bringing it to bear upon the minds of the people in the way of solid instruction and diffusion of intelligence. What a galaxy of splendid names and fames it has presented in its long list of lecturers and speakers! Emerson stands at the head of that line; and, even from his present retirement, sheds lustre upon the whole history of the lyceum in this country. So great was his fame as essayist and lecturer, that England came and borrowed him of us, and took him admiringly to her own shores, where through all her large towns and cities he went up and down, scattering his pearls of wisdom. Parker, too, was another great name among lyceum lecturers, the light of whose magnificent learning poured itself out all over New England, and even over the Middle and Western States. And, like him, every other preacher of any considerable reputation the lyceum enticed away from the pulpit, giving him in its ample halls audiences larger, and of keener and more interested minds, than his own church afforded him. It has gone into the colleges, the newspaper sanctums, the private studies of literary and professional men, and taken the professor, the editor, the author, the eminent lawyer and doctor, and sent them all out in turn to tell the most and best they knew to all who would come and hear. To the popular lecturer and orator, as well as to the earnest preacher and the devoted minister, the future historian of American civilization will accord great honor and credit for the efficient service they have rendered in arousing, enlightening, and broadening the minds of our people. Of literature which is truly profound, catholic, and permanent, this country as yet can boast of having but a little; but Americans possess keen and wide-awake intellects, and as a rule are remarkably intelligent and serious-minded. For this they are indebted to their churches, their lyceums, their schools, their newspapers, and all those public and popular instrumentalities in the invention and support of which they excel all other peoples, and are the example and incitement of all others.

But another efficient instrumentality, at present less popular but more profound in its character, is coming into place in this country, which promises to do an incalculable work in promoting our highest civilization. I refer to parlor meetings, and private conversational clubs or circles.

In proportion as the life of a people grows vital, earnest, and deep, it grows from private and interior sources, and seeks expression in comparatively private and quiet ways. A shallow stream is a noisy one; but a deep current flows still and calm. Children are vociferous, clamorous, and eccentric in their demonstration; but as they grow mature they become sober, central, and self-poised. Just so it is with a nation. When it has passed out of its period of weakness and dependence, and become tremendously conscious of its lusty vigor, it manifests itself in all sorts of adventurous and spirited ways; and its civilization is functional and superficial rather than organic and vital. But, as the nation grows older and riper, its civilization strikes in as it were; it works more interiorly amongst the members, knitting all the joints of the social body together, coursing in nutritious fluids through all the arteries of society,—manifesting itself in a certain general cultus, in freer and richer thought, in finer and gentler manners, in higher and nobler lives among the people. Such a civilization dispenses with war and all its turbulent concomitants. It cultivates peace and every peaceful means of progress. It learns to disbelieve in all methods that are hasty, forceful, and defiant, and comes to adopt those that are gradual, persuasive, and educating. It aspires after ideas, and has faith in the winning might of truth. No longer it makes the continent to tremble under the tread of an army with banners, nor rends the air with sectarian cries or party declamation; but it sows the land with noble thoughts and beautiful sentiments, and creates a genial climate with freedom, love, and good-will among men.

The platform is too popular an institution with the American people, and has been too useful to them in the past, to be readily given up. With the free press, it is an institution peculiarly fitted, under a republican or constitutional government, for the promotion of such causes as seek to create a public sentiment, and win the popular heart. But it is so purely public in its character and all its functions, and is so liable to be prostituted to the mere service of sect and party, and made the arena of noisy debate, profitless discussion, and tawdry eloquence, that it imperatively needs to be supplemented by some instrumentality far more private, unexciting, and modest. This is to be found in the parlor meeting, and the club or circle for quiet conversation. Such meetings and conversational circles, there is every reason to believe, are rapidly increasing in number throughout the Northern States; and they are serving the cause of free thought and true civilization in a remarkable degree. All the most momentous questions of the day are being considered here, and are receiving the attention of calm, earnest, and thoughtful minds. The genius for conversation is being wonderfully developed by such private gatherings, where the unpartisan spirit of truth is apt to preside, and "sweetness and light" to reign supreme. An animus is likely to be born in these quiet meetings, and counsels to come forth from them, which will go far with gentle might and wisdom in the solution and settlement of the vexing problems of our time. Such gatherings belong to and are a part of the better civilization that is dawning. They will be related to it both as cause and effect. While the platform and press shall still continue to do their needed work, let us hope that the parlor meeting and the conversational club will also be encouraged to do theirs; and that the men and women competent to lead and direct them shall become more numerous every year.

A. W. S.

FREE-THOUGHT NOTES.

BY A VETERAN ENGLISH FREE-THINKER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

You ought to be a proud people. The old country has an amazing regard for your new world. Things American have a genuine delight for us. You may be angry at us at times; and some of our aristocracy—insular and obtuse—say scornful words of you at incoherent moments; but the people of England have a natural affection for the people of America. What more proof can you want than that which we give now? Our churches have gone clean "daff" with Moody and Sankeyism. The clergy of the Church of England are as much moon-stricken with these vivacious revivalists as the clergy of the Dissenting churches. It is the affectation here to call the preachers of the Dissenters "ministers," and the church preachers "clergy." But I give the name of honor to the non-conformist preachers. If there be any virtue in the term clergy, they have the right to it. Non-conformity means thought, and thought means independence, and independence means originality, and originality means self-reliance, and self-reliance means progress, and progress means virtue in action, and virtue in action means goodness; and, though the goodness may be irregular and incomplete, it is better than the stagnation of authority, servility, fear, ignorance, and mental idleness. Therefore I call non-conformists clergymen.

But not alone dozens and grosses but hundreds of the self-satisfied clergy of the Established Church, mostly contemptuous of American things, have swelled the peripatetic court of the Moody and Sankey monarchs. My strength (which is returning now) has not permitted me to attend any evening meeting of these enterprising conversionists in London; but I have been to their morning prayer-meeting at Exeter Hall. A duller thing I have not seen for years. Exeter Hall is always dim by day, and Moody stood up like a dark post amid sombre trees; and it was only by aid of an opera-glass—most worldly and profane medium—that I could discover who was the "man of prayer."

If Moody were a spiritual artist, he would dress himself like the white Quakers, when he in his snowy calico would be obvious from afar. Certainly he is a model saint! A defiant jaw, a double chin, graces the fat believer, who discloses a smart eye, a voice that means a thing or two; altogether, Moody, the sinner-saver, is as sleek as a porpoise. No fasting, no penury, no care, no anxiety, no leanness, appears in that well-fed apostle. Such a placid contemplator of perdition we have not seen heretofore. Wesley was white in the face; Chalmers was sad with great thought; Channing had care for progress marked upon him; Irving had a grand solemnity after the manner of his own classic eloquence. Moody and Sankey are bumptious and oleaginous in the epidermis. They give us the impression that they can put us up to a smart thing in salvation, if we will give heed to them.

They began in London by saying, "Let us thank God for what he is about to do in London," which made the Spectator think they thought, by discounting bills drawn upon the Deity, that he would feel bound to honor them, or seem shabby. We never had profanity in piety so pronounced as these spiritual adventurers show it. They tell the public that God will grant all things to those who put their trust in him. Moody has not done this, else the Holy Spirit had vouchsafed him a knowledge of grammar. If St. Peter has any culture, he will not admit the converts whom Moody and Sankey send to his gate. They tell us a story how General Grant captured Richmond by ordering a simultaneous advance upon the copperheads, and that the goodly people must do likewise; as though heaven were an enemy to be taken by storm. They teach that, if converts are in earnest, the Holy Spirit will give the talent. But the Holy Spirit appears not to be either pædagogues or professor, and expects converts to qualify themselves in these respects.

In Glasgow, some thirty or forty earnest youths were imposed upon by this easy, ignorant, and vulgar logic. After Moody and Sankey were gone, they went to the Presbytery and offered themselves to be led against the camps of Satan. The Scottish clergy had sat on the Sankey platform, and allowed the hope of triumphant illiterateness to be held out to the poor youths. When the time came to respond to the expectation of these foolish converts, the Presbytery referred them to the university, and told them to browse for two or four years on Pagan classics, as the devil was informed and shrewd, and could not be circumvented by uncultured and incoherent divines of the Moody order!

At a public meeting, when a tiresome speaker will not give over, a chairman is tolerated in pulling at his coat tail. Judge the consternation and laughter of London, when Moody was seen doing this to gentlemen at prayer, if they prayed too long! Heaven is surely the best judge whether it is bored, and knows, I suppose, how to silence the garrulous troubler. But Mr. Moody takes this matter into his own hands, and only allows God five minutes' supplication by the same person, as though he thought the ear of the Almighty wanted variety.

We hope that Mr. Varley, who has come up to convert you out of compliment to your sending Moody and Sankey to convert us, is a gentleman and a saint, conversant with Lindley Murray, or whoever your national grammarian may be. We count you a nation where popular schools prevail, and not like England, where the common people are kept ignorant by act of Parliament. We certainly expected that you would send ministers of heaven somewhat acquainted with the literature of the earth. However, as we are taught to give a certain person of very extreme reputation his due, I will be just to these singular visitors; though vulgar and flippant, though they make merry with gospel stories and put the prophets and apostles through their paces, make solemn things comic, and holiness amusing, they have a certain degree of merit. They are a superior kind of travelled Ranter. They appeal more to the love than the terror of God, which is an improvement upon Ranter policy. They make conversion gay, and sing the songs of salvation to lively tunes. They certainly correct the morbidity of converted sinners, and treat salvation as a matter of business. They thus break down a certain morose fanaticism from which gentlemen as a rule are free, and which mostly affects the poor. Wiser men than these (talker and singer) may therefore build some superstructure of decorous piety upon this strange foundation of familiarity. To my mind the questions supposed to pertain to God and to life, and time and death, have a certain degree of awe and reverence of their own, which should never be departed from. A cheerful, a genial piety, implying self-respect and deference of spirit, are wholesome to cultivate amongst the multitude; and all departures therefrom on the part of spiritual agitators are errors of ignorance or forgetfulness, and deprave rather than exalt the popular mind. It is worth noting that clergymen and noblemen, who have no genial word to say to political agitators, not only tolerate but embrace these spiritual agitators; for Moody and Sankey are that and nothing more. They are the peripatetic demagogues of the gospel. They do not pray to God; they "interview" him. Much is to be forgiven to honest zeal, but zeal in these days is bound to educate itself a little, and keep within useful bounds.

In a former letter I mentioned that the late Thornton Hunt took steps to found an "Order of St. George," which should facilitate mental progress among the foremost-thinkers of that time. That period was 1853 and 1854, when the Leader newspaper was projected and conducted. Some time I may give an account of the distinguished men that attended the preliminary meetings, which bore the modest name of "The Work." The times in which we now live have more freedom. The precautions taken then are happily dispensable now. The circular inviting adherence I here subjoin. You will see it was in my handwriting; but the composition, nervous and "pact" (a phrase which Thornton Hunt delighted to apply to a cultivated style), was his. It ran as follows:—

"Most persons who have reflected freely and maturely on the vital questions of the day entertain opinions considerably in advance of those they avow, or are permitted to avow. The tyranny which keeps down the expression of opinion in our time, though less dangerous than it has been in times past, is more domesticated, more searching and constraining. The real opinions that exist, therefore, seldom come out, bear little fruit, and do not know their own strength. To fortify and develop such opinions, it has been proposed by a few to invite others to come together without exposing them to the action of that social tyranny described. The means offered is that of a simple and confidential combination. Some have already accepted the invitation, and united in the frankest and heartiest spirit.

"The combination already includes ministers of religion, men of action, of literature, of science and of art. Only persons of character, of ability, of discretion and frankness are invited. The organization is simple. The admission is arranged thus. Each person who is willing to engage in the work must be introduced by one already engaged, with the concurrence of the rest; his introducer undertaking to answer for his fitness, and thenceforth to acquaint him with any result that may at any time be arrived at in his absence.

"No records are kept in order that the confidence of the combination may not be broken by accident. The only agreement made by one joining is that of perfect frankness of speech, and of not mentioning conclusions in such way as to necessitate naming those with whom they were worked out. The occasional care that this observance imposes is the price of that exemption from the tyranny of social opinion, which is to be obtained in no other way. There is no compulsion to be exercised upon any one who engages; every man retains complete individual independence; he assumes no collective responsibility; and he is perfectly free to withdraw at any time without inconvenience of any kind."

Yours ever faithfully,
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

Communications.

A COMPLAINT OF INJUSTICE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—You must pardon me for saying that I quite fail to perceive what relation the remarks you have appended to my letter in THE INDEX of April 8 have to any portion of it, except possibly the first short paragraph.

I perfectly understand that the point at issue is the true relation between liberalism and Christianity; and, in the letter referred to, I put forward the idea that each man's relation is determined by the extent of his opposition to Christian dogmas, and that there is no use trying to get beyond that.

You say: "It is no mere matter of words to rouse the liberals to a perception of what they are doing, to show them that they cannot identify Christianity with science and civilization, &c." I doubt whether many liberals are in danger of identifying Christianity with science and civilization; but the practical question is whether your New Year's day thesis is precisely the thing to rouse them with. Judging by its effect upon myself, I should say it was more adapted to rouse them to a reaction against the principles of free-thought than to move them in the direction you desire. Its effect upon Mr. Morse would appear to have been somewhat similar.

Grant that Christianity is doing all the evil you speak of—and for my part I have no controversy with you on that point,—are you not far more likely to combat it successfully by exhibiting the evil in detail than by expending your strength upon semi-metaphysical discussions as to the essential relation between free-thought and Christian theology? If people do not sufficiently realize "where they are," show them the features of the landscape one by one until they can take their own bearings, and do not simply announce to them where, as the result of private reasonings of your own, you have determined that they must be. The latter method savors too much of impatience, and impatience is about the most hurtful thing that can be imported into work like yours.

Now let me ask you one direct question: Do you think it just to prejudice the minds of your readers against what a correspondent writes by placing at the head of his communication such a title as "Words, Words, Words!" It seems to me it should be sufficient for every purpose to indicate in the heading simply the subject to which a letter refers, and to make any necessary criticisms afterwards. After labelling my communication as wordy, you pay a compliment to my "cultivation." The two things do not agree very well; a cultivation that leads only to wordiness is not worth congratulating anybody upon.

Sincerely yours,
WM. D. LESUEUR.

OTTAWA, 14 April, 1875.

[We answer the "direct question" above put with a direct no. We do not "think it just to prejudice the minds of our readers against what a correspondent writes by placing at the head of his communication" any title that should intimate we considered it to be mere "words." It may be proper to add in this connection that we have done nothing of the sort.

The gist of the first part of Mr. LeSueur's article was that we were uselessly "insisting upon a name"; and that this was a point of trivial importance. He therefore considered our whole discussion with Mr. Morse as merely verbal and of little consequence. To condense Mr. LeSueur's unfavorable verdict upon our carefully written articles into a phrase, and thus to help on his accusation of "wordiness" against ourself, we prefixed the title of "Words, Words, Words!" By that title we did not characterize Mr. LeSueur's communication at all, but, as the whole of our appended note demonstrates, meant to give it more pith and point as a charge of "wordiness" against ourself. And now he complains of us for doing what we did not do, but what he did do himself in substance!

There is no occasion to discuss here the "effect" of our "New Year's thesis"; that is not our affair. It is enough to say that we think more than ever that the article was true; and we leave it to work whatever effect it may or must. Free thought is, as Mr. LeSueur well understands, gradually destroying Christianity; we have only drawn the short inference that free thinkers are all anti-Christians. The sooner they all understand that, the better; and we are quite willing to be censured for telling a truth that is so plain, so important, and yet so constantly evaded. Time will vindicate us in the end.

It may be our misfortune to consider principles of more consequence than "details," and therefore to press home on reluctant ears the principle that freedom requires opposition to Christianity; but that is our work, and we must do it while we can. There are enough to do other work: it is our business to do our own. There is room enough for all to toil in their own way.—ED.

THE THEORY OF GOVERNMENT.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your paper for February 11, the Hon. Rutger B. Miller, of Utica, N. Y., calls upon "political philosophers of theological or metaphysical tendencies" to furnish a new theory of government; or, as he expresses it in the rigmarole of the Positive Philosophy, "a scientific general theory and plan of operations as a basis of reorganization of our disorganized social system, in both its spiritual and temporal branches." Why any one capable of such clear and sound thinking, as Mr. Miller proves himself in this article upon Gerrit Smith, should leave simple common-sense to indulge in this empty rigmarole, thereby complicating questions otherwise easy of comprehension, is somewhat marvellous to me. I suppose fashion has much to do with it. It is a style of writing by which one barren of ideas is enabled to appear scholarly and scientific; but surely Mr. Miller does not need to use it for that end.

There is no new theory or "scientific organic doctrine" to be had. Old theories may be newly expounded, clothed in new phraseology to suit the fashion of the times,—this is all. And science can do nothing for us but shed new darkness upon the subject. The wisdom we need must spring from genius and inspiration. It cannot be fashioned out by square and rule. Statesmen, like poets, are born, not made. The anarchy of the times results more from the perversion of fundamental truths, than from their decadence and overthrow. The reconstruction we want, therefore, is simply a return to the old "organic doctrines" with their original and legitimate meanings.

Before proceeding to expound the old "organic doctrines," I wish to note two rather serious errors of Mr. Miller. First, he says that "slavery was the basis of union of the American colonies in 1776." Instead of this, equality of States, or freedom of each State to regulate its own domestic institutions, was the basis of union. "The policy of abolition," substituting pretended personal liberty for real political freedom, if persisted in, would surely enough land us in "anarchy and a de facto dictatorship." But the battle is not over yet, and it is quite too early to pronounce our "constitutional social system founded upon slavery (freedom) perished."

Again, Mr. Miller speaks of "the constitutional régime, based upon the metaphysical dogma of self-evident truths, as an organic doctrine." What a pompous array of words to express a simple ideal! And how they obscure the idea instead of rendering it clearer by their precision! The self-evident truths alluded to, embodying the doctrine of equality, are in the Declaration of Independence. They were not used for a basis of any "constitutional régime," or government, as has been ignorantly supposed in these later days; but for a bomb-shell to explode government, and prove legitimacy on the side of secession and rebellion. The Declaration offers two good and sufficient reasons for itself; first, the abstract right of rebellion, covered by the doctrine of equality; second, the practical necessity of rebellion, covered by a long list of grievances, and manifold proofs of a design by parliament to reduce the colonists from free citizens, and sharers in the government, to mere subjects.

There are two opposite theories, one positive, the other negative, underlying all governments, whatever their form may be. The positive theory is theocratic, as it asserts the rights of God,—"divine right" of any kind. This theory is not a real truth, but is an apparent and practical truth, as every government must act upon it as true. It is implied and assumed in all the positive actions of government. The negative theory asserts the rights of man, and is democratic. Though practically false, as theory, it is really true. We call it an abstract, theoretical, or real truth. The province of this theory is not for government to act upon, but simply to limit and restrain the action of government. This doctrine must be fully understood by every one who would know anything at all of political philosophy. The reason we extend suffrage is not because anybody has a right to it, but because it sometimes becomes necessary, to prevent anarchy and preserve government. If government would honestly carry the doctrine of equality into practice, it must abdicate at once, and cease all interference with men's "pursuit of happiness." This would be a little more freedom than we desire. "If two men ride a horse, one must ride behind," as Dogberry says. To talk about equality as a practical question, is absurd and hypocritical. Some sympathize with the Southern negro; others with the Southern white men; others still would make both equally subject to themselves. To regard both equal to each other and to us, is an impossible feat of mind.

The two opposite theories we have been discussing may be expressed in simple terms, thus: Man is made for government and owes allegiance to government; government is made for man and owes allegiance to the people. The beauty and excellence of our scheme of government consisted in balancing these theories against each other in their legitimate order; using the practical truth as positive, and the theoretical truth as negative and restraining only. This we did until 1860. Our government was so framed as to act precisely like a government up to the full measure of the powers conceded to it, and yet not be a government in reality. The people who were parties to it were really free and self-governing. Our freedom was nothing but an abstraction which we all worshipped; and yet for this very reason, that it was a theoretical and negative truth, which at the last resort our government must be subject to, as we supposed; we exulted in the sense of perfect freedom. Government was but apparent, and because it was no more, we thought it the best of governments, honoring the constable above all the people of the earth.

The subversion of this beautiful scheme consisted in reversing the application of these fundamental truths; using the rights of man for a practical truth to emancipate slaves, and the divine right of government for a theoretical and real truth to suppress a nominal rebellion. There was a question whether our government had power to coerce States. If it had not, as everybody knows is the truth, then resistance to such coercion was not rebellion, but lawful resistance to usurpation. And whereas before, freedom was real, because a mere theory and abstraction, and government a semblance, because held in check by this theory, the effect of reversing the application of the two theories has been to make government real and absolute, and freedom nominal only,—a mere semblance and delusion.

Again, as to our Constitution establishing a consolidated government and nation, as has been claimed, the philosophy is the same. Certain national features were given to the government to facilitate its operation; but it was fully stipulated that it should be but a confederation in fact, by the reservation to the States and people of all powers not specifically granted to the government. With the doctrine of the rights of man recognized as theoretical truth, the framers of the government could not consolidate it so as to make their action binding upon their descendants, if they had so wished. The assumption of a national government, then, was an apparent and practical truth for government to act upon in the use of the powers conceded to it, while the doctrine of confederation was the theoretical and real truth, to restrain it from using doubtful powers.

There is an erroneous notion prevalent of some absolute truth which, if formulated and made the "organic doctrine" of society, will perfect its organization, and reduce all its evils to a minimum, if not banish them altogether. There is no such truth. All the institutions of society are necessarily based upon merely apparent and practical truths subject to limitation. All real truths are negative, and the most certain of all truths is that there is no such thing as truth. Reason gives us no truth, but simply shows us the delusiveness of the truths furnished by sense. We act upon our feelings, and use reason and the knowledge that our truths are but apparent, to modify our feelings and restrain action within appropriate bounds.

Quite too much is expected of organization in these days. The very "organic doctrines" sought late to form more than to substance. All political powers are despotic in nature, and the minimum of all results from such a balance between opposing despotisms, that power will alternate from one to the other side; each restraining the other, and neither being able to secure a permanent preponderance and become absolute. The wisest political maxim ever uttered was that of Jefferson: "The best government is that which governs least."

It should be understood that our government was never intended to be altogether democratic in form, republican in theory. It was only formally republican, because its officers were not elective by the people directly, or by the whole people. It was only theoretically democratic, because while power was intended to be in the hands of the majority, the power was restricted, and every imaginable difficulty put in the way of the majority getting it. It was designed for a mixed government which should combine the advantages and avoid the evils peculiar to all the three forms—monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy. One form of government is better adapted to particular circumstances than another; but it should not be supposed that any form is in itself superior to others. The substance of liberty may be reserved under any form. The republican form is adapted only to a people who are virtuous enough not to desire to rule others, and wise enough not to mistake the inability to do so as an equivalent to being ruled. If we would retain this form, we have only to get back to the old standard of intelligence and virtue.

WILLARD CLARK.

STATE PRISON, WETHERSFIELD, Conn.,
February 22, 1875.

[The above communication is certainly a fresh and independent one, and, however at variance with the usual tenor of THE INDEX, is provocative of useful thought. We particularly admire the audacity of its assertion: "The most certain of all truths is that there is no such thing as truth." This would be a valid premise for the conclusion that there is no truth in the above article.—ED.]

CHURCH-EXEMPTION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

While church people are defending the exemption of church property from taxation, on the score of the value and protection which society derives from its residence in the community, and doubtless are figuring the amounts which society pays for the moral effect of the church's owning high-priced corner-lots and productive real estate, as well as Boston's annual contribution for the Christianizing influences with which her million-dollar spire permeates the moral atmosphere of that sin-blighted city, and showing the possible or probable results of the rapid accumulation of wealth in ecclesiastical hands, the original scope and purpose of Christianity seems to be entirely lost sight of. Admitting that churches are a blessing to the community, pray tell us by what right principle unwilling contributions may be levied for their support, as is in effect done by taxation? The truths taught by Christ were to be had without money and without price; but modern Christians not only pay liberally themselves to have these same truths uttered beneath lofty domes and turreted roofs, and from gilded pulpits, but want to compel the whole community to pay something for the presumed benefit conferred by their gorgeous trappings. But churches (even without stores and offices connected) are not essential to Christianity, and not original factors in the plan of redemption. Their construction in imitation of the splendor of heathen temples furnishes the best evidence that those who worship in them have been successfully exemplifying theory exactly opposite to that taught by the founder of their faith, when he tells his followers, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth"—and further emphasized when he said, "Verily I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter the kingdom of heaven," and "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." The religion of Christ was pure and simple. Its attractiveness was in its purity and simplicity. Its utterance was not accompanied by bugles, drums, music by a string band, or singing by a fashionable quartette. It was all comprehended in the answer given by Christ to the Sadducee lawyer, who asked him, "Master, which is the great commandment of the law?" Jesus said unto him, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind; this is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." In that memorable Sermon on the Mount, in the enumeration of those who were blessed to find a place for "the poor in spirit," "for those that mourn," "for the meek, for the merciful, for the poor in heart, for the peace-makers; but nowhere a blessing for those who erect costly meeting-houses, and support heavily salaried ministers, who "burlesque the penury, the fastings, the foot wanderings, and the preaching, of Christ and his first followers." And we claim, that no consideration can be justly given to church property on the score of its exerting Christianizing influence on society, because it is either essential to faith, worship, or morals, nor in sympathy with the teachings of the Founder of that faith.

The effect of these gorgeous structures is, to foster and encourage extravagant tastes and customs, entirely antagonistic to the genius of Christianity, and to make salvation in a fashionable church a luxury, to be enjoyed only by those who have accumulated a competency of that which Christ expressly tells them will bar them from the kingdom.

Christians claim that their churches are not productive property,—therefore should not be taxed. This we believe to be an erroneous idea; for, whatever may be the theory of church people regarding the temporal possession of the church, the facts show them to be the basis of as much speculation (in the ratio of their value) as North Pacific or Erie Railroad bonds. A popular pastor gives an active demand for sittings, while a dull, prosy disciple depresses the value and drives pew-owners to the necessity of providing further attractions, or lose their dividends on investments. In every city and town, pews in churches are regularly bought and sold on speculation. It is also very productive in other ways. To one who desires to win popular applause, membership with some church and ownership in church property is worth more as a business investment than ten thousand dollars at interest. If, as Christians claim, churches are essential to Christianity, and redemption from sin can only be obtained through its provisions, then I submit that to them churches are immensely productive; and their owners can well afford to pay tribute in the treasure which perishes for the eternal wealth which awaits them on the tomorrow of life.

The whole trouble comes not from a non-understanding of or difficulty in administering the theory of taxation, but from trying to harmonize it with some theory of exemption, a sort of royal favoritism; so that certain classes of property may escape the cost of its protection. The maxim, "be just before you are generous," applies here. The State by its generosity works injustice to the people. Generosity is a noble trait of character; but it should be preceded by justice. There is no justice, short of universal taxation of all property, save such as the State or municipalities own. Exact justice between man and man demands this, and none need fear that the cause of true religion, which is the science of right living, will suffer by dealing justly with all.

J. T. CLARKSON.

AMESBURY, Mass.

"DIVINITY."

Mr. Frothingham's sturdy words on the "immorality of prayer" are exhilarating. One cannot but breathe more freely for sympathy, and hope that some poor enslaved soul may be made free, manly, and self-reliant by Mr. Frothingham's true and terse utterance.

I noticed a few months ago that the Rev. Charles Voysey criticised Mr. Frothingham, in a mild way, on the topic of Spiritualism, and desired a definition; as if Spiritualism for the last decade or more were not as well defined as rheumatism. In Mr. Voysey's letter (INDEX No. 270), God is portrayed as a personality, and referred to as "the Divine Mind." On this head Mr. Frothingham might retort on his London friend and ask for definitions. "Divine Mind"—what is it? Where is it? Is it mundane or extramundane? Does the London preacher know of any mind other than that presented by the intellect of man and animals? By hunting the universe over, can he find any other? This patient universe, by the tongue of science, tells us that, where there is mind, there is brain; where there is brain, there is body; where there is body, other bodies are found. So we ask, where is the divine brain—where the divine body, to harbor Mr. Voysey's "Divine Mind"?

Mr. Voysey speaks of "God's sympathy" towards mankind. Why not praise the North Star for its love and sympathy? Surely, the North Star, being sixty times larger than our beneficent sun, is worthy of adoration as a divine dignity. Why not bless it for its beams that shine so faithfully at night, when the fitful sun has (in anger for our sins) turned away from us? It is kind in that stellar orb to keep its frigid place over the door of the north—through which no one has passed—for our guidance, and particularly for the guidance in the past of the poor slaves of the South in their search for freedom. It should be honored as the star of freedom. It is the mariner's faithful friend; it "saves suicides" and prevents accidents. The Rev. Mr. J. S. Thomson says, "Every individual must have something greater than himself to worship." Here is such an object, for the matter of size. It is not a figment of faith nor a picture of the imagination, but a veritable heavenly object. "A. W. S." says, "Man is both a reasoner and worshipper." Query: Is he not more a liquor-lover than worshipper? Does not the power of tobacco and its equivalent move him in all climes to an extent that far exceeds that of worship? This human quality is calculated to lead him to pay his respects to the god Bacchus: call it worship or what not.

What is divinity? Who is divine? What is the difference between a divine truth and any other truth? God is said to be the father of man, and men are his children. As we know offspring are but repetitions of the parents, God must be a man, else we are no more his children than the fishes of the sea. Nature teaches that, where there is a father, there is likewise a mother. It teaches that among primordial beings the female or mother-existence takes priority over the male in the order of time. The male is a differentiation from a prior and more general form of female life. These primitive beings abound in the maternal, but have no paternal or father-side. Thus Nature propounds the female or mother type of life long before the male or paternal side is evolved: while theology sets up God as a Father, and takes no thought about God as a Mother. Here it is again! Women kept under! What wonder, then, that Theogenesis and Geo-genesis should irreconcilably conflict? One came by assumption, the other by observation; and the one which goes to the wall will prove the survivor to be the fittest. A. S. H.

OAKLAND, Cal., March 15, 1875.

[Though our own way of thinking is not that of the above article, it is a way that ought to be understood by us all, and has a right to presentation in THE INDEX.—ED.]

"DESIGN."

The arguments of theism from alleged marks of design in the universe may bear reconsideration in the light of modern achievement and speculation.

Darwin has shown how species progress: by excessive reproduction, consequent struggle for existence, and survival of the fittest. This process seems analogous to experiment, with failure and success, rather than the perfect planning of a benevolent Mind.

The spiritual essence which has been supposed to account for the powers of the human intellect has been by a few sympathetic men extended to the more intelligent lower animals,—the horse, dog, and elephant. But never has there been any quality ascribed to inorganic matter, oxygen, carbon, or iron; yet the philosophy of Evolution, daily growing in fulness, evidence, and probability, regards this world with all its varied beings as once "potential in a fiery cloud."

A comparison may be made between the extremes of experience, say a particle of iron and a human brain.

The particle shall be supposed to be suspended by a silken thread; it is attracted by gravity to the earth, and by the same force in minor and various degrees to every star and planet in the universe. The electric currents generated in the earth by its rotation around the sun, make the particle take a north and south direction; heat and light rays falling upon it are absorbed and reflected variously, distorting its shape. Slight air-currents develop friction and cause movements; so in still less degree do sounds. On all the sources of these motions, and other more minute, the particle reacts; and in its mass the different forces combine in many complex ways. All this complexity would be greatly increased by the adherence to the iron particle of a copper one, having its own different order of impressions and results.

A human brain is supplied with material for thought by the senses, which are impressed by external things, directly by touch, or indirectly by gentle waves of air or ether. These impressions the nerves carry to the brain, where they persist a longer or shorter time, and combine together, causing movements of the bodily parts.

There is much analogy between the particle and brain; each is affected by all else in the universe; both are susceptible of many kinds of persistent impression, and in both the impressions mutually affect each other and give rise to new motions. Each is a focus to which universal forces converge, and from which they diverge after modification.

The inheritance of mind in matter, even in its simplest forms, seems probable, as seen in the injured crystal repairing itself; a plant in a dark cavern growing toward the light, or spreading its roots near the surface of the ground, if that be unusually warm and moist; in vine tendrils finding and clinging to points of support.

It would seem that differences of degree have been mistaken for differences in kind, for all these examples resemble the running of water down the shortest and easiest channel. When a round stone is dropped into mud, nobody sees design in the concaving of the mud under the stone; yet the development of the eye with and by light is a fact of the same kind, accountable for on the same principle of the infinite correspondences between each part of the universe and every other, and mutual co-adaptations. J. G. H.

MONTREAL, Canada.

[The Darwinian law alluded to in the second paragraph of the above appears to state the only possible mode of improving species. If the improvement of species be an object worth securing, why is not the indispensable process at least harmonious with the supposition of "benevolent Mind"?—ED.]

TRIBUTE TO CARLYLE.—I am reminded of one among us, hoary, but still strong, whose prophetic voice some thirty years ago, far more than any other of this age, unlocked whatever of life and nobleness lay latent in its most gifted minds—one fit to stand beside Socrates or the Maccabean Eleazar, and to dare and suffer all they suffered and dared—fit, as he once said of Fichte, "to have been the teacher of the Stoas, and to have discoursed of beauty and virtue in the groves of Academe." With a capacity to grasp physical principles which his friend Goethe did not possess, and which even total lack of exercise has not been able to reduce to atrophy, it is the world's loss that he, in the vigor of his years, did not open his mind and sympathies to science, and make its conclusions a portion of his message to mankind. Marvellously endowed as he was—equally equipped on the side of the heart and of the understanding,—he might have done much toward teaching us how to reconcile the claims of both, and to enable them in coming time to dwell together in the unity of spirit and in the bond of peace.—Professor Tyndall.

A MISSIONARY related how he had converted a tribe of cannibals; but one day, being followed by some of his disciples, he heard them whispering to each other: "The black-frocked man has got fine calves." It became necessary to order them to the front, that they might be delivered from temptation.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 to 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 to 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Brew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.
 Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

F. W. NEWMAN, England.

CHARLES VOYSEY, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
ATERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero-Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	5.00
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Experiments by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Paraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Paraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	2.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Life.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Door Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelbigs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	.60
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	4.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	3.00
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Countrymen.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. Now and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume of Life and Works.....	1.40
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings. Vol. I. Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trott Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait, Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHÉLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.75
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Science.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 12.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....	1.25
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.25
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Shing and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauntering.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in the Adirondacks.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp. C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.
The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON
English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

ABOUT CHEAP RATES WESTWARD.—We have frequent inquiries about the cheapest rates, best route, &c., to Western points. We cannot undertake to answer such questions in detail. It is evident that many of our readers are seeking new homes and fortunes in the West, and for complete and reliable detailed information about that country—from Missouri to Oregon and California inclusive—we do not hesitate to commend them to Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent of the Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis. Mr. Ford has thousands of pamphlets, circulars, time-tables, maps, rate-sheets, etc., for free distribution, and answers all questions, promptly and cheerfully, without charge.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,
NEWSPAPER
Advertisement Brokers,
Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.
Complete files for inspection of advertisers.
☞ Lists sent upon application.
☞ Send for estimates.

TWO NEW BOOKS.
MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dume Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

20 SUPERIOR MUSIC BOOKS.

NATIONAL HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. New. For Opening and Closing Schools. 40 cents.

For Note Reading in Schools,
AMERICAN SCHOOL MUSIC READERS. Vols. I., II., and III. 35c., 50c., 50c.

CHEERFUL VOICES. 50 cents.

For Sabbath-schools,
RIVER OF LIFE. New Edition. $30 per 100.

For High Schools and Academies,
HOPE OF SINGING. $1.00.
ORPHEAN. $1.00.

For Home Entertainment,
PIANO AT HOME. 4 hands. $2.50.
ORGAN AT HOME. $2.50.
GEMS OF STRAUSS. $2.50.

Cheap Instruction Books.
Winner's New Schools (each 75 cts.), For Piano; for Cabinet Organ; for Melodeon; for Guitar; for Banjo; for Cornet; for Fife; for Accordion; for Clarinet; for Flute; and for Flageolet.

Sold by all the principal music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
111 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

CHARLES SUMNER.
A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

KANSAS, COLORADO, NEBRASKA, CALIFORNIA.—The Spring tide of travel Westward has fairly set in. Thousands are migrating to Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and especially California. To such, as a cheap and desirable route to destination, we commend the Missouri Pacific Through Line, by way of St. Louis and Kansas City. Call upon or address Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis, who will cheerfully furnish you correct and complete information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, time-tables, etc., for gratuitous distribution.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.
Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.
By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS
—OF—
THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vo's., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

10 CENTS
Will make you an ANNUAL SUBSCRIBER to FOUR NUMBERS of

EHRLICH'S QUARTERLY,

containing prices, descriptions, and fashion-plates of Ladies' and Children's Suits, Ladies' Underwear, Infants' Wear, Real Lace and Dress Trimmings, Hats, Feathers, Flowers, Ribbons, etc., etc., together with the choicest selections of Literature, Wit, and Wisdom.

Our Quarterly will place within your reach the best goods at the lowest prices. Only 10 cents for a year's subscription. First issue now ready. Subscribe at once.

EHRLICH & CO.,
287 and 289 EIGHTH AVENUE, NEW YORK.

Please state in what paper you saw this advertisement.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF

MONCURE D. CONWAYS'S SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,
has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU GOING WEST? If so, and you desire full and reliable information as to the cheapest and best route to Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, California, Oregon, or any of the Western States or Territories, we recommend that you call upon or address E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo., who will cheerfully answer all questions, and furnish you with maps, pamphlets, time-tables, rates, etc., free of charge. Now is the season of low rates, and applications should be made at once.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.
Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers, P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,
256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S
GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES
CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.
Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.
A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION.
By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!
A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FREE DISCUSSION
is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10¹/₂ A.M., 2¹/₂ and 7¹/₂ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS AT BELFAST.
Seventh Edition,

Containing the First and Second Prefaces replying to his Critics, an extract from the Manchester Lecture, and the paper on "Scientific Materialism" in full. 120 pages. Price 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
MORSE'S NEW BUST OF THEODORE PARKER.
Cabinet size. Price 50 cents.

Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.
Also for sale at the office of THE INDEX.

REASONS FOR USING THE EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.
G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,
—AND—
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co's Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

☞ On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

ANew, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled
"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full tilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1875.

WHOLE No. 280.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———. Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

A SUBSCRIBER in Pennsylvania favors us with a copy of Jack Shepherd's Gospel Trumpet, which blows a faithful lunatic blast almost equal to Varley's.

PROF. WETHERELL will read an essay on "The Siege of Science on Religion" in Hospitaler Hall, 593 Washington Street, next Sunday, at 10½ A. M. To be followed by a discussion. All are invited.

THE Investigator comes out in handsomer style than ever, with a fine new vignette containing a representation of Paine Hall. All friends of this sturdy old champion of "Universal Mental Liberty" will rejoice at its evident prosperity.

THE ARGUMENT for woman suffrage based on the Fourteenth Amendment was recently overruled in the United States Supreme Court, in the case of Mrs. Virginia L. Minor, of St. Louis. The question is remanded to the separate States for settlement.

WE are sorry to say that we made a mistake last week in regard to the incorporation of the Massachusetts Family Bank. The bill passed the House, but was defeated in the Senate. But the project is too good to rest there, and will, undoubtedly, be revived.

VARLEY the revivalist related in Boston lately that a man once said to him that he (the interlocutor) thought pretty well of him as a man, but could not believe in his doctrine of a hell. Mr. Varley turned to him, and said: "Say that again, and I tell you that you call Jesus Christ a liar."

THE GERMANS complain that, although at least a seventh part of the whole number of Roman Catholics is German, yet they have only three out of fifty cardinals, and about twenty out of a thousand bishops. It is a grievance for which they should expect congratulation rather than condolence.

THE Independent very neatly puts the substance of Vicar-General Quinn's proposal to the New York Board of Education to saddle the Catholic parochial schools on the city: "The thing to be gained for these schools is the public money, and the thing not to be surrendered is their sectarian and Catholic character."

THE Jewish Times opposes the incorporation of the Catholic parochial schools with the public school system, so long as they still remain to any extent under Catholic control. "Unsectarian education," it says, "is one of the great achievements of American civilization, and we must watch with a jealous eye every attempt to deprive us of the precious boon."

THE Examiner and Chronicle says: "Mr. Frothingham's society has moved down town. It has changed its name from Unitarian to the First Liberal Society of New York." More accurate information on this subject is communicated by Mr. Frothingham himself in another column. It is unnecessary to state that the change, in our opinion, was well worth making.

THE contributions of Mrs. Annie Besant to the London National Reformer, under the signature of "Ajax," are admirable in every way. She is a thoroughly keen, vigorous, and well-stored mind, and evidently has a brilliant future before her, although her High Church husband has separated from her because of her extreme radicalism.

THE COMMON COUNCIL of Buffalo very properly rejected the Catholic parochial school project, and on right grounds, namely: "The common schools are neither Protestant nor Catholic; they are not established and maintained as nurseries of creeds; they are and ought to be sustained exclusively for the tuition of children in the studies which are recognized as essential to a good business education."

BARNUM'S HIPPODROME in New York has been the scene of many harlequin performances; but Mr.

Henry Varley, the revivalist, has eclipsed them all. When he dramatically inquired of his audience whether they "thought God a fool," and at the same time declared that "the hand of the Lord was in this movement," the question must have been a very embarrassing one for a sensible man to answer.

SPECIAL ATTENTION is invited to the "Liberal League Notice," on the editorial page. The proposal to hold a general delegate Convention of Liberal Leagues at the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, in 1876, is one that will undoubtedly be welcomed by all who believe in radical organization. We hope it will stimulate the formation of new Leagues all over the country, in order to secure for Liberalism a fitting representation on that great occasion. Let us have suggestions from all who favor this noble project. THE INDEX is heartily at the service of this movement and its friends.

A RIGHTEOUS bill has been introduced into the Massachusetts Legislature which would eventually put an end to the whole chaplain system, if its principle should be consistently carried out:—

SECT. 1. No inmate of any prison, jail, or house of correction in this Commonwealth shall be denied the free exercise of his religious belief, and liberty of worshipping God according to the dictates of his conscience, within the place where such inmate may be kept or confined, particularly on the Lord's day; and it shall be the duty of the officers and boards of officers having the management and direction of such places to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the intent and provisions of this act.

SECT. 2. Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair the discipline of any prison so far as may be needful for the good government and safe custody of its inmates.

SECT. 3. This act shall take effect on its passage.

WITH great parade Cardinal McCloskey invested the new Archbishop Williams with the pallium, last Sunday. The capacity of the building is four thousand, but ten thousand were in waiting as early as 9 o'clock. The newly created metropolitan see consists of the dioceses of Boston, Hartford, Burlington, Portland, Springfield, and Providence; in all of which there is a Roman Catholic population of 863,000, or nearly one-fifth of the total population of four and a half millions. With a Prince Cardinal at its head, seated on a throne, and representing a foreign potentate, the Catholic Church in America is a formidable institution founded on a monarchical principle utterly hostile to the whole framework of American government and society; yet it only expresses in visible outwardness the interior principle of Christianity in all its forms. The "Lord" Jesus Christ must have his Vicar on earth; and the Pope's vast pretensions all grow logically out of the claim of Jesus to be the Messiah, or Vicar of God.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH's paper, the National Reformer, contains these comments by Mrs. Besant on Mr. Thorne's expulsion from the North Carolina Legislature: "It is very painful to hear such news as this from 'free America,' and to learn that a Theist was expelled from the House of Representatives of one of the States, because he did not hold all the Christian superstitions. We are bad enough in England, but we are not as bad as this. We regret also to see that it was a colored member who brought forward such a resolution. A man who had but lately won freedom, and who had, with his whole race, been kept in bondage by a Christian people, who padlocked the fetters on his limbs with iron wrought in Bible smithies, ought surely to have learnt that Christianity was his greatest foe, and ought to have been the last to use it as an engine of persecution against his neighbors. But it is the old story; an oppressed class always become oppressors if they get into power, and Mr. Harrison Hughes's fanatical bigotry is scarcely to be wondered at, however much it may be condemned."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Tiptomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLAHIE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBEO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Buddhism Notwithstanding:

AN ATTEMPT TO INTERPRET BUDDHA FROM A BUDDHIST STANDPOINT.

AN ESSAY READ TO THE CHANNING CLUB, NORTHAMPTON, MASS., APRIL 8, 1875.

BY DYER D. LUM.

[Concluded.]

THE ETHICS OF BUDDHISM.

Such, as I conceive it, was the religious philosophy made known to man by Buddha. With pleasure I now turn to his ethics. What are the moral obligations binding upon man? What have been the effects of Buddhism upon society? What relations exist between the central teachings of Buddha and Christ? These are the questions we have yet to consider.

"Self is the Lord of self," said Buddha; "who else could be the Lord? With self well subdued, a man finds a Lord such as few can find." In this brief statement we have the chief characteristics of the Buddhist religion. It affirms the infinite perfectibility of man's nature; and upon this affirmation is based the whole moral code. In the language of Tennyson, but with far deeper meaning:—

"Self-reverence, self-knowledge, self-control,
 These three alone lead life to sovereign power."

It is impossible to quote but a few of Buddha's moral precepts, and difficult to select from the wealth of material with which we are provided.

"He who would attain Nirwana must not trust to others, but exercise heroically and perseveringly his own judgment. The wagoner who leaves the right path, and enters into the untrodden wilderness, will bring about the destruction of his wagons, and endure much sorrow; so also he who leaves the appointed path and enters upon a course of evil comes to destruction and sorrow."

"A man in the practice of religion, who exercises charity from a feeling of necessary obligation, or from a feeling of partiality, does not obtain much merit."

"A man who foolishly does me wrong, I will return to him the protection of my ungrudging love; the more evil comes from him, the more good shall go from me; the fragrance of their good actions always redounding to me, the harm of the slanderous words returning to him."

"Hatred does not cease by hatred at any time; hatred ceases by love; this is an old rule."

"Reflection is the path of immortality, thoughtlessness the path to death. Those who reflect do not die. Those who are thoughtless are as if dead already."

"By rousing himself, by reflection, by restraint and control, the wise man may make for himself an island which no flood can overwhelm."

"An evil deed does not turn suddenly, like milk; smouldering, it follows the fool, like fire covered by ashes."

"If one man conquer in battle a thousand times thousand men, and if another conquer himself, he is the greatest of conquerors."

"Let each man make himself as he teaches others to be; he who is well subdued may subdue (others); one's own self is difficult to subdue."

"By oneself the evil is done, by oneself one suffers; by oneself evil is left undone, by oneself one is purified. Purity and impurity belong to oneself; no one can purify another."

"Not to commit any sins, to do good, and to purify one's mind, that is the teaching of the Awakened."

"Let us live happily, then, not hating those who hate us! let us dwell free from hatred, among men who hate!"

"There is no fire like passion; there is no unlucky die like hatred; there is no pain like this body; there is no happiness like rest."

"He who holds back rising anger like a rolling chariot, him I call a real driver; other people are but holding the reins. Let a man overcome anger by love, let him overcome evil by good; let him overcome the greedy by liberality, the liar by truth."

"You yourself must make an effort. The Buddhas are only preachers."

"A man does not become a Brahmana by his platted hair, by his family, or by both; in whom there is truth and righteousness, he is blessed, he is a Brahmana. What is the use of platted hair, O fool! What of the raiment of goats' skins? Within thee there is ravening, but the outside thou makest clean."

"He who, after leaving all bondage to men, has risen above all bondage to the gods, who is free from every bondage, him I call indeed a Brahmana."

These are selections from that wonderful preaching which twenty-four centuries ago rang out in the ears of a priest-ridden people; samples from "heathendom," pure and undiluted from Christian influences. Though by birth a prince, and with a reputation acquired by severe asceticism, yet, despising both, Buddha sought to build only on truth and righteousness.

Buddha was no wonder-worker; when asked to perform a miracle, he replied:—

"I direct my disciples not to do wonders; I rather say to them: 'So live that you conceal your good actions and confess your sins.' He declared that there was no distinction between the body of a slave and that of a prince, and admitted women to be ranked as disciples and to the priesthood."

In India, we must continually bear in mind, that the caste system had built a wall of separation between men, permitting no communication whatever with a large portion of the community. Members of the lowest caste were not permitted to live near other people; they were forbidden to eat only from broken plates, and obliged to wear the dress of condemned criminals—not a social distinction alone, but under the solemn sanction of the popular religion, one extending through all eternity. To speak to, or to willingly look at, one of the hated caste involved loss of caste, entailing not social excommunication alone, but rebirth as the vilest insect. Social custom and religion had so hedged man in that we can hardly conceive the possibility of an hereditary prince deliberately abdicating rank, sacrificing wealth and luxury, and renouncing family ties, to assume the yellow robe of mendicancy, and mingle with the lowest caste. All conception of brotherhood had been crushed out; the social order was identified with divine order. In this age, notwithstanding the supposed necessity for "civil rights" enactments, we can form no just conception of the extent of caste influence and its iron grip. One man alone had penetrated to the realities of life, and, rising above all social environments, boldly attacked this despotic requirement. "The virtues do not ask about castes," said Buddha, thereby striking at the very root of Brahminism. When Ananda, his nephew and beloved disciple, accosted a woman of the lowest caste and requested a drink of water from the vessel she had just filled, she hurriedly told him her caste. Instead of a horrified look, she received a smile, and was told in reply: "My sister, I ask not for thy caste or thy family; I ask only for a draught of water." For the first time in the world's history salvation and redemption were freely proclaimed for all!

"All men, without regard to rank, birth, and nation," says Duncker, "form, according to Buddha's view, one great suffering association in this earthly vale of tears. Therefore the commandments of love, forbearance, patience, compassion, pity, brotherliness of all men."

"The people were deeply impressed," says Dunlap, "by the gentleness and humility which Buddha opposed to the haughtiness and pride of the Brahmins, and by the compassionate commiseration which he exhibited for the distress of the people, for all the wretched and laden. . . . Not one's own misfortune, but that of our fellow-men, is a ground of sadness."

The five commandments of Buddhism are: 1. Thou shalt not kill. 2. Thou shalt not steal. 3. Thou shalt not commit adultery, or any impurity. 4. Thou shalt not lie. 5. Thou shalt not intoxicate thyself with drink. "Besides the five great commandments," says Max Müller, "every shade of vice, hypocrisy, anger, pride, suspicion, greediness, gossiping, cruelty to animals, is guarded against by special precepts. Among the virtues recommended, we find not only reverence for parents, care for children, submission to authority, gratitude, moderation in time of prosperity, submission in time of trial, equanimity at all times, but virtues unknown in any heathen system of morality, such as the duty of forgiving insults, and not rewarding evil with evil. All virtues, we are told, spring from Maitri, and this Maitri can only be translated by charity and love."

While the key-note of Buddhism is human development, its assertion of Self as the prime fact, beside which all was transitory, cannot be regarded in the light of narrow selfishness. "Cut out the love of self, like an autumn lotus, with thy hand," said the teacher. "As every one," he said, "seeks to lessen for himself life's sufferings, so shall he also lessen the sorrows of his fellow-men." Not selfishness, but renunciation through love, is the characteristic feature of Buddhism. A beautiful relation has been preserved admirably illustrating the importance of renunciation and love towards true self-development. A wealthy merchant, named Purna, who had left all to follow Buddha, determined in his enthusiastic devotion to win over a wild tribe to the knowledge of the new truths. Buddha, wishing to test his firmness, said the people were wild, fierce, cruel, and that he would suffer from insults and injuries. Purna answered: "Then I will still hold them for dear, good people, because they neither beat nor cast stones at me." "When, however, they do even this?" inquired Buddha. "Then I say still the same, for they could indeed wound me with weapons." "But this also will happen!" "Nay, they are dear, good people, in that they do not rob me of my life." Once more Buddha questioned him: "But if they kill thee?" Purna replied: "Then I thank their love and goodness that they free me with so little pain from this miserable body." "Go, Purna," said Buddha, "thyself redeemed, redeem others; thyself saved and consoled, save and console them. Lead thou, thyself perfected, them to perfection." As Purna really succeeded by his invincible mildness in converting the tribe, this instance well illustrates the fruits generally reaped by Buddhist missions.

"In the midst of oppressed peoples," says Duncker, "he showed how unavoidable evils could be patiently borne, how they could be mitigated by mutual help. It was the evangel of a peaceful life and the hope of a death without resurrection which opened the hearts of the people to Buddha's teachings."

THE TEST OF HISTORY.

We have next to consider the effect produced upon society by Buddha's doctrine. We have seen that the philosophy and the morality of Buddhism were alike based upon the cardinal idea of the perfectibility of man. The philosophy of Buddhism, the basis of its moral code, was the declaration that within and beneath all existence is the real, the being, from which all things spring. All life possesses a common root. Strip from self all that is phenomenal, the result of sentient existence, and that which remains may be called nothing, or the real; either or both. But at this point it takes its departure from the religious mysticism of Christian thought. Mysticism finds this common element, the root of all existence, in God; it seeks to recognize the universal element in individual forms. Buddha, starting from the finite, while asserting a common ground underlying all existence, refused to build theory on inference, lest, instead of infinite and finite, he should have two finites. To this common element he would give no name; the soul, or intellectual substratum, is termed in Buddhist Scriptures "the existing know-nothing." Buddha left it, as he found it, infinite, incomprehensible. While conditioned in Nature, escape could only be accomplished by harmony with Nature.

Mysticism, following the thought of identical essence, attempted to overleap the gulf between infinite and finite, and became lost in the unknowable. Buddha, following the same line of thought with clearer vision, penetrated deeper; exhausting the intuitive method, he found that progress could only result in the opposite direction, the brotherhood of man. The perfection of self required the subjection of passion, desire; consequently the purely selfish feelings were to be eradicated. Self-gratification is the chain which binds us to individuality; this chain must be broken, and but one course lay open, self-renunciation and love for man. This was the seed planted by Gôtama Buddha; what are its fruits?

In judging of the effect of this system of religion upon mankind, we have not only to consider the social system it supplanted, but must also bear in mind the caution laid down in our introductory remark, that, while recalling attention to the central ideas of a religious teacher for a correct estimate of the system bearing his name, we must not forget the complementary truth that mankind, in adopting these ideas, may logically deduce consequences or dogmas unforeseen by him who first taught them. It is to history that we must appeal in all such cases to determine the applicability of the ideas to social life; to obtain a correct estimate of the accuracy of the thought upon which we are so confidently assured we alone can build. Applying this test to Buddha's teachings, what is the verdict?

I have endeavored to show that Buddhism was a catholic rather than an ethnic or race religion, based on the inherent requirements of our nature, or what you would term the spiritual laws of the universe. It sent its missionaries out in every direction, to far-off nations, no matter what their race or language, to make known to human souls through the baptism of renunciation the method of attaining that absolute rest of which they each contained the promise. Two hundred and seventeen years before Christ, Buddhists appeared in China, and sixty-one years after Christ Buddhism was openly recognized. Weber says that Buddhist missionaries must have come into the Persian lands two or three centuries before Christ, and probably penetrated into the west as far as Asia Minor. Dunlap remarks: "It is not probable that Judaea, with its knowledge of Babylon and Persia, could have been even a century without hearing of Buddhistic doctrines taught five hundred years before Christ." In the third century before Christ it had extended to Cashmere. Nepal, Tibet, Birmah, Ceylon, Siam, Japan, were all taught Buddha's law and moral code long before the world had heard the disputes of Christian sectaries. In the seventh century of the Christian era Buddhism was overpowered and its profession prohibited; yet the very edict of exile redounds to its merit. "Let those who SLAY NOT be slain; the old man among the Buddhas and the babe."

So markedly beneficial have been the results of Buddhism, that scholars vie with each other in extolling the virtues of this religion. From disinterested, or Christian, writers the strongest testimony can be adduced; and you will pardon me if I call them into the witness stand. Blaproth, a German Professor of Oriental Languages, says, with pious reservation: "Next to Christianity, no religion has contributed more to ennoble the human race than Buddhism." M. Laboulaye, a member of the French Academy, states: "It is difficult to comprehend how men not assisted by revelation could have soared so high, and approached so near the truth." Malcom, the Baptist missionary, says it is "the best form of religion invented by man." St. Hilaire defines the Buddhist morality as one of endurance, patience, submission and abstinence, rather than of action, energy, enterprise. Rev. Spence Hardy admits that a collection might be made from their Scriptures which, in the purity of its ethics, could hardly be equalled from any other heathen author. The Roman Catholic Bishop Bigandet admits that he could not be deemed rash in asserting that most of the moral truths taught by the Gospel are to be met with in the Buddhist Scriptures. Professor Max Müller tells us: "It has been the peculiar fate of the religion of Buddha, that, among all the so-called false or heathenish religions, it almost alone has been praised by all and everybody for its elevated, pure, and humanizing character. One hardly trusts one's eyes on seeing Catholic and Protestant missionaries vie with each other in their praises of the Buddha; and even the attention of those who are indifferent to all that concerns religion must be arrested for a moment, when they learn from statistical accounts that no religion, not even the Christian, has exercised so powerful an influence on the diminution of crime as the old, simple doctrine of the Ascetic of Kapilastu."

In conclusion, permit me to add yet another to this "cloud of witnesses"—James Freeman Clarke, who thus admirably sums up the effect produced by Buddhism upon the world:—

"Buddhism has made all its conquests honorably, by a process of rational appeal to the human mind. It was never propagated by force, even when it had the power of imperial rajahs to support it. Certainly it is a very encouraging fact in the history of man, that the two religions which have made more converts than any other, Buddhism and Christianity, have not depended for their success on the sword of the conqueror or the frauds of priestcraft, but have gained their victories in the fair conflict of reason with reason. We grant that Buddhism has not been without its superstitions and its errors; but it has not deceived, and it has not persecuted. In this respect it can teach Christians a lesson. Buddhism has no prejudices against those who confess another faith. The Buddhists have founded no Inquisition; they have combined the zeal which converted kingdoms with a toleration almost inexplicable to our Western experience. Only one religious war has darkened their peaceful history during twenty-three centuries,—that which took place in Thibet, but of which we know little. A Siamese told Crawford that he believed all the religions of the world to be branches of the true religion. A Buddhist in Ceylon sent his son to a Christian school, and told the astonished missionary, 'I respect Christianity as much as Buddhism, for I regard it as a help to Buddhism.' MM. Huc and Gabet converted no Buddhist in Tartary and Thibet, but they partially converted one, bringing him so far as to say that he considered himself at the same time a good Christian and a good Buddhist."

BUDDHA OR CHRIST?

Last, we have to consider the statement that Christianity supplements Buddhist truths with grander incentives and a nobler ideal. Applying the same method to Christianity which I have adopted towards Buddhism, the essential differences of the two religions will be clearly shown.

What is Christianity? You tell me that it is not a system, but a life; not a creed, but a spirit, "constantly feeding the life of man at its roots by fresh supplies of faith in God and faith in man." You inform me that the essential elements of Christianity are to be found in the central teachings of Jesus, who contributed to the world a vital impulse toward a truer and more adequate realization of ideal perfection. The central thought of Jesus you assert to consist in his basing religion on the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; that love of God and love of man is not alone the corner-stone, but the essential fact of Christianity, that which distinguishes it from all previous religions; and that "so all-inclusive is this ideal that the grandest imagination of the world can only dream along the line of its realization in the ever-advancing perfection of humanity." Some of you freely admit that Jesus had but an imperfect conception of the grandeur of the thought which he was so ardently endeavoring to impress upon the minds of his countrymen; that he may never have contemplated the applicability of his teachings to men except within the narrow limits which he believed God had clearly defined in the selection of the Jewish race as his peculiar and chosen people; that even his brightest dreams of their realization were indicated by his evident belief in the speedy establishment of his Father's kingdom in the Holy City, Jerusalem. Nevertheless, in spite of these limitations, the result of human imperfection, the adoption of these principles, and their application to the Gentile world, under the more genial influence of Hellenic thought, in a larger and more catholic sense by that band of believers gathered at Antioch, justly entitled them to the name of Christians.

To this definition, as far as it goes, I yield a ready assent, basing my objection on the ground that the conception of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, resulting in love of God and man, as a basis of religion, is false in theory, evil in tendency, and destructive to religion in its logical development. The peasant rabbi of Galilee was undoubtedly actuated by the purest motives in his mission; yet it is the principles rather than the motives which require examination and criticism. His conception of God as a Father involves all that is included in a parental relation. We are God's children, subjects of his government; blessedness, rest, peace, the instinctive aspiration of every mind, requires that we as children should recognize the authority of the Father, and bring our minds into a cheerful and willing unison with his will. Christ's love for man was founded, not so much upon the conception of universal brotherhood in itself, as of sonship; that is, the brotherhood of man resulted from the fact that God was our Father. Christ's love for man was dictated by his desire to bring man at one with God, to a willing acknowledgment of God as a personal father. The dominant thought, to which all else was secondary, was, God is a loving father who pitieth his children. With this is logically connected the idea of man's relations to God; but these relations were at no time accurately defined. As far as we can gather from the detached remains of his teachings he conceived that our relation to God was that of loving, trusting obedience, implicitly following his guiding hand; that God was an ever-present help to whom our thirsting souls instinctively turned as the needle to the pole. That he was not alone the author of our physical existence, not an undefined First Cause, but the author of our spiritual natures, and that through our immortal spiritual faculties he is to be apprehended and his will communicated.

We find ample illustration in the foregoing summary that Christianity is "not a system but a spirit of life;" not based so much on thought as on feeling; an emotional rather than an intellectual conception; that is, a dim perception through confused and imperfect thought, involving inconsistencies and delusions. Knowledge must admit of system, or it becomes a medley of inordinate and irreconcilable elements, more generally defined as ignorance. If you admit a system of thought, but insist that Christianity is more, being the life of the system, I must still inquire how is God, the source of this life, apprehended? By sentiment, intuition, a moral faculty? Through the emotions rather than the intellect? What is sentiment, intuition, or whatever may be the name of this mysterious faculty, save an ambiguous expression indicating a form of thought? Modern science, in declaring that "man and the higher animals have the same senses, intuitions, and sensations—similar passions, affections, and emotions, even the more complex ones," has thereby struck a blow at the very foundation of Christianity, inasmuch as it dispels the delusion of a special faculty by which the mind apprehends the "loving Father."

Jesus, unlike Gótama, did not feel the need of any logical process of thought; to his mind, a personal God, exercising parental authority, was the one great fact requiring no proof. It was not the scientific conception of force, nor the probable God of "natural theology," but a divine presence intuitively perceived by the wondrous "entity," mind, or by that still more undefinable entity, or faculty, soul. In God alone was life, from whom by some mystical and never defined process the soul receives that divine life by which perfection alone is to be realized. Trustfulness, faith, is therefore man's highest virtue under Christianity; not so much subjection as a "sweet submission" to the Father. So completely was the Galilean teacher filled with this "fulness of life," that trust in our Father's guidance requires of us to take no thought for body or raiment, "for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." Faith was a "central thought" in Christ's mind, and ever since has been one of the characteristic features of Christianity; taught by Christ, formulated in dogma by the Church, and regarded to-day its chief glory. This essential Christian sentiment is truthfully reflected in these lines:—

"O restful, blissful ignorance! 'Tis blessed not to know!
It keeps me quiet in those arms which will not let me go,
And hushes my soul to rest on the bosom which loves me so!

"So I go on, not knowing! I would not if I might;
I would rather walk in the dark with God, than go alone in the light;
I would rather walk with him by faith, than walk alone by sight."

The nature of man's relation to God having never been logically formulated by Christ, we are not surprised to find that the Church has ever been at war with itself in attempting to define the utterances of its Head. The one inevitable deduction the Church saw was that authority primarily rested in God; how that authority was communicated to man was a question which legitimately fell to the Church to determine. Jesus had asserted himself to be the Saviour foretold by the prophets. In him, the Gospels relate, were fulfilled the ancient predictions. Jesus claimed divine authority, and whatever may be the nature of that authority, his claim logically resulted from his central idea—the fatherhood of God. The Church realizing the folly of attempting to formulate the relations between the infinite and the finite, under the logical development of this central idea, were unable to maintain a distinction between God and his anointed, and very early centred this authority in Christ.

The idea of authority as external (or, if manifested in the mind, still a conferred authority) is necessarily bound up with Christ's conception of a personal God; and whether this authority be supposed to manifest itself through the organized church, the written revelation, or the individual conscience, to the Buddhist is alike objectionable. It is not the nature of the authority, but the hypothetical source of authority against which we protest, as an idea containing the twin errors, Faith and Authority, which we regard as the one weak spot in Christ's teachings; from which, through its logical development, have resulted the terrible stains which disfigure the historic pages of the Christian centuries.

I am told that this faith is the sense of unseen things, a quick and sympathetic consciousness of a Divine Presence, and that failure to understand this state but argues our inability to rise above the perceptions of sense; that the moral sense, by faith, is uplifted so as to render our recognition of the divine presence more vivid and constant. Buddha submitted his intuitions to a rigorous analysis, instead of blindly following them, and saw a distinction between our ability to think that the Infinite is, and the assumption that we may be influenced by, and commune with, the Infinite. Buddha recognized the fact that the Infinite is, and based his whole system on this clear intuition; on the other hand he saw that matter and mind were but phenomenal; that man, conditioned in the finite, could not approach, or be approached by, the Infinite, and sought to reconcile these two propositions by proclaiming the infinite perfectibility of man. Expressed in terms of a later philosopher, "I think, therefore I am." Whatever it is that constitutes this wondrous Ego, I know not. Like Nirwāna, Self is and is not; attempt to define it, to give it attributes, faculties, and you destroy it, for you thereby render it finite, illusory. In terms of speech, it has no existence; yet it is. The apparent contradiction is but the consequence of attempting to define the undefinable. It is not a question of a higher or a lower plane; it is a question of fact. Whether the "loving Father" be an objective reality, or the prolongation of subjective self into objectivity, is a question for the intellect, not the sentiments; calling for the exercise of thought, not of faith.

Human development is the key-note of Buddhism, faith in man is its grand idea; but underlying this and clearly expressed is the claim that "man is capable of enlarging his faculties to infinity." Consequently we are not surprised to find the charge of atheism freely used by those who have failed to penetrate the sublime depths of Buddha's thought. The Buddha made no hasty and ill-advised plunge into denial of a Deity. The conception of man's infinite perfectibility, it is true, logically excludes Deity from that intimate relation with the finite mind asserted by Christ; and herein lies the radical difference between the two religions. After years of profound meditation and anxious thought, the Buddha came to the same conclusion as thousands of other thinking minds have since, that a religion cannot proclaim the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man without inevitably giving an undue predominance to the first, logically resulting in the subordination of the second; that the ability to grasp and hold the conception of God and man, the infinite and finite, the eternal and the temporal, has ever been not alone a failure, but resulting in such complete subordination of the lesser to the greater as to render brotherhood impossible, and tightened the clasp of the chains with which the mind has so long been fettered. The brotherhood of man resulting from sonship has ever been hampered with the dead weight of Divine Authority, resulting in a divided allegiance, recognizing man's rights so far as they do not conflict with parental requirements; unfilial conduct annulling all rights.

Granting that Christianity is a "spirit of life" and not a system, still the central ideas must become systemized; it is inevitable, a system of thought must result. Christ's thought, great as you may conceive it to be, can claim no especial exemption from the lot of all ideas; otherwise there never could have been a Christian church, nor would the influence of Christ's teachings have extended beyond the generation who heard him. If every attempt to systematize his thought has invariably resulted in destroying it, it is because the thought is in itself contradictory and illogical. If Christianity as a "spirit of life" is manifest in the individual, and becomes lost when formulated, what does it add to the moral life inculcated by Buddha? If Buddhist life is Christian, wherein does Christianity supplement it? Buddha taught the highest morality without a conscious recognition of a "Divine Presence." If this Presence is unconsciously felt by the Buddhist, then the supplementary truth of Christianity is its intellectual perception. Christ and the Church agree in asserting that this recognition is essential. Buddha's analytic mind perceived the logical consequences involved in this claim, and the history of the Christian centuries tends to confirm Buddha's conclusions. The two conceptions are mutually antagonistic, and repel each other. And it is as true to-day with us, as it was then in India, that they who assume best to understand the workings of the "Infinite Mind," who through faith have the most vivid and constant recognition of the divine presence, are the least able to understand the needs of the finite mind; and that in inverse ratio with our knowledge of His ways are we enabled to comprehend the lessons of life and profit from them. Tested by appeal to history, we find that the idea of a personal God has ever thrown a screen between man and his brother, and lifted not a feather from the weight of human misery, which still presses as heavily as ever, except as relieved from purely secular, or Buddhist, motives.

Christianity may be a life, but it is a life based on erroneous foundations, neutralizing the human element contained in Christ's teachings. This fact has been unconsciously perceived from the days of the Evangelist Luke to the present, and attempts made to offset it by assertions that a future world would reverse the order of this, that the rich and poor would then and there change conditions, and sorrow here be atoned there by becoming the recipient of infinite pity! The art of living a good life? If Christianity be this, it is a failure, for the principles on which it is based contain contradictory elements which inevitably will become manifest. Christianity even as a life, with all its pretensions to "perfect freedom," must logically exclude those who deny its fundamental ideas, for it is dependent upon Christian thought, based upon the affirmation of the following so-called "active principles of the religious nature of man":—

"1. Belief in some supernatural being—or beings.
"2. Belief in accountability, or relationship to that being in such measure as for good or evil to come from it.

"3. Belief in immortality, and the continuance of this relation after death.

"4. The instinct of prayer, as a means of establishing relations with this being.

"5. The instinct of worship, including the emotion of veneration and its expression."

So fundamental are these deemed that to deny them, we are told, is to assert our religious nature a mockery; yet to these principles, each and several, Buddhism protests in the name of religion,—a protest toward which all the lines of scientific thought are rapidly converging in the name of reason,—averring that our high instincts point to different conclusions; conclusions adapted to awaken the noblest faculties of our being, prompting man to look the everlasting reality in its face and defy its mythical power to excite love or fear. To the principles quoted above no Buddhist can yield acquiescence, while no Christian can remain a Christian, however pure his life, if Buddha's law be accepted. Buddhism and Christianity are irreconcilable, based on radically opposite ideas, and leading to the development of essentially different forms of character in their historical evolution.

Buddhist life culminates in absolute renunciation of self for the interest of others; subordination of self-interest to the general welfare. Christian life tends to a temporary renunciation of self for the glory of God; subordination of self-interest here to be repaid with interest in the future.

Buddhism, as the religion of reason, subordinates the emotions to the intellect; keeping sentiment, or feeling, ever under the dominion of will. Christianity, on the contrary, sacrificing reason on the altar of the passions, and consuming it with carefully fanned flames.

Desire, passion, weigh down the mind, Buddhism asserts, alluring it by phantom forms from the attainment of its goal, the real, to attachment to the transitory. Desire, passion, maintains Christianity, becomes the wings of the soul, lifting it above the petty concerns of life to forever renew the struggle in other scenes.

Buddhism develops aspiration, Christianity prayer; aspiration being the welling up of an exhaustless fountain, prayer but a means for filling the fountain from an external source. The reservoir of spiritual force being within us, aspiration is its natural overflow, fertilizing human character; in Christian thought prayer constitutes the service pipes by which Christian life is supplied with draughts of heavenly moisture, doled out to it as it may need. Aspiration leads to manly self-reliance, prayer to intellectual enervation; the one calculated to develop the highest civilization that race and climate will permit, the other a clog to all material prosperity, ever thwarting our humanitarian instincts by projecting across the pathway of human life the ominous shadow of a personal will. One gives us humanity, the other piety, as the characteristic feature of its life. In one word, man, according to Christianity, is theosophic, or divinely illuminated, from without instead from within; while, according to Buddhism, he is entheastic, having the energy of God, inherent in his nature.

When modern science shall have cut the connections by which Christian life is fed, in showing the unreality of its affirmed source, driving out the idea by a clearer knowledge of man's psychological nature, Christian life will wither and die; but the religious nature of man will be left, and in its continued efforts to elevate humanity and remove misery we have left Buddhism notwithstanding.

And if a more accurate knowledge of mind should show a future life of immortal existence to be the fond dream of the imagination misinterpreting a natural instinct, it cannot take from us the great beating heart of humanity; and again we have left Buddhism notwithstanding.

And though all relation between Infinite and finite should become generally accepted as delusion, the aspirations of the mind will remain to hint to us of the limit of all thought; enabling us to fearlessly second all research, and still keep Buddhism notwithstanding.

CIVIL RIGHTS.—"Brother Smith, what does this mean?"

"What does what mean?"

"Bringing a nigger to this church?"

"The pew is my own."

"Your own! Is that any reason why you should insult the whole congregation?"

"But he is intelligent and well educated."

"Who cares for that? he is a nigger."

"But he is a friend of mine."

"What of that? Must you therefore insult the whole congregation?"

"But he is a Christian, and belongs to the same denomination."

"What do I care for that? Let him go and worship with his fellow-niggers."

"But he is worth five million dollars," said the merchant.

"Worth what?"

"Five million dollars."

"Worth five million dollars! Jerusalem! Worth five million dollars! Brother Smith, introduce me."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

DR. HILL ON THE STRUGGLES OF SCIENCE.

The Rev. Dr. Hill, of Portland, has an interesting article in the April number of the Unitarian Review, reviewing Dr. Draper's book on the Conflict between Religion and Science. The article is especially interesting, however, as illustrating what Herbert Spencer in his late work on the Study of Sociology denominates the "theological bias." In its whole breadth and scope it exemplifies how great an obstacle to the introduction of new ideas, in any direction, is the traditional and professional view that any powerful class shall take of them; and shows that for any independent, unbiased opinion of any movement we must look to those whose class interests or associations are not affected thereby. Indeed, the doctor himself seems aware of this objection, in advance, and "warmly resents the imputation" that theological prejudice, or theological training, or even a marked ancestral descent from families where the "theological bias" had for generations undergone a system of "breeding in and in," could influence the judgment. The fervor with which he meets the cool, clear presentation of historical facts in Dr. Draper's work reminds one of that of his constant friend and example, Agassiz, in a similar direction, when he nervously exclaimed that "God would go out of the universe as fast as Darwinism came in." He distinctly intimates that the New York professor, "who abstains from naming his chair," had better confine himself to his chemistry and spectrum analysis, leaving "higher and more difficult metaphysical themes" to those who have more information. He quotes from Dr. Draper's last page his remark that the man of science, "conscious of his own strength, will no longer submit to the dictation and tyranny that for centuries repressed all thought and progress," with the inquiry, What does Dr. Draper "propose to do about it"? and sarcastically asks in what the "strength" referred to consists—whether in strength of intellect or of passion, or in the physical strength that would adopt that ancient promoter of religion, the inquisition. The good doctor might form some idea of this strength from the fact that, on the day his article was published, the thirteenth thousand of Dr. Draper's book had been issued in this country alone, and that, too, within four months of its first publication. Dr. Draper's answer to this question is in the words of Esdras: "The truth that endureth and is always strong."

Dr. Hill, however, hardly does himself justice in his desire to be sarcastic at the author's expense. The remark quoted follows an eloquent summary of the position of Christian Rome, in the past and in the present; of its hatred towards civil and mental freedom; of its denunciation of the "impudence" of those who would subordinate the authority of the Church to that of the State; of its antagonism to the forces of progress embodied in modern society; and of its intolerance. It was a description of that Rome which holds, in the words of the oath of its most powerful order, that "no allegiance is due to Protestants, or obedience to any of their inferior magistrates or officers," and that their "doctrine is damnable, and they themselves are damned, and to be damned, that will not forsake the same." In closing this vivid review, Dr. Draper asks: "Can any one doubt as to the issue of the coming conflict" with this power? The answer is obvious: "Institutions that organize impostures and spread delusions must show what right they have to exist. Religion must relinquish her domineering position so long maintained against science, and the ecclesiastical cease to tyrannize over the philosopher." Could a more appropriate answer have been given? Is it not consistent with the historical fact that the Roman church has always sided with despotism? If it applies in a milder sense to the Protestant church, we think neither Dr. Hill, nor the many times thirteen thousand readers of Dr. Draper, will fail to see its point.

Dr. Hill briefly criticises the construction of Draper's work, and fails to find from it that any conflict of science and religion ever existed. We think he can hardly have read the book with his usual critical analysis. Dr. Draper says that, in speaking of Christianity, he refers generally to the Roman church as representing the majority of Christendom, and because the Protestant church has never occupied so imperious a position. In his argument he recites the origin of modern science; the rise of Christianity and its attainment of imperial power; its early suppression of science in Alexandria, and its later suppression of the learning brought into Europe by the Arabs; its opposition to the intellectual development of which Galileo was the pioneer; the movement towards mental freedom made by Luther; and the antagonism displayed by the Roman church and theology generally towards modern science in its every department. The thread of the argument is not difficult to find. It is a simple record of historical facts from which the reader is left mainly to draw his own deductions.

The reviewer says that the only conflict that ever existed with science was that of a "corrupted church," which was equally hostile to religion. He would make religion an ideal, instead of the actuality that the world knows. We must take it as history shows it in the past and our own experience in the present. The "corrupted church" of eighteen hundred years is the only church Christendom knows. It was the representative of religion, and was always "corrupt," because it was always "a cloak for political ambition and intolerant pride." If there was "no conflict" between Christianity and science in the first fourteen centuries of this era, it was simply because the life of science was so nearly crushed out by ecclesiasticism as to be incapable of resistance; because all learning was confined to the clergy, and the only authorized text book of science was the Bible; because all thought was stagnant, and moral as well as physical uncleanness pervaded all Europe. For fifteen centuries Christendom had not a single astronomer. There was no literature but the vapid and inane writings of the fathers of the Church, who occupied whole volumes hunting for concealed meanings, or dwelling upon the magic essence of single words of Scripture texts. There was mental degradation everywhere. Theology held that all principles were from God and not to be scrutinized, and facts must yield to principles. "Adore and tremble before mystery and majesty" was the rescript that solved all scientific outreaching. The discovery of the telescope by Galileo was the first rebellion against the Church. Against it was at once arrayed the whole power of the Christian church to quench the gleam of scientific light. Surely the whole history of the struggle from 1610 till the present time is familiar enough.

A late theological reviewer of Draper sneers at Galileo as "that bold recanter whose courage was so far beyond that of any Christian hero." Dr. Hill, too, refers to the thousand martyrs of religion slain by Rome, compared with the single examples of the martyrs of science. But the truths of science need no martyrs to prove them. They were facts not to be controverted or permanently suppressed. The martyrs of faith were sacrificed to their own fanaticism, to the enthusiasm of ideas, to the excitement induced by immense moral machinery. There is no glory in martyrdom, but there is the sure indication of the existence of bigotry, tyranny, and ignorance.

Dr. Hill gives several ingenious and learned illustrations of the difficulty that attends the introduction of new practical truths into the world, to show that the "traditional faith" that resists may not always be religious faith,—which, however, may be passed by as having no bearing on the subject of the book. It certainly does not affect Dr. Draper's argument, that there has been opposition in the United States to the adoption of the French metrical system of money in preference to our own decimal system; or that the English-speaking people have been unwilling to adopt phonetic orthography instead of the present method. Perhaps the time will come when even these improvements will prevail. Experience will certainly warrant us in attributing their introduction, should it come, to science rather than to religion.

One of the most singular statements made in this article is that "foreign trade has been one of the two great curses of the earth"—Dr. Hill coupling it with war in its influence to retard civilization. He says there is "nothing in the theological absurdities of the Roman church more sad" than the sight of a certain able, pure-minded editor who had been so misled as to advocate "democracy and free trade"! It may be true that the discovery of America, which opened a new world to commerce and to freedom, enlarging the little circle of civilization that fringed the shores of the Mediterranean Sea to one that compassed the whole earth,—that the invention of the steam engine and of the electric telegraph, those mighty instruments of commerce and free thought that carry civilization with them around the world,—have all wrought mischief in the world and retarded human progress; but the world will be as slow to believe it, as it is now to believe that the first chapter of Genesis (as is the doctor's opinion in a late sermon) "contains a knowledge of all subsequent speculations in philosophy, religion, and science, and of all atheistic speculations, including Positivism, Transcendentalism, Spencerism, and what not."

Dr. Hill takes exceptions to Draper's ninth chapter, which treats of Providence and general law. He says the author oversteps his province in assuming belief in law inconsistent with belief in Providence and prayer. He finds a fallacy in Hamilton's solution by experience of Zeno's paradox of motion, in consequence of Hamilton's lack of a little "geometrical imagination"; but contents himself with accepting Hamilton's argument of experience in refutation of the "modern Zeno's (Draper's) paradox concerning prayer and Providence." The man who believes in law, he says, still is conscious of liberty, can plead, ask and give; therefore existence of law cannot be inconsistent with asking and giving, either with man or God. But he stops too soon with his experience. Why not extend it a little farther in a practical, common-sense way? The child asks its father for an apple, and receives it. If it asks for the Goddess of Liberty from the dome of the Capitol, it does not receive it. If the prayer to deity is within the limits of experience, as for the sun to rise in the morning, or for pleasant weather after a storm, it will be granted; but all the prayers of Europe at the command of the pope did not scare away Halley's comet in 1456. A bishop of the Episcopal church lately prayed for rain on his people at Albany, and congratulated himself on his success; though the same rain caused immense destruction of property and life all over the rest of the country. How can experience, common sense attribute such results as answers to prayer? "Old Probabilities" can give some very good hints as to when and where to pray for rain, so as to be in accord with "experience."

Draper's arraignment of the Latin church, and his prediction of its overthrow, the reviewer is not inclined "to quarrel with." He even calls in the aid of St. John and the thirteenth chapter of Revelation, with his "number of the beast" and of the man—the magical 666. He relates as "a very significant circumstance" that, on the day that France declared war against Prussia, the pope announced his own infallibility, wearing upon his head his peculiar title VICARIVS FILII DEI—the sum of the numerical value of the letters of which is 666. Consequently the pope must be the "beast." But there may be nothing supernatural even in this. St. John's Revelation was never heard of for some hundreds of years after Christ's death. The church of Rome, doubtless, had its "peculiar title" then as now, and within the knowledge of the revelator, and the Roman numerals were as visibly equal to 666 then as now. Certainly history shows that about those days the pope was a good deal more of a "beast" than the kind-hearted old Pontiff Pius IX. As St. John says, "Here is wisdom." There is a greater significance in the German astronomer Bode's curious relation that seemed to control the distance of the planets from the sun.

But space will not admit of further comment. The subject of science and religion just now is a fruitful one. We find the phrase, "science and religion," in such frequent use that we may suppose them to have formed a copartnership. Artemus Ward dryly remarked that "B. Franklin was born twins in Boston." Perhaps "science and religion" have just been born twins, and we may hope for a more harmonious future for them. P.

PORTLAND, Me., April 8, 1875.

THE CATHOLIC CLERGY AND THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT.

The controversy which Mr. Gladstone has been carrying on with the Catholic clergy in England, and which may be said to have been closed by his recent rejoinder, if it has done nothing else, has brought out very distinctly two important facts. One is, that no promise, or engagement, or declaration, made or entered into by Catholic bishops with regard to the policy, or opinions, or beliefs of the Church, or with regard to its relations to the State, has any binding force or effect, or possesses any value whatever, as long as it has not received the approval of the Roman curia. Another is, that whether the dogma of infallibility has been really adopted or not—about which Catholic theologians are divided,—there is no means accessible either to clergy or laity of ascertaining whether in any particular case the Pope has spoken infallibly—or, as it is technically called, "ex-cathedra"—or not. In fact, according to Dr. Newman, there is no problem in theology more difficult than the decision of the precise character of the Pope's utterances, and the only body in the world competent to undertake it is the "Schola Theologorum" at Rome, which attacks it with the aid of a highly artificial and very complex system of interpretation, which it takes the study of a lifetime to master. For all practical purposes, therefore, the new powers of the Pope are of little value to the mass of mankind, though their value to the Pope may prove very great. He and the Schola will always know whether he has spoken as the oracle of God, or only as a man, and whether the matter on which he has passed lies within the domain of faith and morals or not; but nobody else will. In fact, he may extend the domain of "faith and morals" in any direction he pleases without let or hindrance, because the public will never know what he is doing until he pleases to tell it. He will thus be able to issue mandates which will cause great confusion among his flock, and which they will consider of divine authority; and afterwards, if their operation does not please him, deny their infallibility. The advantage of this in his conflicts with secular governments does not need to be explained.

Mr. Gladstone has also shown conclusively that the pretence which some of his clerical opponents have put forward, that the Pope no longer arrogates to himself the power of suspending the operation of State laws when he does not approve of them, or believes they infringe upon the prerogatives of the Church, is really unfounded. In 1855 the present Pope declared null and void all acts of the Piedmontese government which he considered prejudicial to the Church or to religion, and particularly those suppressing the monasteries as civil corporations. In the same year he annulled the acts of the Spanish government which provided for the toleration of Protestantism and the secularization of ecclesiastical property. In 1862 he declared null and void the Austrian legislation establishing freedom of the press, and of worship, and secularized marriage. In these cases, it is true, there were concordats in existence on the violation of which he might (though he did not) have rested his decrees; but Mr. Gladstone cites three other cases in which there were no concordats, and in which he annulled the legislation of Sardinia, of Mexico, and of New Granada, on similar grounds, and shows that by the constitution Apostolica Sedis of 1869 he excommunicates all persons who imprison or persecute bishops, thus attempting to raise these prelates above the law of their domicile; all who interfere with any ecclesiastical jurisdiction, as, for instance, any one who should sue out a habeas corpus for a priest or a monk or nun imprisoned by ecclesiastical authority; all who impede the officers of the Inquisition in the execution of their duties; and all who secularize or purchase church property without the Pope's permission. Moreover, just after the appearance of Mr. Gladstone's pamphlet, the German bishops were thunderstruck by the receipt of an Encyclical, annulling the Falk laws in Germany, which, however, they have not as yet dared to publish in their dioceses, fearing it would increase the rigor of the pursuit with which Bismarck is pressing them.

One has only to state these facts to make apparent the futility of the objections which a portion of the English press is making to the severity of the treatment which the German government is inflicting on the Catholic clergy. The history of the relations of the Catholic Church with the State everywhere shows that it graduates its pretensions and behavior according to the treatment it receives. A century of repressive and indeed cruel legislation in England and Ireland made the clergy the most submissive and humble-minded Christians that ever knelt before a throne. They solemnly repudiated before their emancipation Papal supremacy and Papal infallibility in as strong terms as any Protestant could use, and were never tired of proclaiming the indivisibility of their allegiance. In Poland, fifty years of despotism have made one of the proudest prelates in the world one of the humblest and most patient. In fact, experience has shown that while the Church, when exposed to persecution which really assails its freedom of worship, or the peaceable profession of its faith on an equality with other denominations, shows great courage and constancy, it abandons its arrogance and claims to universal dominion, and to jurisdiction over civil rulers, and to the supervision of education, and takes its place quietly by the side of the Methodists and Congregationalists and other sects, before determined resistance on the part of the State; and in that place it can be kept by stern and unremitted watchfulness on the part of the State, but in no other way.

In Germany, it has for ages been allowed to hold the position of an imperium in imperio, or, in other words, to retain the practices and powers built up in the Middle Ages, after the State has been completely transformed and modernized. The position of the Church in modern Germany was an anomaly with which Bismarck would have been compelled to deal, as one of the features of the old régime, even if the declaration of infallibility had never been made. Its relegation to a position of complete subordination to the State was, in fact, a necessary part of the revolution, and would have been necessary even if the Pope had never enlarged his pretensions, and doubly necessary in a country in which the State claims so great control over the citizen's life as it claims in Prussia. The question for the Germans is not simply a religious one; it is a question whether two sets of functionaries shall be tolerated within the empire—one obeying orders from a foreign potentate, which may direct him, under the most awful sanctions, to disobey the sovereign to whom he pays his taxes. To apply the term persecution to the solution of such a problem is an abuse of language. What the German government says to the bishops through recent legislation is substantially this: "I do not care what creed you profess; worship what, or how, or where you will. I will see that you are protected in doing so. But no German citizen shall be compelled to remain in your communion longer than he pleases; if he chooses to leave you, he shall not suffer for it in mind, body, or estate, but may set up another church if he likes, which in my eyes shall be as sacred and respectable as yours. If any member of your church makes himself amenable to church discipline, the penalties inflicted on him must be purely ecclesiastical—that is, you must not, in seeking to punish him, seek to injure him in his local and political relations. If any priest offends his bishop, you may still fine or rebuke him, or you may fine or imprison him, but not unless the priest chooses to submit; and no penalty of this character may be inflicted until the civil authorities have approved of it, and a priest may always appeal to the local courts when the ecclesiastical courts have not done him justice." The only other point on which the Church has complained is the requirement of a university training from the candidates for orders before their entrance to the Catholic divinity school; but there are two answers to her on this point. In the first place, this requirement is not new. It has already prevailed in Austria and all the rest of Germany, and was enforced in Austria so long ago as the time of Joseph II., and the universities all have Catholic theological chairs, which the bishops control and which the student may attend if he pleases. In fact, this feature in the Falk laws has been in force in Prussia ever since 1848, and has been applicable to the clergy of all denominations; but since 1855 the Catholic clergy have managed to evade it, so that the recent enactment is only to bring them back to their obedience, under altered circumstances which make that obedience more necessary than ever.

Of the final issue of the struggle there is nothing in the history of the Church to cause any doubt. Bismarck cannot reduce the number of Catholic believers, or really invade the domain of conscience, properly so-called, by any legislation he could resort to; but he can compel Catholic priests and laymen to discharge the same duties towards the State as the rest of the community, or to refrain from all acts and omissions which would place them in a different category, politically, from their fellow-citizens; and he asks nothing now which both priests and laymen have not in other countries cheerfully submitted to when they found there was no help for it. There is, in fact, a wide tract of debatable ground in the matter of discipline which the Church reserves for purposes of compromise and negotiation, and on which she keeps all she can, but yields what she must. If the State is weak and pliant, she calls God to witness that she needs every inch of it for the proper discharge of her lofty functions, and that she is ready to suffer for it, if need be, as she has suffered in the days of Domitian and Diocletian. But when threats and debates have proved fruitless, and she sees that the police are coming to remove her baggage, she smiles blandly, and declares that the matter is of small consequence; that she has never flourished more than when the clergy had to hide in caves, and the Pope was in jail, and that if the State chooses to be exacting she will resign herself and hope for better days.—Nation.

THE Manufacturer and Builder details the results of some curious experiments as to the destructive influence of molecular action on buildings. The experiments were suggested by phenomena noticed by Prof. Horsford in connection with the dropping of a pendulum from the centre of the top to the floor of Bunker Hill Monument; the plummet indicating an inclination to the west in the morning, to the north at noon, and to the east in the afternoon. These movements were, it was observed, most strongly marked on sunshiny days, and were traced to the expansion of the side of the structure affected by the sun's heat. Guided by these observations, tests have been recently applied to measure the influence of molecular action on the dome of the Capitol at Washington; and the variations of a plummet suspended from the centre of the dome or rotunda were noted. The instrument was found to describe a daily elliptical curve from west to east, of which the longest diameter varied with the intensity of the heat, but was at its maximum half a foot. The variations of Bunker Hill Monument were not noticed accurately, but must have been less than at the dome of the Capitol, as the latter is composed of iron, which expands more than stone with the heat. Professor Henry, of the Smithsonian Institute, finds in this molecular action one of the most destructive agencies of time; but the facts are principally of importance to New Yorkers, in proving that buildings of mixed iron and stone (or brick)—that is with iron fronts and brick party walls—cannot be regarded as durable, owing to the difference in expansion by heat which subsists between the two materials.

Dr. L., of St. Louis, who is something of a wag, called on a colored Baptist minister, and propounded a few puzzling questions. "Why is it," said he, "that you are not able to do the miracles that the apostles did? They were protected against poisons, and all kinds of perils. How is it that you are not protected in the same way?" The colored brother responded promptly, "Don't know about that, Doctor. I s'pect I is. I have taken a mity sight of strong medicine from you doctors, and I is alive yet."

GOETHE said that man might as well seek to escape from his own shadow as superstition. Nevertheless, let us try.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE OLD GRAVEYARD:

DUNNOTAR, SCOTLAND.

BY GEN. D. C. MCCALLUM.

Fareweel, ye auld kirk wi' your graveyard a' roun,
Whaur for centuries lang, the deid hae slept soun,
Their Feuds are a' ended, the gay an' the sad,
Wi' little to tell wha was guid or wha bad.

There are covenant martyrs, laid a' in ae' grave,
The wark o' man's creeds, that can naebody save,
As history aye tells, frae ae' time tae anither,
That man for his creed, maun gang killin' his brither.

Nae religion in this, burnin' shame to them a',
Wha mak devils o' men, at the creed sticklers ca',
But God canna bless it, come from whaur it may,
The deil's i' the van, whate'er preachers may say.

We'er a' sinners at best, though they flaunt the black coat,
Wi' shinin' white neckercher round their plump throat,
Wi' theology's whip they would lash you and me,
But wha' gied them the richt? let them tell and we'll see.

Wi' a' their pretensions, they're only but men,
(That they a' hae their failins we vera weel ken),
I'll no say they're warse than the rest o' mankind,
But count their numbers an' fauts, they'll no fa' behind.

It's a' nonsense to talk o' salvation and grace,
Wi' red marks o' the deil on their hauns and their face;
They may just as weel tell us that dark is aye licht,
That the rays o' the sun are the blackness o' nicht.

The Maister has warned us tae shed nae man's blud,
His followers aye to be loving and guid,
For his law it is mercy, and vengeance aye wrang,
Aye protectin' the weak wi' the airm o' the strang.

O what folly it is to be fechten for creeds,
Maukin deils o' us a', for what naebody needs.
Love God and your neebor, be brither to a',
And what's mair than that, ye may fling tae the wa'.

My dear fellow-sinners, tak' thaov' words no amiss,
When conscience peeps out, ye'll surely find this,
That your wrangles are food for sly infidel sneers,
That should mak' angels weep—drench religion in tears.

All hail, pure religion! we bow at thy shrine,
For thou art unsullied, eternal, divine.
Though mortals have scarred thee with stain upon stain,
The soul's brightest hope, thou must ever remain.

To defend thee 'gainst those, who assume thy bright star,
As mere cover to envy, contention, and war,
Can never defame thee, this is said to their shame
Who neglect thy deep counsils, and sully thy name.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 1.

Orrin Cornish, 75 cents; E. P. Wilder, $2.10; R. S. Perrin, $3; Henry E. Möring, $3; Mary P. Rhoades, $3; S. S. Blitz, $5; W. L. Heberling, $1.50; T. B. Collins, $3; Joseph Barnes, $1; S. E. Sewall, $6.20; M. E. Morse, $3.20; Wm. Rotch, $20; Emil Braeckman, 40 cents; Lyman Clarke, 25 cents; J. G. Whyte, $1; D. F. Henderson, $2; H. F. Butterfield, 25 cents; Samuel Fieldon, 35 cents; Eliza Wright, $100; W. T. Lewis, $1.15; S. R. Honey, 60 cents; R. M. Sherman, 75 cents; J. J. Vertrees, 80 cents; F. E. Abbot, $100; A. K. Loring, 20 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY, 6, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANK
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
England, Editorial Contributors.

NOTICE.

The Fourth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held in Toledo, Ohio, at No. 35 Monroe Street, on Saturday, June 5, 1875, at 2 o'clock P. M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

LIBERAL LEAGUE NOTICE.

A public meeting of the Boston Liberal League will be held at Investigator Hall (Paine Memorial Building), Friday evening, May 7, at 7:30 P. M., for the annual election of officers, and for the consideration of a proposal made by the Philadelphia Liberal League, to join in holding a delegate Convention of all existing Liberal Leagues in that city, at the Centennial Exhibition in 1876—a proposal which will doubtless excite great interest among liberals all over the country. Good speakers are expected to address the meeting on Friday evening, and a large attendance is earnestly desired.

Per order of the Executive Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, President.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The eighth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston as follows:—

May 27th, 7½ P. M. Session in Horticultural Hall (Lower) for business and for free discussion on the objects and work of the Association.

May 28th. Two sessions in Beethoven Hall (Washington Street, near Boylston), at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M. for essays and addresses. Essay at the morning session, by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Forces in Religion."

Essay at the afternoon session, by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion."

Addresses will follow each essay, the speakers to be announced hereafter.

Friday evening, May 28th, there will be a social festival in Parker Memorial Hall, Berkeley Street, for brief speeches, music, refreshments, conversation, and for subscription to the funds of the Association.

It is hoped that as many of the members and friends of the Association as possible will be present at this annual meeting. Members who cannot be present are hereby reminded of the annual subscription fee, which it is desired they should send to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

IN THE article of J. H. C. on "More of the 'Main Business,'" in last week's INDEX, last line but one of the section numbered "4," a comical typographical error occurred which it would be cruel not to correct—"faint forest adornings" for "faint foreshadowings"! No doubt the reader got lost in the woods at that point.

A MINNESOTA correspondent calls our attention to the fact that the Sunday School Advocate, the North-Western Christian Advocate, and the Berean Question Book, all issued with the sanction and authority of the Methodist Episcopal Church, publish scriptural selections for daily use under a false order of the days of the week, which is calculated to make Sunday appear as the seventh day instead of the first, and thus indirectly foster the false belief that the Sabbatical passages of the Bible apply to Sunday. This uncandid misplacement of the day, as our correspondent intimates with caustic wit, was made "on the Oakes Ames plan of placing it where they thought it would 'do the most good.'"

SHOOTING ROUND A CORNER.

The exchanges which come to THE INDEX office accumulate so rapidly that they do not get attended to very regularly; and large piles of them often collect before we can get an opportunity even to glance them over. In this way articles not infrequently escape notice in these columns that would otherwise promptly receive it. One of these is the following from the Golden Age of March 27, which nevertheless calls for comment:—

A stockholder in the Index Association, who is also an active member of the Free Religious Association, writes to us: "I think you are quite right in maintaining that THE INDEX has been anything but a benefit to the Free Religious Association, however much good it may have done in other ways. The weekly appearance of the paper has arrested public attention far more than the occasional conventions of the Association; and hence the Association has had fixed upon it an anti-Christian attitude which it never assumed for itself. It was surely intended to be wider, not narrower, than other organizations, and to include the liberal men of all communions. It is but fair to say that any misconception is not, however, due to Mr. Abbot, who has been consistent in his course, and has endeavored to be fair. It is rather due to the mistake made by the other leaders of the Free Religious Association, who should have foreseen that he would not prove a suitable man to represent the breadth of the movement, however well he might represent its force and energy. Such a task required a man of broad sympathies and judicial habit of mind, able and desirous to recognize and represent the varying shades of opinion, without sacrificing his own individuality. Such an attitude is not only foreign to the whole nature of the editor of THE INDEX, but it awakens his distrust and suspicion. He is a John Knox or Jean Ziska, born, unluckily for him, in an era of good feeling and growing toleration. He is obliged to choose between rowing with the current of toleration or looking for an eddy to row against. In the proposed 'Christian Amendment' he finds the eddy, so he rows with desperate vigor against it, hugging the shore, and mourning over the cowardice of those who 'prefer to pull with the main stream.'"

Although the authorship of these criticisms is not given by the Golden Age, we propose to consider them here. But we regret that their author, whoever he or she may be, should have shrunk from sending them directly to these columns for publication, where they properly belong, and should have preferred to address them to the alien audience of a paper which has no concern whatever with the question whether THE INDEX helps or hurts the Free Religious Association,—being unfriendly to them both. There was no cause for any such timidity; and we do our best to rectify the mistake by giving these strictures prominence before the constituency to which we are responsible. Whatever faults we may fall into in the conduct of this journal, we have no wish to hide them from our readers; let them be pointed out and rebuked here, with such severity as they may deserve, in the very columns where they have been committed. It is a singular proceeding to bring an indictment against us in Kamschatka; let the case be tried before the Index Association and THE INDEX constituency, which alone can exercise moral jurisdiction in the premises. If we have so conducted the journal which they have entrusted to our discretion and conscientiousness as to injure the cause of Free Religion to which it is devoted, then we are directly responsible to them; and it was not a very brave or manly thing to bring this suit before any other court—anonously at that—where we cannot be heard in self-defence.

Now for the facts.

1. THE INDEX was originally proposed and started by two public-spirited gentlemen of Toledo, who were not members of the Free Religious Association, and made no reference to it whatever when they requested us to edit the new journal. The latter was put into our hands without any restrictions or directions, to make of it the best organ we could for such truth as we had to utter. Such noble confidence commanded fidelity. Being one of the original founders of the Free Religious Association, which we loved and cherished as a most important agency for the dissemination of Free Religion, and being now charged with the conduct of a weekly journal as another and independent agency for the dissemination of Free Religion, we proposed to put one page of the paper under the absolute editorial control of the Secretary of the Association, Mr. Potter; and this proposal was accepted by the Executive Committee, if we remember aright. The arrangement continued for a year, when it was unanimously considered advisable to dissolve the official connection, for the sake of adopting a better plan. Many of the officers of the Association became editorial contributors, on the express understanding that they were to be as absolutely free as the editor to utter their own individual thought, without any revision or censorship whatever on his part; and this arrangement has continued to the present day,—certainly with entire satisfaction on our part, and we believe also on theirs. It is thus plain that the Free Religious Association and THE INDEX have always been independent institutions established for the furtherance of a common cause,—neither of them presuming to exercise the least control over the other, or pretending to have been established for the "benefit" of the other. Whatever mistakes either may have made, the other has not the slightest responsibility for them. Yet there has always been the most cordial coöperation between these two independent institutions in the effort to advance their kindred objects; and THE INDEX is under the greatest obligation to the officers of the Free Religious Association, as individuals, for long-continued, unremunerated, and most valuable editorial assistance.

We repel, therefore, as intensely unjust to these generous friends of THE INDEX, the insinuation that they have been guilty of any possible "mistake," no matter what unwisdom, narrowness, or Quixotism we may personally be chargeable with. "Should have foreseen"! Perhaps they did foresee that some other editor would do much better; they certainly never told us they did not. But what could they have done about it? The Free Religious Association is not responsible for the editorship of THE INDEX; that is the affair of the Index Association. Ought the former, in its "foresight," to have ousted us—served an injunction on us, like the Supreme Court of New Hampshire? Ought it to have tinkered the defective mechanism of our brain, in order to fill THE INDEX with the soft-custard of "broad sympathies" instead of with the strong meat of broad ideas? The only "mistake" that the contributing officers of the Free Religious Association—Frothingham, Higginson, Potter, Hallowell, Mrs. Cheney—could possibly have made was that of contributing to these columns at all; and we do not see how their omission to contribute would have prevented the "weekly appearance of the paper," to which our anonymous critic attributes the mischief he deplors. We should certainly have lost support that has been of priceless value and encouragement to us; but THE INDEX would still have been devoted to Free Religion—still have been avowedly anti-Christian—and still (worst of all) have appeared once a week! And we protest against the shallowness, the rapidity, the injustice of this charge against our friends that they are directly or indirectly responsible for any evil that we have done, or have been guilty of any "mistake" whatever in not placing some other steersman at the helm of THE INDEX—a duty which does not devolve on the Free Religious Association. Let any injurious "misconception" be charged directly home upon our own "narrowness," or what not; but the absurdity and wrongfulness of laying the blame of our sins on the shoulders of those who could not possibly prevent them are too glaring to be passed over without notice.

2. But THE INDEX, we maintain, is a thousand times broader than it could be on the plan above suggested. To represent the "breadth of the movement," THE INDEX gives the fairest of all opportunities for each "varying shade of opinion" to represent itself; which is infinitely more broad and generous than for an editorial chameleon, attempting himself to represent all opinions, to be "all things by turns and nothing long." If any opinion goes unrepresented in this journal, let the disgrace of that fact rest on those who are too sluggish or too little interested to defend their own convictions: we decline to bear a particle of it.

Providence, we notice, is on the side of the strongest arguments, as well as the strongest battalions. Unless the anti-Christian is the true attitude of Free Religion, all the weeklies and all the dailies in Christendom cannot make it long appear so. There is no use in whining over a supposed "anti-Christian attitude fixed upon the Association" by words of ours; we must fail and are whistling against the wind, if our words are false. Prove the truth by stronger words, if we are in the wrong; or else be ashamed to utter childish and frivolous complaints because we obey the higher law to utter what we believe, without trying to "represent" opinions which have not vitality or vigor enough to represent themselves. It is breadth of ideas that is wanted above all else; the only way to make a journal represent any movement broadly is to make it represent all its ideas; and the only way to make it represent all its ideas is to give them free scope to represent themselves. Ideas which flit like bats between night and day, and refuse to come out into the sunlight of open conference, are not truths but confusions; and the world soon finds that out. When THE INDEX offers a "fair field and no favor" for all opinions, it makes itself the broadest possible representative of the Free Religious movement; the visionary phantom of an editor who should gush impartially in all directions, with a magnificent effusion of "broad sympathies" that signified nothing but narrow and confused ideas, is as "broad" as a sea-fog—and as thin.

Suppose THE INDEX should undertake to prove that Free Religion was an improved species of Ritualism, or any other thesis as untrue: would it be able to "fix a Ritualistic attitude on the Free Religious Association," even if it should be published, not once a week, but once in every five minutes? Of course not. If an "anti-Christian attitude" either is or can be "fixed on the Free Religious Association," we counsel the discontented to hunt for its cause, not in any supposed influence of THE INDEX, but in the very nature of the principles which the Free Religious Association represents by its Constitution—Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. Whatever "broad sympathies" come in the train of Truth, we would greet with delight and cherish with joy; but all such as would thrust themselves in the way of Truth or hinder her triumphant advance, we would treat as Ulysses treated the Syrens, and stop our ears to their melodious but destructive lullabies. That "breadth" is shallowness and superficiality itself which builds on an attempt to deny or conceal the natural and ineradicable differences of things, or on a sentimental yearning to cry "peace, peace" between Christianity and Free Religion when Truth sternly declares that there is no peace.

3. One short word about the Christian Amendment "eddy." Whoever imagines that it is our being's end and aim merely to oppose this fanatical project has read THE INDEX with a sealed eye and dormant understanding. It is our aim, so far, as the public work of Radicalism is concerned, to sow the seeds of a general popular movement to fulfil the great American ideal of a Republic absolutely free from the Church; and, as a means to this end, to familiarize the public mind with the just "Demands of Liberalism" and the catholic "Religious Freedom Amendment." In this effort we are "pulling with the main stream" of all American history,—nay, of all modern progress; and, it is sheer obtuseness to confound this effort with any "eddy" whatever. It is our work to "pull with the main stream," and not, as our anonymous critic would apparently do, lie on our oars and float idly upon it.

4. It is the foundation principle of the Free Religious Association, without which it could not exist a day, that each member shall speak for himself or herself alone, be uncommitted by the utterances of any other member, and be responsible neither to the Association nor to its individual members for anything that he or she may say. This principle we have been scrupulously faithful to, as all our readers will bear witness, disclaiming all pretence or wish to represent the Association in any position of our own, and protecting all its members with even superfluous care from all responsibility for what we may say or do. But the author of these anonymous criticisms shows all through them that he neither understands nor trusts this principle. He (or she) assumes that individual words or deeds of ours can compromise or commit the Association as such, and give it a reputation it does not deserve. If this is true, it ought to disband to-morrow, being built on an impracticable idea. If it cannot permit us, or any other member, to plead our individual convictions with all the force and by all the means at our command, without being itself compromised a particle thereby,—if it has not confidence enough in the great principle of individual freedom which it guarantees by its Constitution to remain serene and self-poised, no matter what may be said individually by its members either on or off its platform,—if there is no protection for some of its members against being dragged into false positions by other members who have only spoken their individual thought in public,—then the Free Religious Association is a total failure, and does but cumber the ground. But all this is quite otherwise. There is no need of these complaints. THE INDEX and its editor might commit blunders, advocate follies, and talk nonsense till doomsday, without affecting the Free Religious Association in the least degree. That Association will be held to take no position not manifestly expressed or implied in its own Constitution; and it would be wise for all the members to rest peacefully in that conclusion.

In fine, if there is anything in this article which is not true and unanswerable, we hereby invite our anonymous critic to drop his or her disguise, and publish a refutation of it in these columns. Whatever may be sent shall appear here in good faith, without change of a word. And with this invitation we rest our case.

CALLING THINGS BY THE RIGHT NAME.

The members of the "Third Congregational (Unitarian) Church," of New York City, signalized their occupation of a new, spacious, and beautiful hall by a unanimous vote, passed on the 14th of April, to change their corporate title to that of the "Independent Liberal Church": the word church being retained as descriptive of a religious, in distinction from a political, philosophical, or philanthropic society. The church was organized in 1860, and incorporated under the name "Unitarian" in deference to the wishes of the majority of its friends, who, being affiliated with Unitarianism and desirous of Unitarian support, were opposed to the adoption of the less denominational name "Liberal Christian," which was advocated by the minority. The adopted name was never descriptive of the theological position of the society. The preacher paid no regard to it whatever; the old members outgrew it; new members did not so much as know what it was. For several years the sign announcing the services, at the doorway to Lyric Hall, has borne the inscription, "Independent Society"; and the Sunday advertisements have kept before the public eye the same designation. The original name was covered and put out of sight by the avowed opinions of the people.

Soon after the organization of the National Conference of Unitarian churches, at the formation of the local conferences, the pastor formally withdrew from the sectarian connection, on the ground that he could not sympathize with it in its views, purposes, or operations; could not ask his society to participate in devices and actions he did not approve of, and could not pretend, even by silence, to belong to a body he could not work with. His name, however, was allowed to stand in the list of Unitarian ministers, partly on account of pleasant associations, partly on account of the real breadth of Unitarian fellowship, which was personally as warm and wide as could be desired; and partly that this breadth of fellowship might be preserved, perhaps increased. Discourteous hints and innuendoes, charges of inconsistency and even of hypocrisy made by Unitarian organs compelled him at length, about a year ago, to request that his name should be erased from the ministerial list, which was done. But the society was still, and properly too, reckoned among the Unitarian churches of New York; and might have remained so still, had not the new departure rendered necessary a new statement of principles for the information of strangers who might be attracted to the place of worship for the first time.

The recent vote removes all inconsistencies, and places the society where it belongs, making its name correspond with its spirit. Henceforth, it is no more responsible for Unitarianism; and, what seems to me of quite as much importance, Unitarianism is no more responsible for it. All is done that can be done to relieve ministers and churches from the reproach of unpopular opinions, to clear our fame of all suspicions of dishonesty, and to secure our own absolute independence. The new name not only relieves the society from sectarian limits as these are commonly understood, but also from formal associations with any special religion, and commits it to the broadest conceivable fellowship with religious people of whatever denomination. The name embodies the ideas of Free Religion in their full scope and spirit: a point that would probably never have been reached, had the name "Liberal Christian" been assumed at the outset.

There is a great deal in a name. Names are things. In spite of all efforts to the contrary, the name "Unitarian," like the pea which the "real princess" felt through the seven mattresses and seven featherbeds, caused perpetual irritation, and disturbed our intellectual content. The spectres that haunted other minds flitted about, to mar our peace. The necessity of keeping an ear half open to the inquiries or complaints of captious people interfered with the close attention our principles demanded. Now we can call ourselves what we are, and can become what we call ourselves. And if our ideas do not prevail, the fault cannot be ascribed to false colors.

O. B. F.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Mrs. E. D. Cheney's letter in THE INDEX of March 18 on "The Religious Condition of the Negro" leads me to make a few observations upon this subject, as I have lived much among the negroes in Jamaica. I witnessed their final emancipation in 1838, and about twenty years afterwards I worked among them in my clerical capacity.

I can heartily indorse what Mrs. Cheney says of their capacity to receive and understand the simple truths of rational religion, and their readiness to accept the teaching of any one who has gained their confidence by kind and upright treatment of them.

But, whatever the negro may hereafter develop into, at present he is in the condition (mentally) of a child. He is, in fact, far too receptive and too little sceptical to be treated as a full-grown man; and those to whom his religious and other education is intrusted incur a perilous responsibility, inasmuch as he will swallow anything and everything set before him as spiritual food with a childlike greediness.

On this ground, the negro is especially exposed to the influences of superstition, which has for him a far greater attraction than for the average European.

I remember how the negroes delighted in being manipulated by the clergy. If a woman by chance dropped off her wedding-ring, she must needs come to the parson to have it put on again. They would come up over and over again for confirmation, if they could do so without detection; and it required a sharp eye to prevent them kneeling twice and three times at the same celebration to partake of the bread and wine. If by any pretext they could get the clergyman to "do something" to them or for them, they would chuckle and giggle over it with childish glee, believing in their superstitious fears that they were the recipients of a charm, and yet fairly tickled by the fun and excitement of the ceremony.

Except at a funeral I have never seen a negro weep in any religious service. Amusement seemed to me to be the uppermost feeling which it would excite. Yet they knew how to behave, and were quite like gentlemen in their outward respect for the solemnity of the occasion. The signs of glee were with difficulty and with manifest effort suppressed.

Never can it be too deeply regretted that the poor African, on leaving his native forests peopled with demons and devils, was brought at once into contact with the Christian religion, which was only a step or two in advance of his own, and which had, in its own doctrine of devils, the counterpart of the horrible demonology in which he had been reared.

The negroes, naturally timid, because in a state of mental childhood, had all their fears aggravated, and not relieved and pacified, by the Christian dogmas relating to everlasting fire, and the devil and his angels; and I do not hesitate to say that the prevailing cowardice of the negro character has been immensely developed by the religion on which he has been fed—or poisoned—by the races which have made him their slave.

But such is their sweet native simplicity and trustfulness that they will gladly believe better things on the authority of those whom they love and revere. I will give you an anecdote which is typical, and which I could repeatedly match.

I was living at the bottom of a gorge in St. Andrew's Parish in Jamaica, and the "road" up out of it to the town was little better than a goat-track through a dense wood, exceedingly precipitous, and so dangerous for even horsemen to ascend, that my English friends who sometimes wanted to take the short cut would call at my house to beg for a lantern and a guide. Of course to the negro there was no more peril in it than to the four-footed denizens of the forest. A very pressing bit of business compelled me to send a letter to the bishop at the town above us; and it so chanced that my man-servant and boy were away, and my horse had long since been turned loose for the night and was grazing a mile or two off in the wood. There was nothing for it but to send one of the maids, whose own home was in the town, and who knew every inch of the way in total darkness.

On asking her to take the letter to the bishop there and then, about 8.30 P. M., she trembled all over and turned as pale as negroes can with manifest fear. I said, "What is the matter? Are you afraid of losing your way? Are you afraid of meeting any one to harm you? Are you afraid of falling over the cliff?" etcetera, all of which were possible dangers. After a great deal of hesitation, the poor girl said, "Massa, me 'fraid ob de debil."

You may be sure I did not laugh, feeling much more ready to cry, or to swear [with indignation against her teachers. I spoke thus: "Elizabeth, my good girl, look at me. I will tell you no lie. Assure as I believe in God above, I know there is no devil anywhere. The only spirit you will ever meet is a good spirit, and God will take care of you. The story of the devil is a wicked lie. I don't care where you read it, it is false, and there is nothing in the wood to harm you but snakes and wild cats; and you are not afraid of these, I suppose?" The poor girl laughed through her tears, and said she would go. She went alone, and in the dark, refusing a lantern, and brought me back the needed reply. She bounded in with a smiling face, and said she had not been a bit afraid, and that she would never believe in the devil again.

But this was because she had unbounded confidence in me, and thought I spoke for God. I shudder at the cruelty which has resulted, and may yet result, from the abuse of this awful power over the minds and hearts of our fellow-creatures.

I fear it will be long enough before the negro can dispense with his clerical guide and director, and rise to the dignity of manhood and think for himself.

Meanwhile, it behooves all who love the race to rush in between them and their false teachers, and, assuming for once the prophetic fire, denounce in God's name the lying myths which beget and deepen fear, and speak peace to their afflicted souls.

They need so manifestly both guidance and control that, if we do not give it them, they must fall an easy prey before the Roman Catholic system, which, with all its faults, nevertheless consistently does its duty, and makes its bondage a reality and not a mere idle pretence.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S. E., April 12, 1875.

Literary Notices.

THE STREETER METHOD OF VOICE BUILDING. By Dr. Horace R. Streeter. Boston: 1875.

Radicalism extends itself through all departments of life, and is to be found in the different methods for musical instruction as well as in religious and scientific works.

Contradictory assertions from numerous authorities prove to us that accurate statements are needed, and that a more logical method of voice-building is imperatively demanded. While these authorities have honestly advocated their opinions, it is impossible that all their deductions can be correct; and, when we reflect that this is preëminently an age of revolution, we can be sure that this subject will prove no exception. Taking absolute, demonstrable mechanical law as a foundation, this method leads pupils logically and practically to form and develop the human voice as an instrument.

The act of singing is not usually one of intelligence on the part of vocalists; they being governed more by intuition than by the intelligent direction of the organs employed in singing. False intonation, disagreeable tones, and erratic movements result from this lack of knowledge. Dr. Streeter does not propose, in this work, to teach the art of singing, but explains how to develop and acquire the mechanical movements of breathing, sounding, locating, and articulating for singing or elocutionary purposes.

Perhaps the most radical claim to be found in this work is that there are not different registers in the human voice. Molineux asserted that there were three registers in every voice. Lablache taught that "the female voice has three registers, while the male voice has but two; and that bass voices should be developed through one register only." Bassini taught that "male voices, without exception, should be cultivated through one register," etc., etc. Dr. Streeter states that "quality of tone is independent of pitch, and this conclusion at once destroys the assumption that the human voice, as an instrument, breaks into a greater or less number of parts, or that there are any number of registers in that instrument."

So new a position as this creates antagonism or favor, as the case may be; but facts and an experience of more than thirty years with the application of known mechanical law enable the author to prove satisfactorily that which he claims as the correct method.

Progressive exercises are given, simple but comprehensive, for the location of tones, increase of compass and power, etc. A careful reading of this book suggests much that is new, and appeals to the reason; and we would urge all who are interested in musical progress to devote time and thought to the original position which is assumed by Dr. Streeter, and which he illustrates in a clear, concise, scientific, and practical form.

C.

"COME and hear me preach," said Bishop Horsley to Thurlow. "No," returned the Lord Chancellor, with his usual expletives; "no; I hear you talk nonsense enough in the House, where I can contradict you, and I do; but I'll be—(insert any participle you please) if I come and listen to you where I can't." In fact if there be any position in the world which gives a man unlimited temporary authority over the ears of his fellow-creatures, it is the occupation of a pulpit.

COLERIDGE says, "He who begins by loving Christianity better than truth, will proceed by loving his own sect or church better than Christianity, and end by loving himself better than all."

Communications.

SOUTHERN NOTES.

TAXING CHURCH PROPERTY.

The official journal of this State and city, the New Orleans Republican, is as earnest a champion for "Equal Taxation and No Exemption" as THE INDEX itself. Its occasional editorials on the subject are directly to the point, and will, I trust, ere long educate the people up to some action.

In its last reference to the subject the Republican says:—

The exemption of church property from taxation leads to the aggrandizement of the Church, which is not desirable in this country. Too much of that is seen in Italy, where the Church grows continually richer and the people poorer. The plea of benevolence is not a good one. Even if a church could be considered benevolent, its property should not escape tax for such a reason. The principle applied to individual cases would exempt any charitable man or woman from paying taxes. A church may go on always begging, buying, and building, never selling. It has no deaths or successions to divide and waste its substance. It comes in competition, to its own advantage, with real estate owners struggling under the burden of assessments, and trying to do the fair thing. It can rent cheaper because it pays nothing; and, because it pays nothing, it adds to the amount which liberal men must pay, because they are not charitable corporations. It also makes a vast difference to the poor, whose taxes are not their greatest grief. There could be better schools, and more money for improvements, and that is education and employment for all. The poor church in a fifteen-hundred dollar building would be all the richer if it paid a tax and made the Church occupying a cathedral worth a quarter of a million pay taxes also. The fact is, that all property should receive the protection and benefit of government and laws, and all property should be taxed for the maintenance of the safeguards. If any privileges accrue to realty owners in having or holding property, they should be shared according to values; the burdens of government should also be equitably divided, that they may more easily be borne. In any case, there is no reason why church property should be exempt from taxation.

There is a large Catholic element in this city and State, representing millions of dollars in property exempt from taxation.

A year ago, when some of this property was offered for rent for secular purposes, real estate owners seemed to wake up a little. For the first time some of them began to realize the unequal competition they were forced to meet. And, with the present rate of taxation, they are quite willing to look at a subject they formerly ignored.

"COMPULSORY EDUCATION."

A bill to this effect passed the Senate of this State a little more than a year ago by a vote of eighteen to ten, but failed to reach the House. The bill was bitterly assailed by the Democratic press of this State at the time, the Republican journals alone defending it. The bill was similar in its provisions to the one which passed the New York Legislature. The people here cannot say they do not understand the subject, for it has been ably presented by the Republican press. Mr. Hawkins' paper of a year ago was republished here, and last Sunday the larger portion of his address on "Our Sick Man" appeared in the Republican. Yet I regret to say that the Southern element as a whole do not take kindly to the free-school system.

Doubtless the Catholic element (largely conservative) contributes greatly to this feeling. They have several parochial schools, and of course protest against taxation for public schools. Senator Stewart's proposed amendment, referred to in Mr. Hawkins' last paper, is a move in the right direction.

School Superintendent Brown's report for 1874 shows 280,387 educable children in the State between six and twenty-one years of age, white and colored. The number enrolled in the public schools is 74,309. Cost per child per annum for tuition eleven dollars. In 1861 the number of educable children, all white, was 96,522, with 39,590 enrolled in the public schools. Cost per child then fifteen and one half dollars. Although there has been a gain in enrolment of nearly 17,000 children the past year, yet the above record shows that there are still over 200,000 children to be enrolled.

LIBERAL CHRISTIANS.

It may interest THE INDEX readers to hear a Southern definition of Liberal Christianity. I know not the author, but some one, over the signature "Observer," contributed the following to the New Orleans Bulletin a week or two ago:—

LIBERAL CHRISTIANS.

The views of the above-named class of Christians being very generally misunderstood, a few remarks in explanation thereof may probably prove serviceable. They recognize Jesus as the long-expected Messiah, confidently believing in the divinity of his mission and the infallible truth of all his declarations. They contend that he was eminently capable of furnishing all the information concerning the attributes of God and the duties of man that was needed, and did impart, most unqualifiedly, all such knowledge. Hence they claim that it would be absurd for them to heed certain conclusions presented by a body of men who were not his contemporaries, having been born in a subsequent century, and who were in every respect immeasurably inferior to him.

To recognize as reliable the dogmas emanating from the latter would, Liberal Christians think, be equivalent to an admission that those men were better qualified to elucidate truth than Jesus was. Those dogmas are not, however, rejected solely on account of their uselessness, but also, and no less emphatically, on the ground of being palpably subversive of the teachings of the Savior. While, however, entertaining the above-named convictions, Liberal Christians fully recognize the right and the duty of all holding different opinions, to retain or abandon them in obedience to the dictates of their own consciences.

The writer then refers to the organization here which consists principally of the old Unitarian society founded years ago by that sterling pioneer, Theodore Clapp.

"Observer" leaves us in doubt how far one can hold "different opinions" and still be accepted as a Liberal Christian. I think, at least, he might have told us whether the Year Book gauge had become sufficiently "nationalized" to apply South!

This society has a commodious building, called the "Church of the Messiah" (often called "Octagon Church," on account of its octagon shape), located in the central part of the city. Rev. D. M. Reed is their present pastor.

"THE NEW ORLEANS MONTHLY REVIEW."

Certainly the reviews of the land ought to be one of the educators of the people, and they are, in a great measure, when well conducted.

The following from the New Orleans Monthly Review will probably set the Boston and New York magazines all right, and make the latter ashamed of themselves that they have so long been in the fog of the subject of treason:—

The act of withdrawal of the seceding States was as solemn, formal, and voluntary, in every respect, as was their original accession to the Union; and, in both instances, was accomplished by virtue of their sovereignty, which has never, even to this moment, been surrendered. The result of their secession was not only that the Union of the States was sundered, but the government overthrown, and the constitution rendered inoperative, and ceased to be obligatory upon any of the States. Congress could no longer legally convene under the provisions of that instrument; its war-making power and all its functions were gone, and no United States, with its executive, legislative, and judicial departments of government any longer existed against which treason, the offence under consideration, could be committed.

The truth is, the late war was a war between the masses of people who composed the Northern States on one side, acting without right and without the authority of a legitimately organized government, and the Confederate States, with a regular government, against which as sovereign power treason could be committed on the other side. The object of the war was to overthrow the sovereignty of the Southern States and reduce them to the condition of conquered provinces, which the assailants were able to accomplish against all principles of American right by the force of overwhelming numbers. This was treason to the Southern States, and a violation of their rights as sovereign communities; nor was the treason diminished by the fact that in consequence of their defeat they were unable to punish the treason.

The moral is clear: "The North mustn't do it again."

A Western paper, commenting upon the article, says in substance that Mr. Whitaker, the editor of this Review, is a native of Massachusetts; but that, having apologized for his inadvertent birth in that State, his constituency have concluded to hold him blameless by reason of his minority at that period! How very considerate to this antediluvian carpet-bagger from Massachusetts! By the way, has the old Bay State any more of the above type to send down here? There is a class here who like that kind of logic; but how it is to add to their prosperity, or the growth of the State, I cannot yet see. But it should not be forgotten that there are two species of carpet-baggers in this State. One class having been sufficiently ventilated by the press, I thought it no more than fair to give the other an honorable mention.

W. F. P.

NEW ORLEANS La., March 30, 1875.

[The constant arrival of more guests than can squeeze into the little INDEX cottage at one time must be our apology for so many of them being a little late at table. These interesting "Southern Notes," however, are too good not to get a generous mouthful of public attention before going to bed in the garret!—Ed.]

THE "FREIE GEMEINDEN" CONVENTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—The last remark with which you accompany my communication, in your issue of April 22, regarding the proposed convention of the Freie Gemeinden at Philadelphia in 1876, induced me most emphatically to disavow in my own behalf, as well as in behalf of my co-religionists, any desire of maintaining or perpetuating any distinction of nationality among the co-workers for the cause of free humanity. No one can be more deeply impressed than we are with the conviction of the solidity of nations in the common contest against their oppressors in whatever guise; no one will be more willing or glad than we to merge our nationality as Germans into the brotherhood which ought to bind the various elements of this Union into one family, as soon as we shall see a possibility of so doing without sacrificing the leading idea for the realization of which we have associated, and the allegiance to which we could not well resign without renouncing the consciousness of our manhood; namely: "the practical assertion of the absolute supremacy of reason in all spheres of life, in contrast to the hitherto prevailing rule of dogmatism." But the necessity of organizing ourselves as Germans for the realization of this ideal was forced upon us by the fact of the isolated position in which we found ourselves with our convictions in this country of our adoption twenty years ago—a position which we held indeed as a forlorn hope even against the indifference of our German compatriots; in addition to which you must make some allowance for the practical difficulty involved in the difference of language which separates us from our Anglo-American countrymen.

Although, therefore, I for one would most heartily endorse your proposition of disregarding all distinction of nationality at the prospective Centennial Convention, yet I do not see how under present circumstances the practical difficulties for carrying out this proposition could be overcome. For this reason, and in order to make the Convention productive of the greatest possible good, and as a preparatory step toward laying the firm foundation of a comprehensive and enduring organization of all radical elements without distinction of nationality, I would bespeak some regard, on your part, as well as on the part of those who may take the initiative for preparing such a convention, for the special wishes of our German co-workers, so as to bring about a preliminary understanding with them as to time, locality, and other particulars of organization which may present themselves as requiring a mutual agreement for the sake of insuring the most successful results.

In conclusion, I will state that the special committee designated by the Executive Committee of our Union for maturing the plans for our Convention consists of the following gentlemen: Mr. Fr. Schünnemann Pott, of San Francisco (P. O. Box 1021), one of the Vice-Presidents of the Free Religious Association; Mr. Ed. Shröter, of Sauk City, Wis., late President of our union; and Dr. Carl Lüdke, of St. Louis, Mo. Asking your pardon for thus intruding upon your space,

I am, yours very sincerely,
A. Loos.
PHILADELPHIA, April 25, 1875.

[Any communication from Prof. Loos is heartily welcome here, of course, and needs no apology whatever. If the liberal Germans prefer to organize by themselves, we have not the slightest right to object, however we may regret being thus excluded by the mere accident of birth from working with them for principles which are just as precious to American-born citizens as to them. But we see no reason for believing that these principles would be imperilled in the slightest degree by dropping the word "German" altogether, and making the principles themselves the sole basis of organization. Prof. Loos would think it very narrow and exclusive, if the Free Religious Association (of which we are glad to say he is a member) should by its name or constitution restrict its membership to liberals of American birth; and it is our duty to say frankly that it seems to us just as narrow and exclusive when the Germans restrict membership in their liberal organizations to liberals of German birth. Sects of race are just as wrong in principle as sects of dogma. By adopting this race-sect policy, the liberal Germans lose all influence on the American-born public, and stand squarely in the way of the very principles which they have organized to promote. It is a great mistake to suppose that the German rationalists in this country are even as numerous as American-born rationalists; and the cause of pure and unadulterated rationalism would be greatly advanced, if all who are devoted to it could be united in one generous and whole-souled fellowship for its promotion. These things are thought; the Germans had better hear them from a cordial and sincere friend rather than from bitter and unjust opponents, and we should be equally sorry and surprised if Prof. Loos should consider them as said now in any other than the friendliest spirit.—Ed.]

DEATH-BED CONVERSIONS.

I put the morning paper aside with a slightly triumphant feeling. I had read all the editorials, and had found myself at last, for the first time in weeks, able to understand their scope and meaning. The April sun shone radiantly into the apartment, and I drew my easy-chair near the window to bask in its strengthening beams, which no longer irritated but cheered and solaced me. I was in that happy frame of mind which all who, like me, have been "down to the gates of death" for a time, and have with difficulty fought their way back to a sense of life and strength again, can appreciate and understand. I knew, this bright promise-filled morning, that I was not only to live, but to grow strong and well, and therefore happy again.

But a little cloud soon arose in my serene sky, and I fear hovered on my brow. The door-bell rang, and I was not yet so far reconciled to life's duties as to feel equal to meeting and chatting with common-place callers, come to congratulate me in set words on a recovery in which I knew they had very little interest. The cloud left my brow, however, when I saw Christine and Gloriana enter. Dissimilar as they are to each other and to me, yet they never jar upon any of my moods. Gloriana clasped my hands, and kissed me with her usual impulsiveness. Christine held out her hand shyly, and with a doubting look in her clear eyes.

"Are you angry with me—Christine?" she said, "too angry to welcome me?"

"Why should I be angry with you?" I asked in surprise.

"Then you are not," she said, with a look of relief. "But really, you know, you answered me so sharply when, thinking you past all human aid and urged, dear, by my true regard for you, I ventured to ask if I might intercede with the dear Father in your behalf, that even thus at the eleventh hour you might be accepted, that I fancied I had angered you past forgiveness; and when Gloriana asked me to accompany her here this morning, I did so with many misgivings as to my reception."

As she spoke, there came to me a faint remembrance, like one dreamt out among the world of dreams in which I had lived for a few dark days, of the occasion to which she referred.

"What answer did I make you—for I cannot remember?" I asked. "Rest assured I did not mean to answer you so sharply as to make you doubt my friendship, Christine."

"Oh, it was not so much what you said as the tone in which you said it, the angry look that came into your eyes, which before looked dull and dim. You seemed to rouse yourself out of your lethargic state by a strong effort of will, and spoke with a stronger, louder voice than I thought you capable of. You said, 'As I have lived, so will I die—don't dare to try to make me appear inconsistent. I want no Christian prayers.' And Christine's fair face flushed, as she repeated my words.

"Dear me, Amie!" laughed Gloriana, "but you must have been savage! Lucky for me I didn't offer you any religious consolation or advice! The thought did once or twice cross my mind that I ought to say something of the kind to you, as a sort of pious penance to myself—something to fall back upon in case that mythical day of judgment should ever actually occur; but, not being quite clear in my own mind as to what I did or did not believe, I couldn't see my way clear to talk to a pagan like you about what I didn't understand. If there is a heaven, even such a heaven as Miss Phelps faintly outlines in her Gates Ajar, I wanted to meet you as well as Christine there; and (will you believe it?) I comforted myself with the old doggerel rhyme:—

"Betwixt the saddle and the ground,
She mercy sought and mercy found."

I liked to think that in spite of your avowed unbelief some way would be devised by infinite wisdom by which you could be saved."

"And you, Christine?" I asked. "Did your stricter belief and better-defined theology give you any room for hope after that outburst of mine?"

"Don't ask me," she said, her serious face growing pale; "I knew God's mercy was great—but you shocked me beyond words by what I considered your dying disavowal of belief, and I was in great darkness. I can only thank God for his tender mercy in giving you a longer lease of life in which to become convinced of the error of your ways."

"Believe me, Christine, that it was not you against whom my ire was aroused in that which I felt to be my dying hour; it was rather against the proselytizing spirit of Orthodox Christianity, which has ever been on the alert to take advantage of the moments of supreme physical and intellectual weakness to entrap unwary minds into implied, if not outspoken, acceptance of its doctrines and dogmas, and in case of their death hold them up in triumph to the world as examples of the victory of Christianity over so-called false doctrines. Great stress is laid by the Christian church—wrongly, according to my view—upon the dying words of both saints and sinners, as if the death hour were usually the hour of greatest mental light and brilliance instead of being, as we know it to be in the majority of cases, the hour of greatest intellectual as well as physical weakness. I have always (always since I stepped outside of Christianity, at least) been afraid that advantage might be taken in this way of me, and I determined to guard against it if possible. So, when you asked me the question you did, I suppose that this fear came back to me with its full force, and I desperately gathered what little remnant of energy was left me to answer you emphatically, once for all, and in a manner which should leave no doubt as to my meaning."

"But why should you be 'afraid' to be made to appear to accept Christianity in your dying hour," asked Gloriana thoughtfully, "since you profess to be so well-grounded in your disbelief of its teachings? Excuse my plainness of speech, Amie, but that confession of 'fear' on your part looks to me, an earnest inquirer, like a tacit admittance that you have still some lurking doubt as to whether the Christian scheme of salvation may not after all be true; and your 'fear' is that you may be forced to confess it in the face of your protestations against it."

There was a triumphant, assured look in Christine's eyes that told me that Gloriana's question was also her thought.

"You are mistaken as to the source of my fear," I replied. "But I understand human weakness, and am conscious that I am not exempt from it. I do not forget that I was brought up in the strictest Orthodox faith, nor that the blood of Christian martyrs flows in my veins, transmitted through generations of rigid believers in the Christian faith; and my fear has been that my old habit of thought and my inborn Orthodoxy might, under temptation or dictation in case of great physical weakness, assert themselves in contradiction of my normal self, and so I might be led to acquiesce in, if not crave, the solaces and consolations which Christianity offers. I think it cruel and cowardly on the part of the Church that these death-bed conversions are not only sanctioned by it, but gloried in, and held up as its triumphs over infidelity."

"But you confess that Christianity has 'solaces and consolations' to offer at this hour," said Christine.

"What we have been taught to believe such, and what in the uncritical state to which a death-bed brings us might from force of habit be accepted as such; but in the full possession of my intellectual powers I cannot find much consolation or solace in them."

"But your bare Materialism, as I understand it, brings not even a shadow of solace or consolation in such an hour," remarked Gloriana. "Tell me, Amie, what then did give you courage in that hour when we thought you so near death—courage to throw from you all Christian sources of strength?"

"In my own individual case, as I have no doubt it is also with many others, I was too weak and suffering to care to cope with theologic questions. I was quite willing to drift into the Beyond, whatever came of it, so that I got rest. As I did not believe in the heaven or hell of Christianity, I had no fear of entering in upon the monotonous and tiresome glories of the one, nor feared the savage torments of the other. Death had no distinct fears for me. I dreaded only the pain of dying, and even in regard to that

I felt as Robert Browning expresses himself in his Prospice:—

"Fear Death? To feel the fog in my throat,
The mist in my face,
When the snows begin and the blasts denote
I am nearing the place,
The power of the night, the press of the storm,
The post of the foe
Where he stands, the Arch Fear, in a visible form,
Yet the strong man must go;
For the journey is done and the summit attained,
And the barriers fall,
Though a battle's to fight ere the guerdon be gained,
The reward of it all.
I was ever a fighter, so—one fight more,
The best and the last!
I would hate that death bandaged my eyes, and forbore,
And bade me creep past."

"Ah, well!" sighed Christine, as she rose to go, "if I may not pray with you, I can at least pray for you."

"Well, pray, then, that, if I am to be converted at all, it may be in strength and health; otherwise I, for one, shall have serious doubts in regard to the reality and sincerity of the change."

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

THORNDIKE, Mass.

DO WOMEN DESIRE THE BALLOT?

MR. ABBOT:—

A correspondent—"T. M. C."—in THE INDEX of March 25, essays a review of my article on woman suffrage which was printed in your columns of February 11. This critic has misread, certainly misunderstood, my argument. I quote from "T. M. C.":

"He tells us that men 'are almost to a man qualified to vote understandingly, and would speak, if at all, for good government and good morals. If women were voters, this class would ever be very much larger among them than among men. Thus the aggregate effect would be very bad.'"

This is a misstatement of my position, and not the only one in said review. Now let "T. M. C." please read my paper again, and carefully, and then criticize what I have said as sharply as he pleases,—it will not hurt, for we are all anxious to discover truth,—and may be he will convince me that I am in error. I will not ask for room in THE INDEX to specify all his mistakes in quoting and interpreting my language. Let him indicate the exact place to find that "most vital clause of the Constitution of our country—TAXATION WITHOUT REPRESENTATION." I do not find it in my copy of the Constitution, and I never before heard of its being in. Here is a chance for home missionary work, to enlighten a heathen who entertains such a "low estimate of the sex." Mistaken again. I assure you I feel too tenderly for the "sex" to drag them into the arena of politics against their will. It would come to this at last,—that women would generally recognize their duty to vote, for they would see the evils that must result from only a partial representation of their sex at the polls; but of course they would never vote so generally as men. Give woman the franchise, and we place a grievous burden on ten women because one considers it a "sacred personal duty" to vote. I sympathize with the one, but the ten have a stronger claim on my feelings.

"Taxation without representation." This is trite, but still to many plausible, decisive. Not so to me. Women are represented by their chosen proxies; it amounts to exactly this, as I see it. But representation is not the correlative of taxation. Because we are taxed, we are not therefore entitled to vote. If we were, a minor who pays taxes is unjustly deprived of the franchise; or, a minor who is not allowed to vote ought not to be taxed. Our taxes pay for the protection of our persons, and property, and the benefits of society. If all are alike protected and benefited, and pay equally for what they get, there is no injustice here. If a change in the laws governing the franchise is demanded, it must be on other grounds than this.

A case has recently been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States touching the right of women to vote. The case was appealed from a Missouri court, the question being whether under the fourteenth amendment a woman who is a citizen of the United States and of a State is a voter in the State notwithstanding the laws of the State restrict the franchise to men alone.

The Court decided, the Chief Justice delivering the opinion, that she is not. I quote a few sentences from the decision:—

"The right of suffrage is not made in terms one of the privileges of the citizen. The United States has no voters, and no one can vote for national, without being competent to vote for State officers. The elective officers of the United States are chosen directly or indirectly by the voters of the States. . . . Nor is the right of suffrage coextensive with the citizenship of the States. . . . The Court are unanimous in the opinion that the Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one."

Thus it will be seen the matter is left entirely to the States; and this question, often raised, is now settled and not likely ever to come up, in the only form possible, an amendment to the federal Constitution. Each State for itself will decide whether all its citizens shall vote, or suffrage be restricted.

F. H. G.

AVOCA, N. Y., April 5, 1875.

THE NEW YORK School Journal says: "No more truthful sentence was ever penned by man than the following, written by Chancellor Kent: 'The parent who sends his son into the world uneducated defrauds the community of a law-abiding citizen, and bequeaths to it a nuisance;' and adds: 'These words should be written in letters of gold over the entrance of every school in the land.'"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. WASSON, T. W. HIGGINSON, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. WASSON on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. WASSON on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. HIGGINSON on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. HIGGINSON, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and HIGGINSON of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. WASSON.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. 1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physic and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. 2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. With Illustrations. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Experiments by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	2.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformation of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. (George Eliot's) translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAUTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
Or the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Eye.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions. By E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Foes.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. 3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume of his Life and Works.....	2.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.00
The Newcomes.....	1.00
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.00
The Virginians.....	1.00
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.00
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.0
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Time and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in the Adirondacks.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp, C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

ABOUT CHEAP RATES WESTWARD.—We have frequent inquiries about the cheapest rates, best route, &c., to Western points. We cannot undertake to answer such questions in detail. It is evident that many of our readers are seeking new homes and fortunes in the West, and for complete and reliable detailed information about that country—from Missouri to Oregon and California inclusive—we do not hesitate to commend them to Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent of the Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis. Mr. Ford has thousands of pamphlets, circulars, time-tables, maps, rate-sheets, etc., for free distribution, and answers all questions, promptly and cheerfully, without charge.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,

Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

TWO NEW BOOKS.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dame Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

20 SUPERIOR MUSIC BOOKS.

NATIONAL HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. New. For Opening and Closing Schools. 40 cents.

For Note Reading in Schools,
AMERICAN SCHOOL MUSIC READERS. Vols. I, II, and III. 35c., 50c., 50c.

CHEERFUL VOICES. 50 cents.

For Sabbath-schools,
RIVER OF LIFE. New Edition. $30 per 100.

For High Schools and Academies,
HOOR OF SINGING. $1.00.

ORPHEAN. $1.00.

For Home Entertainment,
PIANO AT HOME. 4 hands. $2.50.

ORGAN AT HOME. $2.50.

GEMS OF STRAUSS. $2.50.

Cheap Instruction Books.

Winner's New Schools (each 75 cts.), for Piano; for Cabinet Organ; for Melodeon; for Guitar; for Banjo; for Cornet; for Fife; for Accordion; for Clarinet; for Flute; and for Flageolet.

Sold by all the principal music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,

711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

KANSAS, COLORADO, NEBRASKA, CALIFORNIA.—The Spring tide of travel Westward has fairly set in. Thousands are migrating to Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and especially California. To such, as a cheap and desirable route to destination, we commend the Missouri Pacific Through Line, by way of St. Louis and Kansas City. Call upon or address Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis, who will cheerfully furnish you correct and complete information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, time-tables, etc., for gratuitous distribution.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion. Price, 2 vo's., post-paid, $6.00.

For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU GOING WEST? If so, and you desire full and reliable information as to the cheapest and best route to Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, California, Oregon, or any of the Western States or Territories, we recommend that you call upon or address E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo., who will cheerfully answer all questions, and furnish you with maps, pamphlets, time-tables, rates, etc., free of charge. Now is the season of low rates, and applications should be made at once.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.

Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers, P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE FREE

SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Southern, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

THE ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,

256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S

GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION.

By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS

AT BELFAST.

Seventh Edition,

Containing the First and Second Prefaces replying to his Critics, an extract from the Manchester Lecture, and the paper on "Scientific Materialism" in full. 120 pages. Price 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

THEODORE PARKER.

Cabinet size. Price 50 cents.

Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

S. H. MORSE,

25 Bromfield Street, Boston.

Also for sale at the office of THE INDEX.

REASONS FOR USING THE

EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN

CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods, 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

A NEW, SEARCHING, TIMELY BOOK, entitled

"THE GENESIS AND ETHICS OF CONJUGAL LOVE."

By Andrew Jackson Davis.

Treatment of all the delicate and important questions involved in Conjugal Love is straightforward, unmistakably emphatic, and perfectly explicit and plain in every vital particular. Mr. Davis has recently examined the whole field of Marriage, Parentage, Disaffection, and Divorce, and this little volume is the result; which now comes into the world because it is now both wanted and needed by all women and men.

Our friend Andrew Jackson Davis has written a book this time that concerns everybody, and on this side of the great river. It certainly touches their bosoms if not their business, and people who do not care a pin what Mr. Davis thinks of the Summer Land will be interested to see what he knows about conjugal love, and the duties of the marriage relation. His book has a table of contents as attractive as a Delmonico bill of fare.—Golden Age.

Price, in paper covers, 50 cents; in handsome cloth, 75 cents; in full gilt and extra binding, $1. Postage free. The trade supplied on the most liberal terms. Published by the "Progressive Publishing House" of A. J. DAVIS & CO., No. 24 East Fourth Street, New York City.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1875.

WHOLE No. 281.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

MR. R. H. RANNEY will speak on "The Relations of Science to the Religions of the World" at Hospitaler Hall, next Sunday, at 10½ A. M. To be followed by discussion.

FROM Liverpool papers it appears that the visit of the Holy Ghost to that city in the persons of Moody and Sankey cost the citizens £9,000; while the visit to London cannot cost less than £15,000. "Salvation is free!"

GEORGE WASHINGTON could not lie, and THE INDEX (unlike some of its contemporaries) cannot steal even a joke. It was the Independent that hinted that Cardinal McCloskey "will hereafter be among American citizens what the Lobelia Cardinalis is among our native weeds, and the cardinal bird among our feathered tribes."

BEFORE the scarlet beretta was conferred upon Cardinal McCloskey, he was required to take an oath which has been carefully concealed from the public. The Pope's letter to the Cardinal-elect contained these words: "It is our wish that, before you receive the beretta, you should take and subscribe with your own hand the oath which will be presented by the aforesaid, our beloved son, Cæsar Roncetti, and send it to us either by his hand or by any other." No one of the minute reports of the ceremonies has published this oath. What was it? Does any one doubt that it was an oath of allegiance to the Pope as supreme over all the civil authorities of the United States?

MR. S. S. JOHNSON, according to the Boston Advertiser of May 5, has just sued the town of Irasburg, Vt., for injuries received while travelling on the highway on Sunday. But he has lost his case, and been cheated out of the damages to which he would otherwise be entitled, merely because on that day it is lawful to travel only for purposes of "charity or necessity." Two precisely similar cases have occurred recently in Massachusetts. This mockery of justice is a result of Sabbatarianism in the laws. Is there no reason or right in the "Demands of Liberalism"? And is there no evident need of Liberal Leagues to reform laws which so glaringly frustrate the ends of justice and violate equal rights?

BISHOP MCQUAID, of Rochester, N. Y., in a letter to the Democrat and Chronicle of March 23, makes this surprising assertion, for which he would be "whaled" soundly, if the Pope should get wind of it: "The Pope has no right . . . to absolve bishops, priests, or people from allegiance to the lawfully constituted governments of the country in which they live." The only knot-hole he could creep out of would be a quibble on the word "lawfully," by which he might claim that no government could anywhere be "lawfully constituted" which did not humbly acknowledge the Pope's absolute supremacy over itself. Has not the Pope just absolved his clergy in Germany from all obligation to obey the Falk laws? And will Bishop McQuaid dare to say he had no "right" to do it?

REV. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE, D. D., kindly permits the publication in THE INDEX of an essay of his which will be found on the next page. It is a criticism upon "A Recent Definition of Christianity," and the essay in next week's INDEX on "The Battle of Ideas at Syracuse" will be our reply to it. Dr. Clarke's long-established reputation as a Unitarian clergyman second to none in position and influence, as an author of many widely-read and highly-esteemed books, and as a man whose personal character commands the profound respect and love of all who are privileged to know him, renders it altogether superfluous to call attention to his essay in any other manner than by simply mentioning it as his production. But we hope for our own sake that it will be carefully read, and due weight given to all its criticisms, to the end that our readers may judge intelligently where the truth lies in the important matters discussed in both Dr. Clarke's paper and our own.

SPECULATING on "The Position of Catholics" in this country, and the apprehensions vaguely felt by many that the rapid growth of the Catholic Church portends danger to our republican institutions, the Boston Advertiser whistles to keep its courage up. It sees "no reason to dread an assault on our liberties by the Catholic Church," and concludes that "the cloud as big as a man's hand has not yet appeared above the horizon." So long as a bit of blue can anywhere be discerned in the sky, the Advertiser may be confidently reckoned on to concentrate its gaze upon that particular spot. But others will find no great difficulty in perceiving a cloud on the horizon as big as a great many hands. That the Pope's authority as a disturbing and denationalizing power in politics is greatly dreaded in Europe, every day's telegraphic dispatches prove; and that this power is on the increase here is a patent fact. Let it be remembered that, whenever the Catholic Church begins in this country to exert political pressure, every time-serving politician will truckle to it for the sake of Catholic votes, and that the Church will find no iron-willed Bismarck here to oppose its machinations. There is no immediate danger of any such overt attempt as yet; but, unless natural laws are mutable in this climate, there will be by-and-by. The Advertiser fondles the tiger's cub, and swears it is only a kitten; and radicals can be found who opine that it will never grow into anything bigger than a cat. Meanwhile, the Advertiser and these optimistic free-thinkers unite in frowning on all active attempts to abolish the ecclesiastical privileges by which the young tiger is growing fat and strong. Well, the American people have their choice; they may either cage the animal in season, or they may wait till he cannot be caged without a desperate and perhaps sanguinary struggle. But the animal will grow.

REFERRING to the numerous signed protest in New York against the scheme of the Catholics to get their parochial schools supported by the public funds, the Nation says: "We suspect, without having any positive knowledge on the subject, that the Catholic clergy would agree to everything the Board of Education might require, if they could only have the appointment of the teachers. They made a proposal of a somewhat similar character some years ago to the School Trustees in New Haven, the fate of which we forget, in which they were willing to concede everything that might be required if they were only allowed to retain nuns, in the costume of their order, as teachers. In other words, they were willing to rely on the subtle influence of dress, manner, allusions, and so on, on the imagination of the children, in order to produce the results they aimed at. And then there are so many opportunities, if the teacher is sound, of introducing little and perhaps hardly noticeable innovations, of one sort or another, which, if they would not make conversions among Protestants, would at least remove prejudices or beget prepossessions. One of the cities in which the proposed plan has been tried, and it is said has succeeded, is Poughkeepsie, where it has been in operation for some time! There the Catholic schools have been handed over to the Board of Education, and its books and curriculum substituted for their own; but the Catholic teachers, being found qualified, were retained, and there is an understanding that in the appointment of teachers to these schools Catholic preferences are to be consulted. It may be taken for granted, however, that under any arrangement of this kind the Church will get the best of it in the long run, because it has a powerful and trained army of servants, whose sole business is to watch their opportunity, while their opponents are changeable, or indifferent, or preoccupied."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 CINCINNATI, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Basley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 ATBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Deiano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zuning, Secretary.

(FOR THE INDEX.)

On a Recent Definition of Christianity.

AN ESSAY READ BEFORE A PRIVATE CLUB IN BOSTON, FEBRUARY 15, 1875.

BY REV. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE, D.D.

IN THE INDEX for Sept. 24, 1874, is the following statement by the editor, Francis E. Abbot. He declares:—

"1. That the true definition of Christianity is the first point to be determined, and that the consensus of all organized Christian bodies, more particularly Orthodox Christian bodies, ought to determine it. That is, Christianity should be conceded to be what the great Christian Church as a whole declares it to be,—the conflicting views of the dissenting, small minority of 'heretics' not being entitled, on any just ground, to be taken as the definition of it.

"2. That, defined by this consensus of the Church, as a whole, Christianity rests on the principle of Authority, and consists in the system of faith and practice known from the beginning as Orthodoxy.

"3. That, notwithstanding all that is noble and beautiful in it, this Christian system has steadily opposed all mental and spiritual freedom which has not first submitted to its own authority; and therefore, by the inherent necessity of its nature, it has been one continuous crime against some of the most precious rights and interests of mankind."

On this statement I propose to make a few criticisms.

I. OUGHT OUR FAITH IN CHRISTIANITY TO DEPEND ON A DEFINITION?

Mr. Abbot says that the first point to be determined is "the true definition of Christianity." He does not complete his sentence; but we may assume that he means that this is the first point to be determined in order to decide whether or not we shall take sides with Christianity or against it. If this is his meaning, we think that he lays altogether too much stress on the value of a definition. There are many things which we know perfectly well, which we find it hard to define. It is difficult to define the feudal system, but we know very well what it was. We also can determine, without much difficulty, whether the influence of the feudal system was, on the whole, good or evil. If we were called upon to decide whether we approved the feudal system, whether we would support it or oppose it, the main point to be settled would not be to find a satisfactory definition. That would do very well for an abstract student; but in order to answer the practical question, "Shall we support the feudal system, or oppose it?" the first thing to be determined is this, "Is this method of organizing society a good one?"

In like manner we may say that whether we can define Christianity or not, we know very well what it is. A good definition may be a very good thing for speculative purposes; but the practical question in regard to Christianity is whether, on the whole, it is useful to society, or pernicious. If we believe that the influence of the churches, Catholic and Protestant, is in the main evil; that they tend to demoralize society; to confound right and wrong; to make men more worldly, sensual, and devilish—then we ought to oppose Christianity. But if we think that the churches, on the whole, tend to lift up society, to encourage education, to help benevolent institutions, to promote civilization, then we ought to cleave to them loyally. It is the thing itself, not what definition we may give it, which is most important. A more ingenious man than Mr. Abbot may arrive tomorrow at a more satisfactory definition than his; or he himself may revise his own present definition, and so find Christianity to be a good thing, after all, and not a bad one. If, in consequence of the definition he now offers us, we abandon Christianity to-day; if we sell the churches, disband the congregations, give up public worship, and treat the Sunday like any other day; a new definition might make it necessary, to-morrow, to rebuild them all, and at some expense and with some difficulty recommence our Christian operations.

II. MR. ABBOT'S FORMER AND PRESENT DEFINITIONS OF CHRISTIANITY.

This is not altogether an imaginary supposition. At the Unitarian Conference held at Syracuse, in October, 1866, Mr. Abbot presented a definition of Christianity, quite different from that which he now holds. It was as follows, proposed by him as a substitute for the Preamble and first article of the Constitution, and so intended to make an essential part of the organic law. We may properly presume, then, that it was not proposed by him without careful consideration:—

"WHEREAS, The object of Christianity is the universal diffusion of love, righteousness, and truth; and the attainment of this object depends, under God, upon individual and collective Christian activity; and collective Christian activity, to be efficient, must be thoroughly organized; and

"WHEREAS, Perfect freedom of thought, which is at once the right and the duty of every human being, always leads to diversity of opinion, and is therefore hindered by common creeds or statements of faith; and

"WHEREAS, The only reconciliation of the duties of collective Christian activity and individual freedom of thought lies in an efficient organization for practical Christian work, based rather on unity of spirit than on uniformity of belief:

"ARTICLE I.—Therefore the churches here assembled, disregarding all sectarian or theological differences, and offering a cordial fellowship to all who will join with them in Christian work, unite themselves in a common body, to be known as THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNITARIAN AND INDEPENDENT CHURCHES."

At this time, it is clear, he had no objection to the Christian name, for he introduces it five times. He defines "the object of Christianity to be the universal diffusion of love, righteousness, and truth," a definition which the great majority of Christians, both Catholic and Protestant, Orthodox and Liberal, would readily accept. His second proposition concerns the means of accomplishing this object,—and here also the great majority of all Christian churches would agree with him. "The attainment of this object depends, under God, upon individual and collective Christian activity." His third proposition would also be acceptable to all those Christians, at least, who believe in the importance of churches. "Collective Christian activity to be efficient must be thoroughly organized."

This was the definition of Christianity given by Mr. Abbot a few years ago. He has now changed his mind. He now does not consider the object of Christianity to be "the universal diffusion of love, righteousness, and truth"; but instead, to destroy all mental and moral freedom by setting up personal authority over the human mind. Far from believing—as he did in 1866—that this "universal diffusion of love, righteousness, and truth" could only be accomplished by Christian activity, he now believes that it can only be accomplished by "anti-Christian" activity.

But Christianity itself in 1875 cannot have altered very materially from what it was in 1866. It has now the same merits, in the main, that it had then; it had then the same faults which it has now. The difference then is only in Mr. Abbot's mind. He has hit on a new definition. His former definition made of Christianity the great and almost the only motive power by which humanity can be elevated and improved; his present definition makes of it the great foe of human progress.

Hardly can our friend, in this short time, have discovered so many evils, which before were unnoticed by him, as to change him from the friend of Christianity to its foe. He has told us, indeed, that the course taken by the Syracuse Convention, in rejecting his amendment, and that similar proceedings on the part of the Unitarian Conferences, have satisfied him that he had little to expect from Christian churches. But certainly the action of a small denominational Conference does not furnish a sufficient basis for a deduction for or against so large a fact as the Christian religion. It cannot be any new observation of its real nature which has reversed his action; it is the discovery of a better definition. It would seem, therefore, a very serious mistake to base our Christianity, or anti-Christianity, on a definition, or on any purely logical process. It is to be settled, not by any deductive process, but by an induction from observed facts. This, surely, is the scientific method, which for a practical question is much better than the metaphysical one. We feel like applying here what Mr. Emerson has somewhere said, "If we could have any security against moods! If the profoundest prophet could be holden to his words, and the hearer who is ready to sell all and join the crusade could have any security that to-morrow his prophet shall not unsay his testimony! But the Truth sits veiled there on the bench, and never interposes an adamant syllable; and the most sincere and revolutionary doctrine, put as if the ark of God was to be carried forward some furlongs and planted there for the succor of the world, shall in a few weeks be coldly set aside, by the same speaker, as morbid. 'I thought I was right, but I was not,' and the same immeasurable credulity demanded for new audacities."

III. SHALL WE ACCEPT A DEFINITION OF CHRISTIANITY ON THE AUTHORITY OF THE CHURCH?

In deciding whether a religion is good or bad, to be adopted or rejected, the chief ground of action is, therefore, hardly to be found in a definition. We should rather observe the facts, and see whether an induction from those facts shows the spirit and influence of the system to be good or otherwise. To this point we shall presently return. But now let us examine Mr. Abbot's present definition of Christianity, and notice some of its consequences.

"The consensus of all organized Christian bodies, more particularly Orthodox Christian bodies, ought to determine it. That is, Christianity should be conceded to be what the great Christian Church, as a whole, declares it to be."

That is to say, in deciding a question of fact, we are told by Mr. Abbot that we are not to exercise our own reason, but to submit to the authority of the majority. He opposes Christianity because "it rests on the principle of authority," and then he accepts the authority of the majority as determining what is fact and what is truth. He renounces his own private judgment, and accepts the decision of the Church, with the humility of an ultramontane Catholic. In 1866, after having been a student and a preacher of Christianity during many years, his belief was that Christianity was a good thing; that it was not Orthodoxy, but a religion of love, truth, and righteousness. He now gives up this belief in deference to the opinions of a majority; he accepts blindly what the majority declares Christianity to be, though his own studies had brought him to an opposite conclusion. And all this he does, and recommends others to do, in the interest of Free Religion and spiritual liberty.

The majority of a church may have a right to decide what the belief of that majority is concerning Christianity. But Christianity itself is larger than all its denominations, all its churches, and all their creeds. It is a great system of thought and life which has existed during eighteen centuries; which has taken on and put off again many forms; which has adopted and relinquished many methods; which has created a remarkable civilization; which has united most of the great races of mankind into a common brotherhood of social and political life. To allow such a system to be defined authoritatively for us without appeal by the majority of its believers at any one period would be like accepting as a final statement concerning the hydrography of a great river the opinions of the sailors who happen to be navigating its stream. Christians do not make Christianity; Christianity makes Christians. They bear not the root; the root bears them.

This new dogma of Free Religion, which consists in accepting the authority of a majority in forming our opinions concerning a faith, would, of course, overthrow and discard all that Protestantism has accomplished by its principle of private judgment.

If the consent of the organized Church should be decisive as to what Christianity is, Martin Luther, instead of reforming the Christian Church, should have gone outside of Christianity. If he had done this, the Protestant Reformation would never have arrived,—which, if it has done nothing else, has, at least, enabled our brother Abbot to express his opinions without being burnt for doing so.

If the opinion of the majority determines what Christianity is, then Christianity is a different religion in different periods. In one century the Arians constituted the majority in the Church; then Christianity was an Arian religion, and the Church doctrine of the Trinity made no part of it. Until Protestantism arrived, the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome constituted an essential part of Christianity. If Protestants ever become the majority, it will cease to do so.

IV. THE REAL MEANING OF AUTHORITY IN CHRISTIANITY.

But perhaps Mr. Abbot may say that the only essential thing in Christianity which has always remained the same is the principle of authority—especially the authority of Jesus Christ,—and that this authority has always enslaved the human mind.

But if this be so, we would ask how it is that the human mind has been most free, and made its most successful attainments just when the Christian religion has prevailed. Outside of Christendom there is no science, art, literature, philosophy, to which any students would go to-day for instruction. If, at one time, Christians went to Mohammedan schools for instruction, we must inquire whether, strictly speaking, Islam is not a Christian heresy, an outside sect of Christendom. And why have all Mohammedan countries ceased to be sources of knowledge for mankind, while Christian countries are always advancing? If Christianity be mental slavery, why, we ask again, does mental freedom only thrive where Christianity is the prevailing religion?

And is it true that "the system of faith and practice known from the beginning as Orthodoxy" has always been the same? The history of doctrines shows that every doctrine now held in the Church as Orthodox, has at one time been regarded as heretical,—such as the doctrines of the Trinity, of the atonement, of total depravity, of the papal supremacy, of the mass, of the literal inspiration of the Bible. If this, therefore, be Christianity, there is no such thing as one permanent Christianity; but Christianity has been one thing in one century, and a wholly different thing in another. But in seeking a definition of a religion we must find something which will define it throughout its whole history. This definition therefore must be incorrect.

Is, then, the essence of Christianity "person-worship"? So our friend seems to assert in one of his paragraphs. He seems to say that the slavery of the human mind has resulted from making the authority of Jesus Christ supreme over faith. No doubt the authority of Jesus, as an inspired teacher, makes a part of the creed of Christendom. He is accepted by all Christians not only as a teacher, but also a master. But so far from this authority of Christ producing spiritual slavery, it is, when rightly apprehended, a service which is perfect freedom, and is a source of mental and moral progress.

For we must distinguish between two kinds of authority,—of which the one enslaves, and the other emancipates. One is the authority of the letter, the other of the spirit. To repeat words on the authority of another; to accept a creed, whether we understand it or not; to receive and repeat blindly a verbal statement,—that is mental slavery. But to catch the inspiration of another's spirit; to feed our minds by the sight of the truth which he has seen before; to take him as guide, leader, teacher, master,—this is one method by which the human mind is set free. Every earnest seeker for truth has some such masters. Some take Shakespeare, Bacon, Plato, Socrates for their masters. Others take Channing, Parker, Emerson, Carlyle, Goethe, Herbert Spencer, Darwin, Tyndall, Huxley. If they follow these masters blindly, accepting all they say without examination, they are finally belittled and enslaved by them. They repeat by rote Emerson's sayings, and become his parrots. They may do the same with the sayings of Christ. Or they may go to these masters for inspiration and guidance, not blindly, but with an intelligent faith. They may say, "They have helped us wonderfully in the past, and therefore we trust in them. We go to their words with expectation and confidence—a confidence justified by our past experience. We read their books in faith, and that faith helps us to better insight."

Does it make any difference that Christians assume Christ to be an infallible teacher, while other masters are supposed to be fallible? Practically it makes no difference. We go to Emerson, to Plato, to any teacher, for truth, not for error. We go to them for knowledge. If what they say seems to us obscure, self contradictory, or false, we let it alone, and read on till we can find something which we can understand and believe. When we stop to criticize and find fault, we lose our teacher, and cease to be disciples. So long as we are learning truth from them, we continue in the attitude of faith. We believe all we can; as to what we cannot believe, we wait and consider. If we relinquish this attitude for a moment, in that moment we cease to be learners, and become critics.

All Christians, in studying the teachings of Jesus, are in this attitude. They are looking for truth, not for falsehood and error. They are not blindly accepting his statements, but they are studying them to find what they mean. If they find something they cannot understand, they wait till they can understand it. As it is impossible for the human mind to hold at the same time two propositions which are seen to be contradictory, we are just as much obliged to suspend our opinion in reading the words of Jesus as we are in reading those of Socrates. If what Jesus says in one place seems inconsistent with what we have learned from him elsewhere, or what we have learned in other ways, then we are compelled, by the law of our mind, to suspend our judgment till we are able either to reconcile the two opinions, or to decide between them. Not a single body of Christians teaches that we are blindly to accept and repeat the words of Jesus without seeing their reasonableness. Paul said that the letter of the New Testament killed, and that only its spirit gave life. We must always remember, too, that, admitting this authority of Christ to be a part of Christianity, the Church has held to entirely different methods of discovering its deliverances. Catholics say, "You must go to the Church to find what Christ teaches." Protestants say, "You must go to the Bible;" but then they claim that each man's judgment is to decide what the Bible teaches, and that according to the analogy of faith. All mystics, like the Swedenborgians and Quakers, say that Christ speaks to each man's soul through the spirit, and whatever each man sees to be true is true to him. Even Dr. Newman, the Catholic, has recently shown that a distinct declaration of the infallible pope will not be accepted by many Catholics till they have satisfied themselves that he was under no bad influence in giving it,—which leaves a broad margin for individual freedom.

The principle of authority, after all these reductions, would scarcely seem to amount to more than this: that Christ is an inexhaustible source of divine truth to the soul. What that truth is, must be decided by finding that which satisfies the reason, conscience, and heart. And this is the way in which we judge all truth to be true.

The essential thing in a religion, and the only essential thing, is that which was in it in the beginning, in its source and fountain, and which has continued in it ever since. The papacy does not belong to the essence of Christianity; for that did not appear until the Middle Ages. Orthodoxy in doctrine does not belong to the essence of Christianity, for that was unknown at first, and is not to be found in the earliest sources. The only essential points which remain, which were in the religion at first, and have continued in it ever since, are faith in Jesus as the Christ the Son of God, and the practical purpose of attaining that love to God and love to man of which he is the Mediator.

Perhaps, on some other occasion, I shall endeavor to show that this faith is not only not inconsistent with truth and freedom, but is the best source of both to mankind. No doubt vast numbers of Christians have been the slaves of a literal dogmatism. But it is so in all systems,—in science, art, philosophy.

phy. The majority of disciples, in all these, swear by the words of the Master, instead of penetrating his spirit. This is not the fault of Christianity, but of the human mind, in its imperfect development.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S RELIGIOUS LIBERTY PLATFORM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—You invite me to add some further elucidations to my letter to you which you published on April 15, and in which I developed the three last articles of my platform, which are as follows:—

4. No incorporation of sectarian societies.
5. All clauses, in private contracts, granting temporal advantages on sectarian conditions, to be null and void in the eyes of the law.
6. All property at present owned by sectarian societies to become, on a day to be fixed by law, the absolute civil property of the members of each such society, irrespective of religious conditions.

These three propositions, I am aware, embody a solution not yet proposed of a problem which has long been in the mind of advanced thinkers, and of the existence and importance of which the general public begins to become aware. But different from yours as these solutions may be, and novel as they may have appeared even to you, I expected nothing less from you than that you would find my arguments, as you show no reluctance to admit, "very cogent." I should have been more surprised, if it had been otherwise, than you seem to intimate that you would be if I could make them entirely convincing to you by removing a certain "difficulty." In truth you do not seem to me so dull-minded as to be unable to remove that difficulty for yourself unless I took the pen to help you. I am rather afraid that the compliments that you pay to my "ability," and that I might return, should make us appear to be in collusion, though this is not the case. The fact is that no praise is due to me for any agency in my arguments. If they are "cogent," they are so from the nature of the subject itself, and will appear so to any one who takes the trouble to become familiarized with it.

But first to remove any prejudice which might arise from our appearing to be in collusion, allow me to take the strongest objection to your finding, in the principle true enough that "sectarianism is immoral in its tendencies," a proof that "Christianity itself is so far immoral."

CHRISTIANITY UNSECTARIAN.

I entirely deny that Christianity is a sect. It is just the reverse of a sect; it is the transformation of Mosaism and Judaism, from literal sectarianism into spiritual symbolism. The Jewish nation, like all nations worthy of this title, had faith in its mission and its destiny, and, in the midst of its misfortunes, linked by hope the memory of past grandeur with the vision of future glories. Of these memories, of these hopes, the family of David was the centre, and Jesus of Nazareth, who, as a member of that family, was a legitimate candidate for the throne, lived at a time to which prophecies had pointed as that of the restoration of David's throne under a Christ; that is, an anointed king, who would deliver Israel from all its oppressors. The chief of these oppressors, however, were the Romans, a military and administrative power not to be trifled with, to levy war against which in the name of Jewish legitimism would have been about as frivolous at that time as it would be to-day for the Mormons to levy war against the United States. Jesus was too clear-headed not to see that; and, while it was impossible for a man of his stamp to feel himself the king of Israel and belie all the prophecies by doing nothing for his people at such a time, he resisted all the suggestions of those who wished to make him a political king. His anointing was to be purely spiritual, and his kingdom to consist in the spiritual influence of Israel, on condition that Israel should understand its mission, emancipate itself from pharisaic subtleties, and develop what in its law, in its prophecies, in its past history, in its present character, was really great, fecund, and catholic. He was misunderstood. He was killed. But though the three days of his entombment may be as long as the days of Creation, he will rise yet. His rising will be the justification of his character from all the misrepresentations of those who would conceive him, the incarnate Logos—that is, literally, the incarnate Reason, the incarnate Common-Sense—to have been the founder of a sect of Spiritualists, that is, of dupes and liars.

Christianity does not essentially consist in a set of propositions which may be true or false, but merely in grouping whatever truths may have been inherited, or may come to be developed or newly turn up, around the mere symbol of a Jewish royalty no more intended to be literal than Masonic emblems are meant for actual building purposes, or modern knighthood for Quixotic developments. Christianity is not a religious sect; it is a religious order which has particular symbols and particular methods, but no particular dogmas, its object being to discover and apply that religion which is absolute and universal. If Christianity is not a sect, it cannot be "so far immoral"; and as you do not say that it is immoral in any other sense, nothing requires me to prove that it is not.

UNITARIANISM AND FREE RELIGION BOTH UNSECTARIAN.

This point explained, I agree with you in your assertion that "there is no 'religion' but Free Religion which is not 'sectarian.'" I do it, however, in a broader sense than that which your known controversies with Unitarians would lead one to think that you have particularly in view. Unitarianism may have, in other times and in other countries, meant a monotheism as rigid and damatory as Jehovism or Islamism. But here and now it means nothing but the most enlightened and charitable views imaginable: Free Religion taught, as a mere matter of method, in the name of Christ, with the Bible as a textbook, not as an authority, and, by a mere accident, with the outward forms of Protestant Congregationalism. It might be, however, under the legislation which I propose, a nice point for a jury to decide, whether the Unitarian Church be, in any sense, a sect or not. I see from here Unitarians smile and make some similar suggestion about Free Religion. I am myself perfectly willing to smile at any pleasantries in which Unitarians and Free Religionists may choose to indulge with regard to each other, provided that they on both parts agree in making my propositions their own, and in securing their introduction into the institutions of this country. This I want them to do, because the salvation and the well-being of the country require it, because to do it is to them a duty implied in their principles; not for the paltry consideration that they would retain their incorporation and have their religious property exempt from taxation while all sectarian societies would lose these privileges. In fact I would expect them absolutely to decline to take any temporal advantage of any distinction which the non-sectarian nature of their principles, and the wording of the law, might leave in their favor. Though they are not sects, I should expect them to demand to be treated by the law as if they were, in order to have an opportunity to show sects how sects ought honorably to behave: live on their present faith, and have the numbers of their membership and of their ministry determined by their apostolic zeal and by the strength of their controversial positions, not by the amount of their endowments, as the number of beggars that each Italian town should contain was determined until of late by the amount of soup that was daily distributed at the doors of its convents.

The opinions which I have expressed with regard to Christianity and Unitarianism have found place here, however, as a mere personal explanation on my part, in order to enable your readers to know on what different ground from yours I stand in this respect. But no opinions which I may to-day hold with regard to Christianity, or Unitarianism, or any particular sect, are any integral part of my argument against the incorporation of sectarian societies and the validity of sectarian clauses in contracts. In these two latter respects I held the same opinions as to-day when I was a zealous Romanist, when I was a zealous Protestant, and it is not in hostility to either party that I to-day advocate these opinions. I believe, on the contrary, that self-respect and interest, by which I mean spiritual, not soup, interest, should compel Roman Catholics, and all Protestant denominations, to surrender their civil corporate existence and property as sects, whether the law compel them to do it or not.

CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS SPHERES DIFFERENT.

You admit this and more, when you recognize that sectarianism is immoral. I had merely said that sectarianism is a sin, which philosophically may mean the same, but in common acceptance does not. A sin is any departure from the absolute pattern of truth and holiness as it is in God, and may be inappreciable by any criterion which society possesses. An immorality is a sin so palpable and so gross that it shocks the bonos mores, that is, the righteous feeling which the community has or ought to have, as embodied in the social customs which exist or ought to exist. According to this distinction, I would say that to be, for example, a Papist or Calvinist, is a sin, but is not immoral. It is a sin because it is an error, a departure from the absolute standard of truth and righteousness which is in God. It is not immoral in the sense that I have defined, because it is not appreciable by any criterion which Society has, or ought to have, and either embodies in its manners or customs, or would embody in them if her state were more perfect than it is. On the contrary, the more perfect society will become, the more it will leave to individual conscience the question whether Presbyterianism and Papism be sins or not, and also the question whether they be virtues or not. Whether they be sins or virtues, their sinful or virtuous character belongs to a sphere of which it does not belong to the civil law to make itself cognizant so as to enforce or discourage them, or lend its strong arm to their being encouraged or discouraged by the enjoyment or loss of temporal advantages annexed to their profession, be it by legislative charters or by private contracts. Though in characterizing sectarianism I applied to it the word sinful, meaning by it merely a theological badness, and carefully avoiding the word immoral, I do not hesitate to characterize as immoral, both in a religious and a civil sense, all stipulations public or private whereby temporal advantages or penalties, pecuniary or other, are made the sanction of sectarian requirements. What an honorable man ought always to reserve to himself in all his stipulations, what the law ought always to reserve to all citizens in all its enactments, is the right to adopt or renounce any opinions in sectarian, that is, doubtful religious matters, without temporal advantage or loss.

This being a moral axiom which you do not contest, going only a little farther than I do, I will attempt neither to demonstrate, which would be impossible, nor to develop it. But your objection, which you hope I can remove, is that, regrettable as it may be that the law should have to lend its aid to immorality by giving to sects a corporate existence which is immoral, and by enforcing in private contracts immoral clauses stipulating temporal advantages on sectarian conditions, the law has to do it, however; otherwise it would discriminate against sects, "subject sectarianism to civil disabilities," which to do "even on the justifiable ground of immorality would be in reality persecuting the sects, or at least seems to be."

IGNORING OF SECTS BY THE CIVIL POWER NO PERSECUTION OF SECTS.

The only arguments by which you, or to speak more fairly to you, the average opponent that you place before me, can come to the conclusion that my proposition would work such a discrimination, are the following ones:—

1. Whenever a charter of incorporation is demanded from a legislature by any society whatever, the legislature invariably grants that charter in the terms proposed, without making in it the least alteration, even when its stipulations are immoral. Therefore to treat otherwise sectarian societies which demand to be incorporated, would be to make against them an unusual discrimination.

2. In private contracts the law considers as valid, and enforces as such, all conditions whatever, whether immoral or not. Therefore for the law to refuse to enforce sectarian conditions in private contracts on the ground of their immorality would be to make in their case an unusual discrimination.

I entirely deny the antecedent of each of those two arguments.

1. It is simply not the fact that any legislature in the world feels bound to grant charters of incorporation to every society which applies for them, or to grant them without a careful revision of the text of such charters. No legislature ever grants a charter of incorporation to any society with any clause in it that it perceives to be immoral or contrary to public policy. No legislature would grant a charter to a railroad company with this clause in it, that season-ticket holders who, during the season, would change their religion, should forfeit their season ticket.

2. It is simply not the fact that the laws of the United States, or of any State, or of any country in the world, provide as a general rule that all conditions in private contracts, however derogatory to private or public morality or public policy, shall be enforced as valid by the courts. Suppose a man should, by contract, pledge himself under a certain penalty to successfully smuggle a parcel of goods into the country, or assassinate a man before a certain day, the law would not enforce either stipulation, because the one is contrary to public policy, and the other is immoral. In most countries, and especially in this and other Anglo-Saxon countries, a stipulation requires, besides being moral and in accordance with public policy, to be bilateral; that is, to be made for a valuable consideration.

As the character of immorality would be equally fatal to a charter demanded from a legislature, and to a clause the enforcement of which would be demanded at the hands of a court, and as you admit that sectarianism and sects and sectarian conditions are immoral, I have sufficiently disposed, were it on the ground of immorality alone, of the assertion that the refusal to incorporate sects or to enforce sectarian conditions would be an unjust discrimination, or any discrimination at all, against sectarianism. I will, however, out of many other arguments which I might bring, be content, before I terminate, to give sectarian incorporations and sectarian stipulations one argument each.

1.—INCORPORATION OF SECTS SUICIDAL ON THE PART OF THE STATE.

The incorporation of sectarian societies is not only immoral in all cases, it is, on the part of the State, in some cases suicidal, in so far as the State thus actually incorporates societies having among their objects the violation of the laws of the State. For example, a State, for purposes of self-preservation, passes a law compelling the youthful population to attend the public schools. At the same time the State incorporates a religious society, one of the objects of which is to punish, by spiritual penalties and by the withdrawal of the temporal emoluments which its incorporation guarantees, those among its members and ministers who send their children to the public schools or say that people may send them without going to hell. Very well. As long as a priest teaches that he would rather give the sacraments to a dog than to a Catholic who sends his children to the public schools, he is on good terms with his bishop, and has the quiet use of the church buildings, the parsonage, and perhaps the salary, secured on landed property, which the incorporation secures to him as the regular incumbent of that parish. But one day he begins to think that his parishioners had better send their children to the school after all, and he says that in his sermon. On this he falls into a conflict with his bishop, with the Pope, and is deposed from his position. He resists, he refuses to evacuate the parsonage. A court pronounces that, having lost his status in the church, as defined by the terms of its incorporation, he is no more entitled to its temporalities. The court orders the sheriff to execute the sentence, but he requires a posse comitatus. He just happens to find in the street the Governor of the State, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Superintendent of the Public Schools. He summons them, and with their help goes to violently turn out of his parsonage a priest who has deserved that punishment by no other crime than by his obedience to the laws which the Speaker declared carried, the Governor signed, and the Superintendent swore to enforce. Decidedly such things are too absurd, and when the German people are beginning to see it, it is time the people of the United States should.

2.—VALIDITY OF SECTARIAN STIPULATIONS CONTRARY TO ACKNOWLEDGED PRINCIPLES OF LAW.

The civil law, as I have shown, has no business to know and no means to determine whether Presbyterianism, or Papism, or any other ism, be sins or not; nor either whether they be virtues or not, or whether they have any value at all, and therefore can constitute that valuable consideration which is required as a term to any contract which the law of a serious nation will enforce. In the age in which we live, the law will not enforce a contract by which I, the undersigned, bind myself to pay Mr. So-and-So the sum of $—, value received in moonshine. In an age in which the same principles will be applied with only a little more logic, the law will refuse to enforce a stipulation wherein the value received is Presbyterianism or Papism, or the non-rotundity of the earth, or the primitive man having had a tail or not having had a tail, or any other proposition, the capacity of which to constitute a valuable consideration transcends the criteria of a sensible court, and therefore should be, to it, simply a nonentity. In fact, people who come before a court asking it to enforce such stipulations, insult the court, and should be arrested for contempt. Much more should people who come before a Legislature and ask it to make such a stipulation a part of the law of the State by embodying it in a charter, be arrested by the Sergeant-at-arms and brought to the bar of the house to be punished for their making light of the majesty of the house and of the State.

To my ninth and last article I add to-day no new developments, as the two preceding ones once admitted, it does not appear that you would consider it otherwise than as providing a simple and equitable method of transition from the old order of things to the new.

I remain, dear sir, truly yours,

JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 3, 1875.

[It is quite superfluous to argue against a suspicion that we are in "collusion" with Bishop Ferrette for any purpose whatever; of course no such suspicion could possibly arise.

But, notwithstanding his courteous incredulity that we should be "so dull-minded as to be unable to remove that difficulty" without his aid, we must not only confess ourself unable to remove it without his aid, but also thus far unable to remove it with his aid.

The difficulty was that the United States Constitution guarantees the "free exercise" of religion; that the Christian religion is essentially sectarian; and that it is therefore impossible to abolish sectarianism in all contracts and corporations without thereby abolishing the Christian Church, and "prohibiting the free exercise" of the Christian religion. This is the difficulty, and Bishop Ferrette only meets it by "denying that Christianity is a sect." This, then, is the only point raised between us, and we pass by the arguments which he imagines us above to urge, but which are no arguments of ours in any sense.

Is not Christianity a sect? It is unnecessary, we think, in order to answer this question, to go into any speculations respecting Jesus or his purposes or his ideas; it seems quite sufficient to recognize that Christianity, Judaism, Mohammedanism, and so forth, bear precisely the same relation to Humanity which Presbyterianism, Episcopacy, Romanism, and so forth, bear to Christianity. That is, the various historical religions are restricted fellowships or sects (secrete) cut off from the universal fellowship of Man; just as the various Christian denominations are restricted fellowships or sects cut off from the larger fellowship of Christ. Their restriction of human fellowship seems to us to be of immoral tendency, as creative of jealousies and antagonisms which tend to evil of many kinds; yet it is a species of immorality which the law cannot deal with. Hence we see no possibility of striking out all sectarian clauses in contracts and charters of incorporation without being guilty of religious persecution and of violation of our fundamental law. To make Christianity really unsectarian would be in fact to make it unchristian, by destroying that "bond of Christian union" which unites all Christians in a sect as regards the whole human race. Unless Bishop Ferrette can obviate this real difficulty, the only one we raised, we must still be unconvinced of the justice of his "Platform."—ED.]

A PLEA FOR MORE ZEAL AND CO-OPERATION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is difficult for me to see the occasion for some of the strictures which appear in reference to THE INDEX and its editor. It was so of those of your Andover correspondent in a recent number. It is a singular fact that, whenever one shows conspicuous earnestness in behalf of an idea or principle which he deems true and important, he is liable to be accused of excited feeling or suspected of personal interests. It would seem, by the tenor of contributions which appear now and then in your columns, that radicals are not an exception to this. Are we so intensely intellectual that it is not proper we should quicken with emotion or warm with feeling? Must rationalism necessarily be divorced from enthusiasm? It is perhaps not wholly strange that such a view should be somewhat entertained in the region of Boston. Nevertheless I coincide sufficiently with the great apostles to believe: "It is well to be zealously affected always in a good thing."

It has never appeared to me that your plan of Liberal Leagues and their associated programme of work is intended for an unconditional one. I have never supposed for a moment that you expected or sought to yoke all radicals to this team, or that your plan involved in the slightest degree the principle of the press-gang, or disregarded the right of an earnest radical to determine, according to his judgment and circumstances, how he can most effectually serve the general cause. Certainly no one who has been brought into direct relations with radicals will feel there is any reason for loss of sleep for fear they are in danger of excessive ardor and self-abnegation in behalf of their principles, or because the appeals to them are less mild or temperate than they should be.

That there is a work for radicalism, a distinctive work, and (as I believe) one that must be at present, for the most part, done outside of the Church, there is abundant evidence. It is also as evident that it will not do itself. Christians can believe that their conceptions of truth will be triumphant through their prayers, but radicals have no such excuse for remissness and indolence. There are unquestionably a great many independent minds in the country that are eager to do all they can for mental emancipation and the new truths of the time, and will do so under any circumstances in one way or another. But there is a very much larger class who profess radicalism, and yet do absolutely nothing for its advancement. I am satisfied, and have had a fair chance for an acquaintance with the facts of which I speak, that, if we except the general habit of non-conformity (which in the majority of instances costs hardly anything), there are none who, as a body, sacrifice so little for the ideas they represent, or of whom it may be so emphatically said, "They say, and do not." There are communities all over the country where those who discard the old religious theories and are in sympathy with rationalism outnumber those identified with the churches, and not unfrequently exceed them in wealth, and to some extent in personal influence; and yet the church organizations are the ruling power in these places. Liberals condemn without qualification the intolerance, bigotry, and superstition which prevail about them, but make no show of exertion or expenditure in any form to remove them, or to diffuse a superior enlightenment; indeed, in some instances, contribute to their support.

The hard pulling which such enterprises as the Paine Memorial Building experience among radicals, and the feeble support of our journals devoted to free thought, and the mere handful of Liberal Leagues and radical organizations of all descriptions, compared to what there ought to be, afford conclusive demonstration of this apathy.

The Liberal League is designed to be an agitator. Was any reform ever carried forward otherwise? It is designed to reach those whom our liberal papers do not reach, not only to wake up benighted Christian dreamers, but also to disturb the somnolence of radicals. It is designed to set before those of an earnest radical spirit, but whose apprehensions are indistinct in regard to the work to be done, a clearer view of it, and afford them an opportunity for more effective coöperation. The Liberal League means business. It is the summons of radicals to action. It is the trumpet-call and the marshalling of hosts for a contest of ideas and principles. Shall the answer to that summons be a nerveless and inefficient squad, or a resistless legion? According to that answer must be the issue between conservatism and progress, between mediævalism and the ideas and spirit of the nineteenth century.

Surely, in view of the unsparing devotion, the unflagging energy and unremitting perseverance of the Church party,—in view of Ecumenical Councils and papal Encyclical Letters, and conspiracies against free institutions on the one hand, and of Evangelical Alliances and the efforts of Protestant Christendom to effect an ecclesiastical solidarity on the other, against what is pronounced the "scepticism of the age" (which simply means modern knowledge and intelligence); in view of the manifest purpose of the Church party to pervert, if possible, the constitution and laws of this country to the interests of theology, to override the inalienable rights of American citizens; in view of continually recurring instances of intolerance, and these in particular to which the attention of readers of THE INDEX has recently been called; in view of the exaltation of supernaturalism above rationalism in every division of the Church, even the most liberal, and the indirect proscription that falls on whoever refuses to say amen, and the consequent injustice and narrowness of social sympathies that result from these things, and are witnessed in the common relations of life,—there is little excuse for inertia or silence. The persuasion that thought is all-powerful; that truth will get spoken through us, though we are dumb, does not justify us in such a case. It is a principle which may easily be stretched too far. It may very easily, perhaps unconsciously, become an excuse for egotism and selfishness. Is there not as much danger from the latter, when unpleasant and unpopular duties are before us, as of becoming over zealous? Let us remember that life is not only for thought, but also for action; that it is for both; that the one is as essential as the other to meet the demands of radicalism in this time.

D. H. C.

NEW MILFORD, Pa.

"Some men," said Douglas Jerrold, "never look with satisfaction at the new moon, out of respect for that venerable institution, the old one."

THE WORLD doesn't know its greatest men.—
Oliver Wendell Holmes.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

SPECIALLY REPORTED FOR "THE INDEX."

The Second Annual Meeting of the Boston Liberal League was held in Paine Hall on Friday evening, May 7; the President, F. E. Abbot, in the chair. This meeting had apparently been called on insufficient notice, and the attendance was not large, nor enthusiastic in the ordinary manifestations of like gatherings; but those present seemed quietly in earnest, biding the time when they could do more efficient work. The acting secretary of the League read the minutes of the last quarterly meeting, and Mr. Abbot stated, in behalf of the Treasurer who was absent, that the League was not in debt; the treasury contained seven dollars and fifty cents. The League needed funds, and for that reason was greatly crippled in all of its endeavors to meet the emergencies continually arising. It was to be hoped that friends of the cause in the immediate neighborhood, who were supposed to have a real interest in the successful work of this League, would at once come forward and contribute according to their ability to that end. Surely the time was already ripe when the liberal men and women throughout the whole country should speak and act in no uncertain manner.

Mr. R. H. Ranney, Chairman of the Executive Committee, made a report of the special work the League had undertaken in the last two years. It had given particular attention to the question of equitable taxation. By hard work, aided by the liberal journals, INDEX, Investigator, Banner of Light, the Committee had been able to send in to the Legislature of the State a petition of nearly ten thousand names in behalf of taxing religious and educational institutions. The Legislature had given the subject considerable attention in the way of Joint Special Committee hearings on the subject, at which the League had been ably represented. Though progress had been made, no definite favorable action was to be expected from the Legislature this year. The Commission appointed by the governor and council had made a lengthy report in opposition, but there was a very favorable showing for the cause in both branches of the Legislature.

The President said that it was proposed a year ago to have a mass meeting at the present time in Faneuil Hall; but, failing to secure the desired speakers, the idea had been postponed, and in this connection he read an interesting letter from Wendell Phillips. He also read a similar letter from William Lloyd Garrison.

The President then called A. W. Stevens to the chair, read the "Appeal to the American People," signed by F. Bielefeld and J. Nieland [which will be found among the "Communications" on a subsequent page of this issue], and offered to the meeting a series of resolutions denouncing the recent refusal to grant Mr. Julius Nieland, of Philadelphia, his second naturalization papers. They were unanimously adopted, as follows:—

"WHEREAS, Julius Nieland, of Philadelphia, has been refused his second naturalization papers by Judges Pratt and Hare, and thereby denied the enjoyment of his political rights, avowedly and solely 'on account of being an infidel'; and

"WHEREAS, Mr. Nieland has publicly appealed to the American people for justice and for reparation of this great wrong; therefore

"Resolved, That the Boston Liberal League protest with indignation against this gross infringement of religious liberty, denounce the action of Judges Pratt and Hare as tyrannical and outrageous, and emphatically second the appeal of Mr. Nieland for redress.

"Resolved, That the recent occurrence of such outrages on the fundamental rights of freemen as the disfranchisement of Julius Nieland, the exclusion from the witness-stand of Joseph Treat, and the expulsion from the North Carolina Legislature of J. W. Thorne, avowedly because of their religious opinions, admonishes the American people that the safeguards of their religious liberty are incomplete, and need to be supplemented by more effectual provisions against such glaring violations of it.

"Resolved, That therefore the Boston Liberal League recommend to the thoughtful and serious attention of all liberal minds the 'Religious Freedom Amendment,' proposed in THE INDEX as a substitute for the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.

"Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to transmit copies of these resolutions for publication to the various liberal journals of the country."

Resuming the chair, the President read a communication from the Liberal League of Philadelphia, inviting the Boston League and others to be represented at a special meeting to be held in September of this year, to make arrangements for a convention of liberals to be held sometime during the centennial celebration of 1876. Mr. Ranney then offered the following resolutions, which were adopted, after some considerable discussion as to whether the League ought to pay the expenses of its delegates:—

"Resolved, That we approve the proposal of the Philadelphia Liberal League to hold a meeting of delegates from all the Liberal Leagues of the country, as preparatory to a Convention to be held in that city in 1876; and that, in accordance with the suggestion of its Secretary, we recommend Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, September 17th, 18th, and 19th, as the time, and Philadelphia as the place, of this preparatory meeting.

"Resolved, That the President and Secretary of this League, and Messrs. A. Bronson Alcott, B. F. Underwood, and John Wetherbee, be appointed as delegates to this preparatory meeting, with power of substitution and authority to represent this League in making all necessary arrangements for the Convention in 1876.

"Resolved, That the Secretary be instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the Secretary of the Philadelphia Liberal League."

The chief point in the discussion on these resolutions is worthy of note. Mr. John Verity thought that, if the League had business at Philadelphia, it ought to bear the expenses of those whom it sent to attend to it. If it was too poor to send five delegates, send half that number. But Mr. John Wetherbee said the idea was something unheard of, at least in political customs. It was generally thought that the honor of going was sufficient recompense. But Mr. Smart came to Mr. Verity's defence, and urged that the League ought to make a reform of the political custom; that its delegates were supposed to act from a sense of duty, representing the League, not at their own expense wholly. Of course they would not expect pay for their time; but actual outlay in expenses ought to be provided for on democratic grounds, taxing all who were immediately represented. The President thought the delegates would insist on paying their own way; he, at least, would go on no other terms. He could not take his expenses from the League while its present poverty was a thing so patent to all. Mr. Ranney ended the discussion by saying that he would take up a contribution on his own responsibility, and use it as far as it went to pay expenses of those delegates who would accept it.

The choice of officers for the ensuing year was then made as follows:—

PRESIDENT—F. E. Abbot.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—Horace Seaver and Mrs. J. W. Smith.

CORRESPONDING SECRETARY—George A. Bacon.

RECORDING SECRETARY—Mrs. E. D. Hapgood.

TREASURER—John Wetherbee.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE—R. H. Ranney, Dr. H. B. Storer, H. S. Williams, M. T. Dole, Mrs. Etta Bullock, Mrs. Mary Albertson.

The President called on Mr. Stevens for remarks. Mr. Stevens responded at some length, saying that it was his first appearance at the League. He was a believer in the League, if it had anything to do. If there was vitality in the issues presented, it would manifest itself. Its very existence was proof that, in the minds of a few people at least, there was danger ahead, and especial vigilance needed. He did not think, however, that this fear was very general among liberal people. The great current of American life swept so strongly on away from intolerance, towards the widest possible religious liberty, he was, for one, quite inclined to regard the few recent manifestations of a contrary spirit as eddies in the stream. The spirit of the age was on the side of freedom. So far as he knew, all the great secular papers of the country, and many of the religious journals, had in strongest terms condemned these very outrages on religious freedom which the League condemned. There were large numbers in the Christian churches themselves who took the same liberal view, while the great secular life of the nation by its own force was steadily growing in the right direction. He did not anticipate the evils which some predicted; yet he would not throw cold water, or chill their ardor. If they saw a work to do, it was for them courageously to do it. There was the courage of action when one saw a work to do; there was also, where action is felt to be premature, the courage of waiting.

Mr. Verity remarked that he thought a practical work for the Liberal Leagues would be to subscribe funds to test the Philadelphia case in a higher court.

Mr. Seaver, who on account of illness had declined an earlier invitation to speak, felt called on to notice a portion of the remarks submitted by Mr. Stevens. He thought there was a great deal to do, and much reason for fear. Liberty has now as ever to fight its way, and perhaps that is the reason she is always represented as a warrior, with sword in hand. Eternal vigilance is her price. He would not trust the "Spirit of the Age." He put faith alone in liberal ideas. He was not so sure we had not already begun to go backward. What do we see? The religious party trying to murder the Constitution. Another, seeking to destroy the public school—that poor man's college,—which ought to be made and kept forever secular. Let Catholicism get in the ascendancy, as it threatens to do within the next century, and there is an end of free institutions. It would not be different with Protestantism. The same result either way—Catholic or Protestant: they would murder each other, and show liberals no quarter. We shall never be free until there is no sectarianism in our institutions throughout the land. There must be no taxation for religion in any form; Church and State must be separated as wide as the poles.

After short speeches by two or three others in a similar vein, the President announced that the hour of adjournment had arrived, and the meeting adjourned.

HOMAGE TO MR. SUMNER.—This reminds me of a little incident at Mount Auburn that I witnessed a few weeks ago. Our party were standing by the beautiful Chickering monument, when an elegant landau approached, and a handsome mulatto, leaning out, asked our driver to point out Sumner's grave. (His driver was a white man.) The simple marble slab, marking the great man's resting-place, was in full view; so the landau was driven very near; then a quartette of elegantly-attired colored people alighted, drew round the grave with reverent, sorrowful mien, knelt with bowed heads for a minute, then covered the sod with bouquets and wreaths of rarest flowers. Something choked me as I looked, and the tears dimmed my eyes while I thought how grand a champion those people had lost.—Anna Dickinson.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

A WINTER WALK: CHRISTMAS.

BY JOHN ALBEE.

It is not often Sunday draws
Me to that house where good men come;
Yet worship I, and the same cause
Which sends them there keeps me at home.

But on one holy winter morn
I took an unaccustomed way
To church, to hear how Christ was born,—
In mangers then as now he lay.

I cheerful said, always some good
Falls in our way, however vex;
Though scarce a worshipper, I would,
If not a sermon, find a text.

O'er snow new-fallen, pure, and fine,
I walked the virgin world alone;
But soon a tiny trail crossed mine,
And near, a field-mouse dead as stone.

Clumsy with snow his little feet
Had borne him just across the road,
In search of food, or else to meet
Perchance more sheltered, safe abode.

There in an inch or two of snow
I found him in the morning sun;
His limbs were stiff, his head was low,
His work, whate'er it was, was done.

He held no backward-going pace,
But forward in his last track died;
"Tis well!" with staff I tried to trace
On th' unsoiled tablet by his side;

Musing—"Most choose the less, not more;
Or, chanting an old withered song,
Die at some inn where oft before
They lodged and lost themselves too long."

Thence onward slow my steps I paced
Beside the drooping evergreen,
Or where the bare oak interlaced
The sky that on it seemed to lean.

These beauties past, at length I near
The church steps with the goats and sheep;
A goodly flock, prepared to hear
The tale that eighteen centuries weep.

The preacher droned and canted well;
The men dozed off, the women stared;
Hurtled the dread words heaven and hell,
But no one heard and no one cared.

I not asleep, nor quite awake,
Numbered the nothings of the house,
Revolving which my text to make,
The living priest or that dead mouse.

But ere the sermon had its close,
And picked each dry bone of the feast,
The words reversed themselves, and rose—
The living mouse, the phantom priest!

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 8.

George Isles, 50 cents; D. H. Clark, 70 cents; Mrs. Alvah Lord, 10 cents; A. J. Davis & Co., $4.85; H. L. Green, $2; J. F. Clarkson, 50 cents; J. Hiatt, $3; Noyes, Holmes & Co., 20 cents; Hall & Co., 20 cents; D. D. Lum, 50 cents; G. D. Hubbard, 60 cents; B. Rodman, 30 cents; American News Co., $4.95; G. P. Putnam, $2.25; Thos. J. Sizer, 25 cents; H. S. Rugg, 85 cents; Capt. Maxse, $117.81; W. R. Cole, $5.75; Jos. E. Peck, $1.75; F. R. Johnson, 25 cents; S. A. Wood, $3.20; Fred L. Sturgis, $3.20; R. W. Taylor, $3.20; Bennett Allen, 55 cents; Mrs. Alvah Lord, 75 cents; Jacob Beede, 20 cents; M. Loudsbury, $3.20; J. C. Trowbridge, $3.20; Mrs. S. M. Wetmore, $3.20; L. L. Rose, $3.75; Joseph Marsh, $1; E. P. Gregory, $3; D. R. Lamson, $2; Emerson Bentley, $2.20; Edw. H. Adams, $2; Cash, $3.20; J. W. Ross, $1.50; George Chamberlin, $6.20; W. E. Darwin, $4; Dan'l Whitmore, 75 cents; E. R. Potter, $3; S. F. Woodard, $3.20; George Ramsden, $3.20; Asa Fenn, $3.20; R. L. Baker, $3; Wm. Allen, $2; Lawrence Tucker, $3; Henry Nillard, $3.20; G. A. Atwood, $1; George H. Stevens, $3; Benj. Breed, $2.20; M. A. Blanchard, $3.20; E. L. Seufit, $2.25; O. H. Tennant, $3; F. W. Brigham, $3.20.

RECEIVED.

Books.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. By Octavius B. Frothingham. Third Edition. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1875. [Price $1.50.]
WHAT YOUNG PEOPLE SHOULD KNOW. The Reproductive Function in Man and the Lower Animals. By Burt G. Wilder. With 26 Illustrations. Boston: Estes & Lauriat. 1875. [Price $1.50.]
THE SOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT OF CHRISTIANITY. By Thomas Lumisden Strange, late a Judge of the High Court of Madras. London: Trübner & Co. 1875.
BRIQ-A-BRAC SERIES. Personal Reminiscences by Cornelia Knight and Thomas Raikes. Edited by R. H. Stoddard. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co. 1875.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

THE GREAT HOPE. A Sermon by O. B. Frothingham. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1875.
REASONABLE RELIGION. A Sermon by O. B. Frothingham. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1875.
PUBLICATIONS of Thomas Scott, Esq., London.—Positive Religion: Its Basis and Characteristics. Lecture II. By the late Rev. James Cranbrook.—Toleration. By Charles Bray.—Reason, Religion, and Revelation. By Edw. Vansittart Neale.—Signs of the Times: May, 1875.
THE PERSONAL EXPERIENCES OF W. H. Munier in Spirit Photography. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1875.
A CHECK TO FANATICISM. By Henry Heberling.
THE RIGHTS OF LABOR. An Essay on Political Reform. By Leonard Brown.
THE CANADIAN MONTHLY and National Review. April, 1875.
THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. May, 1875. Boston: L. C. Bowles.
THE COMPANION AND AMERICAN ODD FELLOW. May, 1875. Columbus, O.: M. C. Lilley & Co.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 13, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRANCIS
W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

NOTICE.

The Fourth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held in Toledo, Ohio, at No. 35 Monroe Street, on Saturday, June 5, 1875, at 2 o'clock P. M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The eighth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston as follows:—

May 27th, 7½ P. M. Session in Horticultural Hall (Lower) for business and for free discussion on the objects and work of the Association.

May 28th. Two sessions in Beethoven Hall (Washington Street, near Boylston), at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M. for essays and addresses. Essay at the morning session, by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Forces in Religion."

Essay at the afternoon session, by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion."

Addresses will follow each essay, the speakers to be announced hereafter.

Friday evening, May 28th, there will be a social festival in Parker Memorial Hall, Berkeley Street, for brief speeches, music, refreshments, conversation, and for subscription to the funds of the Association.

It is hoped that as many of the members and friends of the Association as possible will be present at this annual meeting. Members who cannot be present are hereby reminded of the annual subscription fee, which it is desired they should send to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

THE NEW YORK Graphic argues that Shakspeare was not even a Christian, in reply to the Spirit of the Times, which held that he was a Catholic. But what he was nobody knows, or is likely to know.

A THIRD edition of Mr. Frothingham's Religion of Humanity has been called for, and G. P. Putnam's Sons (whose advertisement will be found elsewhere) have issued it in faultless style. Whoever wishes to read Mr. Frothingham at his best will find in this book his noblest thought. Surely no one can rise from reading these pages without a clearer insight into the real religion of this age, and a stronger purpose to lift conduct and character up to its high level.

THE SERIES of Science Primers, edited by Prof. Huxley, Roscoe, and Balfour, and published by D. Appleton & Co., is unrivalled for purposes of primary instruction in the sciences of which they treat. The latest issued is that on Astronomy, by J. Norman Lockyer, editor of Nature, and well-known by scientific men through his own independent scientific researches and discoveries. It contains numerous illustrations, and, like the other treatises of the same series, is written in the simplest and clearest style. The price is one dollar.

DR. AZEL AMES's Sex in Industry, just issued by J. R. Osgood & Co., is a mate for Dr. Clarke's Sex in Education, which made such a stir a year or so ago. Dr. Ames takes views quite analogous to Dr. Clarke's. He finds all forms of continuous industry to be injurious to women's health, and thinks it imperatively necessary that they should be permitted a "periodical absence without pecuniary loss." There is a vehement difference of opinion on this point between most physicians and most reformers, and a vehement perplexity in the minds of a great many others; but there can be no question that such books as this are sure to do good by calling attention to a very important subject.

NOW IS THE TIME TO ENLIST!

The Boston Liberal League, as will be seen by the special report on another page, held its second annual meeting last Friday night, elected its officers, and passed resolutions which will receive, it is hoped, the earnest attention of all our readers. The following letters, from men whose toils and triumphs are written imperishably in the records of humanity's long struggle for liberty and equal rights, were read to the meeting by the President, and received with the applause which every passing year does but deepen and widen at the mention of their honored names:—

MR. PHILLIPS' LETTER.

[BOSTON], 12 April, 1875.

DEAR SIR:—

Excuse me for not writing earlier. My wife's illness and other things that demanded my attention wholly prevented correspondence. I have just found time to read your close, clear, and most exhaustive statements of the case. They seem to leave nothing to be said. Of course you see I am entirely with you in your views [on the church-exemption question]—cannot see how Eliot and the rest fail to see their soundness.

But as to speaking, I am wholly unable to coöperate with you now. I have not been able, with one exception, to leave my house of an evening for seven months, and during the day cannot promise to-day to do anything at a fixed hour to-morrow.

This forces me to refuse all invitations to speak. Hence I must ask to be excused.

Yours truly,

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

F. E. ABBOT.

MR. GARRISON'S LETTER.

ROXBURY, May 2, 1875.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Circumstances oblige me to decline the invitation extended to me, in behalf of the Boston Liberal League, to participate in the proceedings at the next meeting of the League on the evening of the 7th inst.; but I am heartily with that organization for repealing the exemption of church property from taxation, excluding the Bible from our common schools, and making the separation between Church and State wide as the poles asunder. Religion, under whatever form or however technically designated, must stand or fall upon its own merits.

Yours for equal rights,

WM. LLOYD GARRISON.

The proposal by the Philadelphia Liberal League to commence immediately preparations for a general gathering of all the Leagues at that city in the Centennial Year, and its appointment of a Committee for that purpose consisting of Damon Y. Kilgore, Mary Pratt, and J. B. Beam, at least open the way for important practical work. The Boston League has now voted its approval of the plan, and elected five delegates to the preliminary meeting of next September; namely, A. Bronson Alcott, B. F. Underwood, John Wetherbee, George A. Bacon, F. E. Abbot. There are nearly thirty Leagues which have reported their formation to THE INDEX, and probably many others which have neglected to do so; and if all of these should also elect five delegates apiece, a very respectable conference in point of number might be assembled to draw up an effective plan for holding a great Convention in 1876. They might prepare and issue a combined appeal to the country to take up this great reform, to institute new Leagues all over the country, and to make the growing demand of American intelligence and patriotism for a more completely and consistently secularized Republic heard, and heard respectfully, from Maine to California.

The plan of proceedings now proposed to secure these great results is perfectly democratic and free from all objections. No self-constituted junta or ring have got together in a back-room, laid their wires, and cut-and-dried the whole movement so as to keep control of it and secure the offices for themselves. But Philadelphia publicly invites the radicals of the country to meet in fair and open conference, each League sending five delegates to represent it, and the whole assembly thus being untrammelled in its entire action. Boston responds to this invitation, elects her delegates, and hopes that her sister cities and towns will do the same. Never was a more favorable opportunity than now for effectual union of the liberal forces for a bold and vigorous campaign. Let every American community, large or small, where a dozen or twenty-five liberals can be found, organize a Liberal League forthwith, elect the best delegates they can, and make the great gathering of 1876 memorable forever in the history of free thought by the grand results that shall grow out of it.

For mark: the Liberal League is not for talk, but ACTION. If five hundred or a thousand Leagues should be represented in 1876 (and there is no reason why they may not, if you only do your part to-day), a plan of combined action can be determined on by the Convention which shall ultimately put an end for all time to the constant humiliations and insults and outrages to which free thought is still exposed in this country in the name of Law.

For one, I chafe with irrepressible indignation at these wrongs; they are committed against every man who thinks and dares to speak his honest thought. If Paul was willing to be "reckoned a fool for Christ's sake," I am willing to be reckoned a fool for Freedom's sake; and therefore I appeal to all you radicals who have the pride of freemen and the enthusiasm of liberty burning in your souls, to close ranks, forward march, and meet at Philadelphia in 1876!

Yours, if you are Freedom's,

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP.

Perhaps no two words could be chosen that would better express the main ideas of the Free Religious movement than the words Freedom and Fellowship.

That movement is conditioned on the right of every individual mind to entire freedom of inquiry and opinion. Liberty of thought in matters of religion, even though the thought should run counter to all the old theological claims, is perhaps the most vital impulse of the movement. In this respect the movement is the logical ultimatum of the old Protestant principle of individual judgment in the reading and interpretation of the Bible. The principle of mental freedom was but partially stated, indeed, by the Protestant Reformers, yet it was the real life of the Reformation; and the right of individual inquiry and judgment, being once allowed, soon became a power that broke through the illogical bounds by which it was at first attempted to limit it. The power that was to sit in judgment in reading the Bible and determining its meaning began soon to question some things that were in the Bible. Then it began to be asked whether the power that was qualified to interpret an oracle might not have been equal to giving the oracle; and finally came the declaration of absolute mental liberty in religion, unrestricted by the claims of any book or church or specific religion or special religious teacher: and this is the central impulse of the Free Religious movement.

But this principle alone would not explain the movement. At least, when the Free Religious Association came, which was an attempt to give expression to the movement by a simple form of organization, another principle besides that of mental liberty showed its vitality. And this was the impulse of fellowship. It had begun to be felt that freedom need not necessarily separate; that the fullest recognition of the right of individual inquiry and judgment need not of necessity lead to individual isolation; that free thought, if it were worth anything, if it were really the human mind emancipated from artificial and unnatural thralldom, ought to be affirmative, positive, constructive; and that there should be in a body of people thus mentally emancipated such large and trustful acknowledgment of the sacredness of individual thought as to draw them into active sympathy and cooperation with each other. In fine, it had begun to be felt that there might be real fellowship in religion, genuine coöperation in spirit and in aim, on the basis of perfect individual liberty of thought. Heretofore religious fellowships had rested on the basis of a dogma or on the intellectual acceptance of a common faith. They were fellowships of the "brethren" of a sect or a church, the very terms of the bond of union excluding and disfellowshipping vastly more than were included. But why should there not be fellowship on the basis of trust in rational thought? The opinions to which reason may lead individuals may be various; but in reason itself, to which they all appeal, is a common bond of union. Individual consciences may differ and conflict; but in the common recognition of a law of right they may come together on one platform. On the answers to the questions, "What is true?" or "What is right?" men will divide and dispute; but in the aspiration after truth and right are elements as universal as the human race. And people are beginning to see that religious fellowship may more securely rest on common mental aspirations, trusts, impulses that naturally inhere in the human mind, than on any dogmas or systems of theological faith at which any individual minds or particular sects may have arrived. Where there is the most genuine freedom, not only claimed but respected, there may be also the closest and most abiding fellowship.

These remarks have been suggested by the title of a book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, which has been prepared by a Committee of the Free Religious Association, and which is about to be published.

by the well-known publishers, Roberts Brothers. It is a compilation of Essays and Addresses by different writers and speakers, representing various phases of liberal religious thought, both speculative and practical. In itself it well illustrates its title; and its title well embodies the two characteristics which best describe the most vital religious tendencies of our time.

W. J. P.

TOO MUCH GOVERNMENT.

It is Thomas Jefferson, I believe, who is credited with the remark that "that country is governed best which is governed least." Our fathers seemed to be of this opinion when they resisted the too-much governing propensity of George the Third, and established the independence of the United States upon a form of government as simple as it was wise. Their idea was to decentralize the governing power, and to distribute it as widely as possible; instead of lodging it in one man's hands, or in one parliament, they sought to put it into the hands of every citizen. This was in substance and effect to diminish government quantitatively, and to increase it qualitatively; to divest it of political and invest it with moral significance. Thus the New World got less government, and better. Thus it got a government in which there was less of will and more of conscience; a government located, not where the throne was, but where the individual, responsible citizen was.

The Jeffersonian maxim, above quoted, obtained a good statement and a good illustration in the original form of government adopted by the first United States. The grand idea of local self-government was announced, and the grander one of individual sovereignty plainly suggested. The world was astonished at the audacious assertion of the capacity of man to govern himself, and of the needlessness of kings, of titled aristocracies, and unpopular parliaments. It was astonished, and yet delighted; for the unspoiled heart of humanity is always ready to receive a nobler ideal, though it grope and stumble long and wearily to realize it.

Even the American people have faltered in the carrying out of the idea that inspired their independence. The federal government of these United States is not to-day so liberal and democratic, either in form or in spirit, as it was in the beginning. The new Constitution of 1787, which superseded the original articles of confederation, surrendered somewhat of the idea of local self-government and individual sovereignty, and embodied a more centralized form of government, which assumed not only to control the action of the several States but of the people of the States. This retrogressive step in the history of American liberty was taken, it is true, in obedience to what was thought to be the stern necessity of the time; but it was vigorously contested by some of the noblest and wisest spirits among the revolutionary fathers, who believed that the conferring of such extraordinary powers upon the central government was dangerous to the liberties of the people. Then and there this nation reclothed itself with political instead of moral significance; then and there it laid the foundation for the division of the people into two great political parties—one striving for, the other against, the enlargement of the powers of the central government—and set in motion the whole train of strifes and corruptions which have characterized American politics from that day to this.

From that day to this, the federal government has been growing in self-consciousness, and gathering into its hands increase of power. More and more it has made its influence felt throughout the States, and encouraged the habit among the people of looking to and depending upon its edicts and its action. Especially has this tendency to centralization increased since the civil war, during the whole period of which the federal government was well nigh omnipotent, and the States hardly more than dependencies upon it. In a superstitious reverence for the Union, which that war engendered, the old doctrine of State sovereignty and local self-government has been greatly overshadowed, and in not a few cases ruthlessly sacrificed. Not only by its military but by its civil arm does the central government make its power felt in every part of the land. The army of federal office-holders is immense; and, scattered as they are throughout the length and breadth of the nation, they are able to and do exercise a most potent influence in controlling local elections and local legislation. Thus the people are actually ruled by a horde of politicians who take their cue directly or indirectly from the central government; we have little or no political existence that is not shaped by its ambitious hand, and all our civilization is tainted by corrupting influences that flow from national politics.

It is to be hoped that this tendency to depend upon a strong, centralized government will have soon its culmination in this country, and that then we shall return to the simple and pure democracy with which our fathers started,—trying again to prove how true it is that when a people are governed least they are governed best, because the individual conscience is developed, and the sense of individual responsibility brought to bear upon the life of each and all. Both from our national and State governments we need less interference with personal and private affairs. If by both congress and the local legislature fewer laws were passed to regulate those concerns which the people in their individual and social capacity could much more wisely attend to, it would be far better for us all. As it is, we are perfectly enmeshed in a chaos of acts and statutes which all the lawyers and courts in the land are kept busy quarrelling over and trying to explain. Considering how hasty and foolish most of our legislation is, and how corrupt our national and State politics are, would it not be better if we had fewer and shorter sessions of congress and the legislature? Suppose congress were to meet but once in four years (every time a new Administration were chosen), and each State legislature but once in three years, does any one imagine that the real interests of the people would be neglected thereby? Indeed, I think that all except politicians would feel relieved and rejoiced greatly by such an arrangement. Possibly we might thus the sooner find that we could afford to abolish the State house and the capitol altogether, and depend alone upon the schoolhouse and the town-house, the occasional congress of social science and of inter-national arbitration.

The disposition which we Americans have to hasten into politics with every matter that concerns our social welfare, and to settle all such questions by party voting, I can but think is one we too much indulge in. Whatever momentous issue we so strive to settle generally contrives soon to get unsettled again. What is voted up to-day may be voted down to-morrow. A written law determines nothing permanently, any more than a written creed. Besides, both may prove very embarrassing to a larger thought and a better deed. Public opinion is stronger than any law; private conscience is often truer. What you can build by freedom, and on the basis of actual public and private morality, that you are entitled to build; nothing more. Anything which invokes force or provokes it, this may establish things temporarily, but not permanently. Only the calm and slow-working power of truth and love can create and ordain that which shall last forever.

A. W. S.

A LESSON FROM LEXINGTON:

APRIL 19, 1875.

At this first centennial anniversary of the "glorious morning," as Samuel Adams called it, when was "fired the shot heard round the world," one feels like celebrating the event (though he cannot put his foot on to the sacred ground) by some commemorative ceremony. Every American whose heart beats true to liberty must honor the men who fought for it, and will recall with patriotic pride the day that inaugurated a war which issued in our national independence.

But our whole duty does not consist in defending a liberty which our forefathers won. We have a liberty to win for ourselves, an inalienable right to a religious independence which they could not bequeath to us. There is now going on a revolution in habits of thought and in religious convictions, which is as significant and far-reaching in its influence as the political Revolution of 1775. There is a war of religious ideas in every community, fought without bayonet of steel and bloodshed, but just as true and fierce a struggle of ideas as that which occurred at Lexington a century ago.

Our forefathers rebelled against "taxation without representation." We are protesting and rebelling against taxation of the mind with all sorts of superstitions, vulgarities, religious nonsense, and pious fraud, which, in our opinion, sap the mind of its vigor, suppress originality, confine the sympathies, cramp the reason, and impoverish the mind, more than the three-penny tax on the tea hurt the pockets of our grandsires. Like them, we are contending for a democratic idea, a republican principle. They protested against the doctrine of the "divine right" of kings to rule in State; we protest against the divine right of kings in Church. We carry into religion what they carried out in government.

Republicanism in State in 1775 meant exactly what

Radicalism in religion means in 1875—the right of the individual to think for himself, act for himself, and rule himself, in opposition to the claims of kings and traditionary laws. The American Revolution settled this question, that we shall not bow down to a king in government; and we are now in the midst of a revolution to decide the question whether we shall bow down to these spiritual kings, the Catholic pope or the Protestant Bible, interpreted by little popes called preachers. One fought for political liberty, justice, equality, and progress; the other is a struggle for religious liberty, equality, and progress.

However long and severe may be the battle of ideas, we cannot doubt the issue will be the overthrow of all kinds of spiritual kings, and the establishment of the right of man to use his reason and common-sense, and rule himself in religion as he does in politics. Already, with many of us, the battle is won. We have had our Lexington and Yorktown; but thousands of others stand wavering, doubtful whether to endure taxation and remain a tory son and defender of the old king-faiths, or join the volunteers in the army of freedom.

What Republicanism has done for our government it will do, we believe, for our religion,—make it free, rational, and progressive. It will emancipate the mind from bondage to debasing superstition, traditional fear, idle ceremony, and spiritual tyranny, and make the religious slave a free man.

If you lack confidence in the principles of Free Religion, learn a lesson from the men of 1775. See how the men who fought for liberty were thrice-armed, because their quarrel was just. It certainly was confidence in the justice of their cause which sustained the patriots when they were retreating from Long Island, New York Island, Fort Washington, Philadelphia, and shivering with bleeding feet around their camp-fires at Valley Forge; and Washington himself almost despaired, and declared that, unless he had relief within ten days, he feared "the game was up." "One with God is a majority," said Frederick Douglass. Let every man who thinks he is right feel like that "one."

Another lesson we religious republicans can learn from our patriot sires is fidelity to conviction.

British gold bought Benedict Arnold, and his name is a hissing in our mouths. They tried to buy Gen. Joseph Reed by a proffer of £10,000; but the noble man replied, "I am not worth purchasing; but, such as I am, the king of Great Britain is not rich enough to buy me." I do not know but some people to-day sell their interest in truth for a little interest in business. Like Judas, they betray their Master for a few pieces of silver. We need men in these times as much as they did a century ago—men of moral backbone, men who will stand by their principles like the soldier of 1775 by his guns. When the members of Congress came up to sign the Declaration of Independence, John Hancock, who headed it, said to the others: "We must be unanimous; there must be no pulling different ways; we must all hang together." Ben. Franklin replied, "Yes, we must all hang together, or else we shall hang separately."

The dreadful alternative of "hanging separately" doesn't stare us in the face; but if we desert our post, and turn traitor to duty, it would be about as well for humanity if we felt the shame and remorse of the betrayer of old, and went out and hanged ourselves.

Another lesson we may learn from our century fathers, and that is self-sacrifice. George Washington is said to have made the most eloquent speech of that generation, more eloquent even than Patrick Henry's famous speech in the Virginia Assembly. It was in a convention met just before the war to consider relief for Boston, laid under embargo by the hateful Port Bill. Washington arose, and quietly said: "I will raise one thousand men, and subsidize them at my own expense, and march myself at their head for the relief of Boston." And the orator sat down. Washington was rich, but unlike most of the rich men of that day, who were Tories, probably because they feared the shattering of their fortunes in the shock of war. They loved pounds better than principle.

Said Gen. Stark to his troops before Bennington: "There are the red-coats! Before night we must conquer them, or Molly Stark is a widow." Napoleon never made a more inspiring address to the Grand Army. Of course the Americans were victorious.

Now the times may not demand of us that we offer our fortune, like Washington, or our life, like Stark, for liberty; but it does appeal to every radical that he give a part of his fortune and his life to establishing and defending on this continent the principles of republicanism in religion.

The idea that some radicals entertain and advocate, if they have force enough to speak at all, that we must wait, sit still, fold hands, and let things "right themselves," is a moral paralysis that will effect about as much in the real work of reform as a dried-up mullein-stock in a sheep pasture. As well say that our forefathers would have won their independence by quietly paying for British stamps, and silently sipping British tea! "Freedom in the air"? Yes, because it got under the hair of their heads, and stirred their blood.

The "spirit of the age" fights no battles. It is a ghost, and cannot strike a blow for liberty unless it takes possession of you and me, and leads us out to Lexington.

W. H. S.

Communications.

APPEAL TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE!

Is the liberty of conscience guaranteed inviolable by the Constitution of the United States a sham?

The signers of the following statement appeal to the American people for justice, for the fulfilment of sacred promises, and reparation for a foul insult perpetrated by two zealous Pennsylvania judges. Can the citizens of the Great Republic afford to have their liberties trampled under foot? And will they allow their country to be held up to the ridicule and scorn of the enlightened world?

Citizens of the Republic, read this!

PHILADELPHIA, March 11, 1875.

On Friday, March 5, 1875, the undersigned accompanied Mr. Julius Nieland on his way to procure his second naturalization papers; Mr. Nieland had his "first papers" with him, duly made out two years and two days previously. The certificate of citizenship was filled out for him, whereupon we were told to go into any court to take the oath. Court room No. 2 being less thronged than the other court rooms, we entered there and applied to one of the two judges present. Immediately an official handed us a Bible, which remained in our hands, the said clerk having left us very quickly and there being no table near by. The judge began to read the oath, when we told him that we wished to "affirm." Upon a sign by the judge the clerk took the Bible away from us, asking us in a rude manner, "Why did you take it?" We answered, "Because you gave it to us." Then the judge asked, "Have you a reason for not wanting to swear by the Bible?" We evaded the direct answer by simply repeating our wish to "affirm," and asked why we should not be allowed to do so. The judge repeating his question, we admitted that we had a reason. He then asked us whether we did not believe in the doctrines of the Bible. We answered that we believed in morality, but not in "revelations"; Mr. Nieland here said he was an infidel. Thereupon the judge asked whether we believed in a supreme being. We did not enter upon this question, having neither time nor inclination to explain our views. The judge now refused to administer the oath (or affirmation), and told Mr. Nieland, that, being an infidel, he could not become a citizen. The other judge nodded his approval, ringing the bell at the same time to announce the adjournment of the court. We asked him for his name and that of the other judge. Their names were Pratt and Hare.

The foregoing proves that, although we endeavored to prevent giving offence, the inquisitorial examination of the judge compelled us to profess a creed, and that the latter gave him a pretext for grossly violating the liberty of conscience guaranteed by the Constitution.

(Signed) F. BIELEFELD.

I certify to the correctness of the above statements.

(Signed) JULIUS NIELAND.

MORE ABOUT "WORDS, WORDS, WORDS!"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—If I thought that I had hastily and inconsiderately drawn the conclusion I did from the heading you prefixed to my letter on the "anti-Christian" controversy, I should tender you an immediate and ample apology for my haste and inconsiderateness. But knowing, as I do, that the only two persons besides myself here who (so far as I am aware) saw my letter in print were impressed in precisely the same way as I was, and that one of them spoke to me of the way you had headed it as an injustice before any other words were exchanged by us on the subject, I can but think that, if inconsiderateness there were, it was with you in taking a step so extremely open to misconstruction.

You say I did myself what I accused you of doing. Pardon me. What I complained of was that my case had been injured in advance by being labelled "Words, Words, Words!" My intervention in the controversy only occurred after your case had been fully stated; and then I confined myself to argument against it. I am extremely surprised at this attempted retort.

Yours truly,

WM. D. LESUEUR.

OTTAWA, May 1, 1875.

[If our correspondent had only taken the slight trouble of prefixing to his article such a heading as he would like, no misunderstanding could have arisen out of the necessity of supplying this deficiency. That any misunderstanding of the one we hurriedly prefixed might arise, we did not dream at the time; but of course we regret it very sincerely now, inasmuch as our unfortunate selection has given quite unintended annoyance.

We only said that Mr. LeSueur had done "in substance" what he accused us of doing: the difference he points out above in the two cases is a real one, but not at all important. What was the "injury" he complained of? Simply that we had characterized his article (as he mistakenly construed the heading) as mere "words"; although a very little reflection on the note we appended should have undeceived him. But he did really characterize our own discussion with Mr. Morse as essentially mere verbiage. That is the gravamen of the charge in either case—a charge which we did not make, but one which Mr. LeSueur did make and has not withdrawn. Whether the charge was contained in a prefixed heading or in a subsequent criticism, is an utterly trivial circumstance of the case. In our turn we are "extremely surprised" that, if he considers a charge of useless verbiage offensive in a mere heading, he should consider it inoffensive when pressed deliberately in a main article; and that with his own view of the matter, when his attention has been called to the fact of his having made this charge himself, he should not hasten to withdraw it. But we do not even wish any such withdrawal on our own account; we took not the slightest offence at the accusation of having carried on a profitless discussion that turned on nothing but "names," but as cheerfully submitted to this criticism as we do to most other criticisms that seem to us unreasonable. More than "two persons" have expressed to us their astonishment at Mr. LeSueur's misapprehension of the heading complained of; and their astonishment will scarcely be less at his inability to perceive even now that he had really done himself what he merely imagined us to do.—Ed.]

"UNWORTHY MOTIVES."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

"How can it be a matter of very great importance what name a man adopts, so long as he thoroughly understands the state of his own mind, and is not governed either in its adoption or rejection by an unworthy motive?"

The above is an extract from a communication by Mr. Wm. D. LeSueur to THE INDEX of April 8, upon which I desire briefly to comment. This extract is really the whole article in embryo. It is the root to which may be traced the branches, leaves, and blossoms of the entire vine. In it are compactly folded the ideas, the reasonings, and also the sophistries that are discernible through the whole communication. By his sophistical method of putting the question, Mr. LeSueur assumes to decide the very point at issue, which is: Can a man, unless governed by an unworthy motive, adopt a name that misrepresents his position, or reject one that correctly indicates it? Now I assume, Mr. Editor, that there is a class of reformers who are laboring to overthrow all there is in Christianity that gives it its name; such as the belief in miracles and all the absurd traditions of the Church, all superstitious veneration for its ceremonies and its books,—in short, everything about it of human device, and not elemental in all forms of faith.

It is these only that form what is called Christianity, for the utter eradication of which the Free Religionists are laboring. Now the question is: Can a man engaged in this reform, however thoroughly he may "understand the state of his own mind," refuse to be known as an anti-Christian, unless governed by an unworthy motive? I think he cannot. If he opposes Christianity, it is because he deems it an evil. Then why not hoist his true colors? How much headway would Garrison have made against slavery, had he been as gingerly towards his pro-slavery neighbors as Mr. LeSueur avows himself towards his Christian neighbors? Suppose Dr. Miner should call himself a free-runist, and decline to be called a prohibitionist on the ground that "the term would be understood in a very much wider sense than he attaches to it himself": what should we say of his motives, or sanity even? If men would keep in mind that in opposing Christianity they are literally doing Jesus' work over again, the name of anti-Christian would not be such a bugbear. But—"short articles from voluntary contributors." Z.

EAST SOMERVILLE, Mass., April 29.

[We owe it to Mr. LeSueur to say here that we do not think for a moment that he intended any "sophistries" whatever in the article alluded to, but that his view of the matter discussed is every whit as sincere as our own. And we owe it equally to many other radicals who differ from us, and who decline to call themselves anti-Christians, to say that no "unworthy motives" should be attributed to them at all. There is no need of any such derogatory imputations. So long as the existing confusion respecting Christianity prevails, there is nothing to wonder at in the fact that so many free thinkers fail to discern their own real relations to it. It is our whole object in this discussion to dissipate the fog that envelops the fact; to show clearly that all free thinkers are opposing Christianity the thing, whatever they may do with the name; and that the cause of free thought will be advantaged in every way, when the actual state of the case is universally recognized. But let us avoid casting out insinuations against each other's integrity or honesty. We never mean to do this, though, if we should find occasion, we should not hesitate to make a bold, open charge. As it is, we regret the unconscious blindness of many who think they see; while we respect their motives all the same. The work of THE INDEX is that of an eye-opener; and, however some may be offended by it, we know that more are grateful for it. The chief foe of free thought is intellectual darkness, and not moral obliquity; that is why we aim chiefly at intellectual enlightenment, and bring no "railing accusations."—Ed.]

"SPIRITUALISM."

F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I am much interested in the discussion carried on in your columns of the merits or demerits of "Spiritualism," and pleased with the attitude of the editors of THE INDEX. By your kind permission I would like to "communicate" with the materialistic portion of your readers.

Surrounded as we are by mysteries apparently impenetrable, and conscious how limited our real knowledge is, it seems to me that prudence would counsel moderation in the presence of the Unknown. Out of the jungle of conflicting assertions and opinions I see but one path; it is called "the scientific method." I would apply it to Spiritualism as well as all the problems of life, and calmly await the result instead of losing patience because "epidemic delusions" would not, like Banquo's, down at my bidding.

I detest humbugs as much as any of you can; I despise shams, and indignantly spurn them whenever they are proven to be such. But my experience does not enable me to say conclusively that Spiritualism is so proven. On the contrary, I am not quite certain that Spiritualism is not the answer to the question of the ages: "If a man die, shall he live again?" We all know how exceedingly natural it is to desire to extend this lease of life "beyond this vale of tears"; how prone we are to entertain "this pleasing thought, this longing after immortality." How agreeable to us it would be to be assured that "it is not all of life to live," and that we shall meet our beloved ones "beyond the veil"! I repeat, this is natural and desirable; yet I do not lose sight of the fact that that does not prove it to be true. The wish is often father to the thought. But of one thing I am pretty thoroughly convinced: if Spiritualism does not or cannot prove immortality (or at least a future life), then we may despair of its ever being proven or realized.

The importance, then, of Spiritualism is not to be overlooked by those who care for a future life—of whom I confess myself one. To such serene and self-poised souls as Holyoke, Mill, Strauss, and Lyell, a future state of existence may be an unimportant matter; inasmuch as they had each filled, and well filled, their appropriate niches in the great temple of Nature,—had each sounded full and clear as a note in the grand anthem of the universe. But for such half-finished and undeveloped natures as mine, another life is an absolute necessity, if I ever expect to pay the debt of Nature.

But, however desirable a future life may be, I am fully aware that the proof of its existence must rest on other grounds. Let us interrogate Nature to ascertain, if possible, what facts exist (if any) to render it probable that Spiritualism may be true.

I. What is spirit? Spiritualism, discarding the senseless distinction between matter and spirit, replies: "Matter is an exceedingly attenuated form." But the further question arises: "How is this known?" and the reply is, "Matter in some form or other is the only thing of which we can have any objective conception."

Again it may be asked: "What evidence have we that pure spirit exists independent of the body, when it does not or cannot manifest itself to any of the five senses?"

II. Before proceeding to answer the foregoing question, it might not be out of place to inquire whether our knowledge is confined to the evidence of the senses?

When we recollect that Laplace's Nebular theory, Newton's theory of Gravitation, and the Undulatory theory of Light are all based upon a pure assumption, the existence of an inter-stellar medium called ether, and that even the Atomic theory of Dalton is the fruit of a purely scientific imagination, we shall be prepared to comprehend how much we are indebted to the intellect alone for our knowledge.

It is not always safe to conclude that that which cannot be demonstrated to the senses does not exist. Our senses, in fact, are very limited in power and scope. There is a vast world of physical phenomena below the range of the senses, of which they take no cognizance, and an infinitude above them which they never reach. We will take but two examples. Hearing and Sight. The lowest note which the ear is able to detect is caused by a wave in the air of about 70 feet in length; and, as sound moves through the air, at 32 degs. Fahrenheit, 1090 feet per second, there would be about 16 waves or vibrations of the tympanum per second. The highest audible note or wave moves at the same velocity, but vibrates 38,000 times per second, and is less than one half inch in length.

This, it is true, is an ample range; but, if it were possible to invent such adventitious aids to the ear as the telescope and microscope are to the eye, a new world of sounds would be opened up to the astonished auditory nerves; sound compared to which the hum of the mosquito's wing would resemble rolling thunder.

If we take the solar spectrum, we find that the waves of ether that produce the sensation we call red must follow each other in such quick succession that 37,640 of them would measure but an inch before they possess the power to stir the retina of the eye; while violet, at the other extreme of the spectrum, requires 60,000 waves per inch. This constitutes the range of vision; yet below the red is another set of invisible rays which constitute almost the entire heating power of the sunbeam, while above the violet is yet another band of invisible rays that furnish the actinic or chemical power of sunlight. It is these rays that act so important a part in the economy of Nature; yet they are never seen by the unaided eye.

The sense of sight alone utterly fails to picture to us waves of light following each other at the rate of 535,000,000,000,000 per second, and traversing space at the rate of 192,000 miles in the same short period of time. Yet this is a matter of scientific demonstration. When we take into consideration, also, how easily the senses are imposed upon, we ought to be cautious about condemning or approving anything on their testimony alone.

III. There are at present 63 simple or elementary substances known to chemistry whose protean combinations make up the visible world; amongst these we find a great diversity of qualities. Let us take for instance one only of these qualities—weight. Beginning with platinum, one of the heavier metals, let us gradually ascend the scale and we shall ultimately arrive at hydrogen gas, which is a quarter of a million times lighter than platinum; yet this exceedingly attenuated gas is one of the most powerful agents in Nature. Hydrogen constitutes, as it were, the highest note in the elementary scale. But the intellect refuses to stop here. By the pure force of a logical necessity, it rises to the conception of inter-stellar ether, of which Prof. Tyndall says: "It is almost infinitely more attenuated than any known gas." Yet he adds: "Of its reality most scientific men are as convinced as they are of the existence of the sun and moon."

Now let us candidly consider if it would be doing violence to the scientific imagination to ascend one step higher, and entertain the conception of a still more ethereal but still more potent substance, to which we give the name of spirit; or, if you prefer it, a medium through which the particular form of force called spirit acts or makes itself manifest? I confess the idea is not "unthinkable" to me; neither is it repugnant to my reason. If, then, it is possible for spirit to exist per se, I do not see the impossibility, or improbability of its independent existence after the death of the body; and, if its relations to the body while living are such as they are generally conceded to be, I fail to appreciate the incongruity of its being able to communicate with kindred spirit in the body after its independent existence is established.

IV. I am aware of the objections to the foregoing considerations that will naturally arise in the mind of a pupil of Du Bois Reymond or Büchner: i. e., mind is but a function of matter in an organized form, as secretion is the function of the liver, or digestion that of the stomach; and that function of course ceases with the destruction of the organ. But is it demonstrated that such is the case? I think not. I am not aware that Messrs. Büchner and Co. even claim to have done so; they simply find it a convenient assumption upon which to base an explanation of something otherwise deemed inexplicable. But I submit that, if the scientific materialist is permitted to use an assumption as a stepping stone to the solution of the mystery of mind, the scientific Spiritualist is equally at liberty to do so.

I must not here be understood as denying the Materialistic assumption, or affirming that of the Spiritualist. I simply claim that the Materialist, in the absence of positive knowledge on the subject, is hardly justifiable in dogmatically denying the existence of spirit per se, and even contemptuously reading the honest Spiritualist out of court. I must be permitted to say that I very much regret that such able and usually fair-minded men as Dr. Carpenter and Prof. Tyndall should so far forget themselves as unqualifiedly to condemn Spiritualism, apparently without its ever having occurred to them to apply to it their favorite scientific method. Dogmatism and intolerance do not lose their essential qualities by being transferred from the domain of theology to that of science.

V. There is another objection that may be fairly urged against my views of the nature of spirit. Although analogy may be relied upon to render it probable that spirit may exist separately en masse, yet it fails to account for it in the form of organized individualities, each a distinct entity, an ego.

To this I reply that there is nothing more absurd in the idea of spirit assuming the personal form than there is in the fact of the constituent elements of the body assuming such form. In fact, the further the analogy is pursued, the more complete it is; amounting almost to a demonstration of a personal post mortem existence.

VI. I suppose "the world will little note" whether I stand personally outside or inside of Spiritualism. Yet I deem it proper to say that I am not a Spiritualist; but at the same time I would not deem it wise to place myself under bonds not to become one. For fifteen years I have given the subject of Spiritualism such attention as my time and opportunities permitted; and, as the result of my investigations, I feel bound to declare that it is not to be disposed of by contemptuously pooch-pooching of the whole matter. After all the frauds, hoaxes, and swindles are eliminated, there still remains a solid residuum that cannot, like Othello's love, be "blown to heaven" with a puff of breath.

I freely grant that the opponents of Spiritualism are entitled to the full benefit of the Katie King exposé; yet I think that the true searchers after truth will hesitate to pronounce such men as Professors Hare, Crookes, and Wallace silly dupes of bold imposters.

VII. To sum up in brief:—

1. I take it for granted that the living human body is animated by some thing which the dead one is not.
2. I call that something spirit.
3. I regard its post mortem existence as probable.
4. I see nothing to prevent spirit out of the body from communicating with spirit in the body.
5. I do not know that it actually does so communicate.

6. Whenever the evidence is satisfactory or conclusive, I shall become a Spiritualist. I will "adopt new views so soon as they are proven to be true views."

To forsake error and cleave to what appears to be truth is the duty of every conscientious and rational being. None the less is it our duty to investigate to the extent of our ability, before we either accept or reject.

We must not lose sight of the fact that Spiritualism is not, and never claimed to be, any form of Supernaturalism. It does not teach and lays no claim to the miraculous. Its votaries believe in "the self-existence, the eternity, and the sufficiency of Nature, and the universality and invariableness of natural law."

Until we have fully familiarized ourselves with the capabilities of Nature, and ascertained to a certainty what she can accomplish, I think we ought to be careful about making rash assertions as to what she cannot do.

When we are prepared to answer Pilate's question, "What is truth?" we shall be fully competent to decide adversely to the claims of Spiritualism.

Fraternalty yours, HARRY HOOVER.
{ CURWENSVILLE, Clearfield Co., Pa.,
{ April 14, 1875.

PRAYER.

As the agitation on the subject of prayer seems to have passed away, it is a good time for reviewing some of the doctrines of prayer which have been held. Until recently I thought that only Unitarians, and radical Unitarians at that, defined prayer as simply an acknowledgment of our dependence upon God for all things, the only effect of which is upon ourselves, not upon God. But I find that Dr. Blair and others of the Scotch Church held the same view, and that in the middle of the last century a Professor of Theology at Glasgow, being accused of heresy for holding the same opinion, was condemned by the Presbytery, but acquitted by the Synod, and that the General Assembly refused to reverse the decision of the Synod. [See Clarke's Doctrine of Prayer, p. 105.] If this were all that is meant by prayer, I should have no scruples against praying. I could also thank God for what I have received, for life itself, as I enjoy the merely animal act of living. I should not be willing, however, to use words in a very different signification from what I believe to be the ordinary one, unless the persons with whom I prayed understood my position precisely. But I believe that any one who without prejudice examines all the passages in the New Testament relating to prayer will find that the New Testament permits and enjoins, not only the humble acknowledgment of our dependence upon God, and the giving of thanks, but petition for temporal and spiritual gifts, with the promise that those who ask with faith and in the name of Jesus shall receive. James Freeman Clarke, in his work on Prayer, seems to delude himself with the belief that he is advocating just such prayer and the efficacy of it. He does appear to advocate special providences. But he thinks that "in the name of Christ" means "in the spirit of Christ;" that is, the spirit which says "Thy will be done," and desires nothing contrary to the will of God. But if God is omnipotent to execute his will, and answers our prayers only when they are in harmony with his will, then the same things will be done whether we pray or not; and I do not see wherein the efficacy of prayer consists. Again, Dr. Clarke believes in the freedom of the will. But, if God's will be free, then in any given case there is nothing to compel or to hinder his answering or not answering our prayer; and, as He is supposed to be omniscient, there is nothing to compel or hinder his giving us what we need without our praying for it.

I do not know whether F. W. Robertson has anywhere given his views on the subject of free-will and necessity explicitly; but other opinions of his imply a belief in freedom. He is still further consistent in holding that prayer has no effect on God. But he is unfortunate in the reasons given for his views on prayer. He admits that prayer was never commanded by Christ, and was taught only when asked by his disciples. But he says that, as we need sympathy, and in our deepest feelings recoil from cold, unsympathizing natures, prayer is a necessity of our nature; that in such an hour even the most resigned are not without the wish, "Let this cup pass"; that therefore we have the right of petition. If prayer be simply a wish without the least expectation of having it granted (e. g., the wish that we could fly up to the moon), and all the sympathy we expect is that of a God who knows what is best for us and will give it to us whether we desire it or not, I have no objection to this; though it seems to me to be something very different from petition. Again, he says that Christ prayed; therefore we may, though it may seem to us useless. But if Christ were God, how could prayer to himself have any meaning, and how could prayer to himself teach me to pray to a being who is not myself? If Christ were not God, then he was finite, finite in knowledge, imperfectly developed in his whole intellectual nature, as all finite intelligences are, and must be eternally; and how could any action or all the actions of his life be an infallible rule for me?

Some would have us believe that the Christian, armed with prayer, is not only too strong for the devil and wicked men, but stronger than God himself; that prayer moves the arm that moves the universe. The stock argument against such a view of prayer (and Robertson has adopted it) is its supposed incompatibility with the fact that this universe is a system of laws; that "to heave a pebble on the seashore one yard higher up would change all antecedents from creation, and all consequents to the end of time." But, if I believed in the freedom of the human will, I should have no difficulty here. God could modify any natural force more easily than man; and, if he did, such divine interference would be subject to observation, and it would be found that prayer is a natural force acting like other natural forces according to a law of its own. Whether prayer is answered in this way, I cannot say. Some, with Robertson, say not; while those holding the opposite view are not wanting in number or intelligence. Such persons, while they hold that God does not answer such prayers as he sees are best unanswered, also hold that, in the very act of prayer, the power or absence of power to believe indicates whether God will answer the prayer. Still, in view of the foregoing considerations, I think it impossible on the hypothesis of free will that prayer should be answered. I think it equally evident that, on the hypothesis of necessity, prayer can have no effect on an omniscient God. For, although a very wise being is not necessarily a very good being, an infinitely wise being is necessarily an infinitely good being; and, the very best course for us and for the universe being ever present to his thought, he must adopt it irrespective of our prayers.

I am surprised to find Dr. Clarke asking, "But what reason have we to say that prayer cannot affect God? Is the Divine nature such that it is destitute of sympathy, or does the perfection of God consist in not being moved to feeling by the earnest cry of his child?" In like manner Robertson bases our right of petition on our privilege as children. Now I can understand how the prayer of a child may obtain the sympathy and help of its finite father. For I can suppose that the father is not aware of its suffering or need, until made cognizant of them through the cry of the child. But how is it possible that an omniscient God should not,—I will not say feel sympathy for and give aid to all his creatures as soon as they have need; but how is it possible that in view of such need he should not have made provision for it from all eternity? If, then, I have not fallen into error, prayer can be efficacious only on the hypothesis of necessity and of the finiteness of God's nature. I will not at present attempt to carry the discussion any farther.

W. J. LLOYD.
{ HARVARD DIVINITY SCHOOL,
{ Cambridge, Mass., April, 1875.

FEMALE SUFFRAGE.

HAVERHILL, Mass., Feb. 15, 1875.

MR. ABBOT:—

I read the article in THE INDEX of February 11 on "Woman and the Ballot"; and as the writer says there are two sides to the question, he certainly is on one side, and I on the other. Because nine of your correspondent's female friends do not want the ballot, is that a reason why the tenth should not have it, if she wishes it, and equal justice demands it? I never heard that any woman, in asking for the ballot, did it on the ground that all women must vote. I supposed we should have the same privilege the men have, to vote or not just as we pleased. Now no one will deny, that the best men in city and town rarely vote, or touch politics at all; the consequence of this is, the men who are the least fitted to vote always vote. On the other hand, the ablest women in the land ask for the right; that granted, they will go to the polls and vote conscientiously; leaving "F. H. G.'s" nine-tenths of all grades and conditions at home, until they feel the need of being something more than nonentities in regard to the laws that govern them.

Again, our friend says we are subject to the same laws as men, and our property is equally taxed. Three years ago my tax-bill was ten dollars more than it had ever been before, on the same amount of property. I asked the clerk why it was so. In a cold way he answered, "We voted to raise more money." Is the law just the same for women as it is for men? You can vote away your money and ours, and we must pay whatever you see fit to tax us. If you think we are subject to the same laws, put yourself in our place, and see if you would like a man, without a dollar to his name, voting away your money. Would you think you had all the rights you wanted? I say, women would vote conscientiously; I repeat it. The law of Temperance would be modified and enforced. No woman asking for the ballot would sell her vote for a glass of rum! What twelve men are fit to sit in judgment against a woman? Only a jury composed of both sexes is capable of rendering a just verdict. God speed the day when right will not be weighed with might or numbers, but ceded to all races alike, without regard to color or sex, simply because it is just.

Yours respectfully, E. J.

THE CHURCH PROPERTY sold during the last year by auction by the Italian government yielded the sum of 33,120,929 francs—over six millions and a half of dollars. From Oct. 28, 1867, the date at which the auction sales first commenced, up to Dec. 31, 1874, church property has put into the State treasury 480,778,827 francs, or something like ninety-six millions of dollars.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.

" 13 "	" 25 "	" 8 "	" "
" 26 "	" 51 "	" 6 "	" "
" 52 "	" "	" 5 "	" "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. ABBOT, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. ABBOT, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. ABBOT, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. ABBOT, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. ABBOT. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. ABBOT. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. ABBOT, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5. PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. ABBOT, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. ABBOT, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. ABBOT on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. ABBOT, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, ABBOT, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—"as Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
F. W. NEWMAN, England.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations, The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representations of Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the Church of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Talcott and the River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	1.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
Mr. Charles Darwin on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings for Stories.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouds Intended.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronomatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Posies for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1838 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. 1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eekoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Thelma, Dorothy, and Practical Mysticism.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.75
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Condition Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.35
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Van Fair.....	1.00
The Newcomes.....	1.00
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.00
The Virginians.....	1.00
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.00
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2	1.2
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Daryl, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.
Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

CONSTANT EMPLOYMENT.—At home, male or female, $30 a week warranted. No capital required. Particulars and valuable sample sent free. Address, with six-cent return stamp, C. ROSS, Williamsburg, N. Y.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.
The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON
English and Classica School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

ABOUT CHEAP RATES WESTWARD.—We have frequent inquiries about the cheapest rates, best route, &c., to Western points. We cannot undertake to answer such questions in detail. It is evident that many of our readers are seeking new homes and fortunes in the West, and for complete and reliable detailed information about that country—from Missouri to Oregon and California inclusive—we do not hesitate to commend them to Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent of the Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis. Mr. Ford has thousands of pamphlets, circulars, time-tables, maps, rate-sheets, etc., for free distribution, and answers all questions, promptly and cheerfully, without charge.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,
NEWSPAPER

Advertisement Brokers,
Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.
Complete files for inspection of advertisers.
Lists sent upon application.
Send for estimates.

TWO NEW BOOKS.
MODERN CHRISTIANITY, A CIVILIZED HEATHENISM. By the author of The Fight at Dume Europa's School.

THE IMPEACHMENT OF THE HOUSE OF BRUNSWICK. By Charles Bradlaugh.

The price of each of these books, in paper covers, is SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS. In cloth binding, price ONE DOLLAR AND TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,
4th Ave. & 23d St., New York,
HAVE NOW READY

The Religion of Humanity.
By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Third Revised Edition. Square 12mo. Cloth, extra, $1.50.

"The Religion of Humanity is a marked book,—a cause of admiration and satisfaction to those who hold with the author, a target for the keenest shafts of those who differ from him.... It impresses the thoughtful reader as profoundly sincere, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. The book is a model of scholarly culture, and of vigorous and finished style."—Boston Globe.

"Nobody can peruse Mr. Frothingham's book without respect for his learning, for his mental honesty, for his skill in stating his convictions, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

Mr. Frothingham's Sermons.
Second Series. Published semi-monthly.
Price 5 cents each, or by mail, paid, 10 cents.

Subscriptions received for the year at $2. Complete lists of both series mailed on application.

CHARLES SUMNER.
A fine likeness of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,
By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

KANSAS, COLORADO, NEBRASKA, CALIFORNIA.—The Spring tide of travel Westward has fairly set in. Thousands are migrating to Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and especially California. To such, as a cheap and desirable route to destination, we commend the Missouri Pacific Through Line, by way of St. Louis and Kansas City. Call upon or address Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis, who will cheerfully furnish you correct and complete information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, time-tables, etc., for gratuitous distribution.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.
Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.
Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.
By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS
—OF—
THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by
THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHILOSOPHY.

Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vo's., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:
A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.
Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION
OF
MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,
A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,
has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.
Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU GOING WEST? If so, and you desire full and reliable information as to the cheapest and best route to Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, California, Oregon, or any of the Western States or Territories, we recommend that you call upon or address E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo., who will cheerfully answer all questions, and furnish you with maps, pamphlets, time-tables, rates, etc., free of charge. Now is the season of low rates, and applications should be made at once.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.
Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.
"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.
FOSTER & Co., Publishers, P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE FREE
SUNDAY ADVOCATE.

A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People," and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson; London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,
256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'S
GREAT WORK.

PROPHETIC VOICES
CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.
Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.
A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!
A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FREE DISCUSSION
is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

TYNDALL'S ADDRESS
AT BELFAST.

Seventh Edition,
Containing the First and Second Prefaces replying to his Critics, an extract from the Manchester Lecture, and the paper on "Scientific Materialism" in full. 120 pages. Price 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
MORSE'S NEW BUST OF
THEODORE PARKER.

Cabinet size. Price 50 cents.
Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.
Also for sale at the office of THE INDEX.

REASONS FOR USING THE
EUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN
CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,
—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

20 SUPERIOR MUSIC BOOKS.

NATIONAL HYMN AND TUNE BOOK. New. For Opening and Closing Schools. 40 cents.

For Note Reading in Schools,
AMERICAN SCHOOL MUSIC READERS. Vols. I., II., and III. 35c., 50c., 50c.

CHEERFUL VOICES. 50 cents.

For Sabbath-schools,
RIVER OF LIFE. New Edition. $30 per 100.

For High Schools and Academies,
HOOR OF SINGING. $1.00.
ORPHEAN. $1.00.

For Home Entertainment,
PIANO AT HOME. 4 hands. $2.50.
ORGAN AT HOME. $2.50.
GEMS OF STRAUSS. $2.50.

Cheap Instruction Books.
Winner's New Schools (each 75 cts.), for Piano; for Cabinet Organ; for Melodeon; for Guitar; for Banjo; for Cornet; for Fife; for Accordion; for Clarinet; for Flute; and for Flageolet.

Sold by all the principal music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.
CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1875.

WHOLE NO. 282.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSES.

REV. D. A. WASSON has returned from Europe. Many friends will bid him a most hearty welcome, in which we very cordially join.

THE WHISKEY RING exposure does immense credit to Gen. Bristow and his assistants. Honesty in office should be honored by the whole country.

IN THE fifty-eight years of its existence, the Bible Society has "issued 30,972,786 volumes of the Scriptures." What a lesson is taught by this zealous propagandism! Shall not the Liberals learn anything from it?

THE GOVERNOR of Missouri has appointed June 3 as a day of fasting and prayer, to avert the grasshopper plague. But who or what can avert the plague of superstitions, which seem to be thicker than grasshoppers in Missouri?

IT IS HOPED that all Liberal Leagues which wish to join in the Centennial Convention will elect their delegates to the preliminary September meeting promptly, and send their names to be published in THE INDEX. Time is short—but the roll should be long!

MISS CHARLOTTE CUSHMAN made her "last appearance on any stage" in Boston last Saturday night. A crowded house was present to bid her farewell after forty years of distinguished professional life; and a handsome testimonial was presented to her with an address by Mr. Curtis Guild.

A GENTLEMAN recently applauded the principle that Church and State should be totally separate, but condemned the specification in the "Demands of Liberalism" of the points wherein they are still united! This ludicrous view of the case is like that of the man who "approved the Maine Liquor Law, but was opposed to its execution."

THE PEOPLE are hard to scare now-a-days with stories of the fire that has no objection to water and the worm that does not need to get its life insured. They are like the sceptical youngster who, being told not to say naughty words or the two she-bears would be after him, reflected a moment, and then deliberately ejaculated—"Damn! Now bring on your bears!"

IN A genial call at THE INDEX office, Mr. Alcott expressed himself as pleased and "flattered" at being elected to represent the Boston Liberal League, next September, at the Convention in Philadelphia for making arrangements to hold a general Convention of the Leagues in 1876. He is not certain as to methods, but approves the main purpose of these organizations; namely, to effect a more thorough separation of Church and State in this country.

THE Spiritual Scientist, a Spiritualist paper published in this city, is making itself enemies in many quarters by its fearlessness in denouncing imposture. This sentence from its issue of March 25 is an example of courageous truth-telling worthy of all admiration, considering to whom it is addressed: "As for physical mediums, so-called, we do denounce one-half of them as perfect frauds, and, what is more, the Spiritualists of Boston are aware of it; but what steps do they take to remedy the evil?"

THIS comical story must be credited to the Cleveland Plain-Dealer: "A book-firm in Columbus sends out postal cards, asking postmasters to send names of Sunday-school scholars and preachers of the Gospel who will act as agents for its publications. The following verbatim reply by an Indiana postmaster to one of these is handed us for publication: 'I cannot give you the name of any Sunday School scholars for I don't know them since preachers of the gospel have acted so like hell & Damnation all over the country Sunday Schools and other regions tesching & modes of worship have gotten blow par in this section.'"

COL. HIGGINSON read the essay at the Radical Club meeting at Mrs. Sargent's last Monday. He is reported to have expressed himself in disapprobation of the Liberal League; and we hope that his objections to it will be given to the public in some way. If no better way offers, THE INDEX is of course always at his service; and our readers will agree with us that his opinions on this subject ought to be known to those who are candidly considering it. It is certainly a question of great interest to know why one who was so strong an anti-slavery agitator, and is still so strong an anti-male-monopoly agitator, should so strongly oppose the anti-church-usurpation agitation.

MR. WEISS has kindly promised for THE INDEX his scintillating lecture on "The Bible and Science," which made the fur fly over the head-and-heart question a few months ago at the Boston Radical Club. Some thought it frightfully "irreverent," while others thought that Mr. Weiss had merely punctured with the irresistible needle of his wit some big bubbles of superstition; and the "weight of the meeting" seemed to incline the balance in favor of the latter opinion. The paper will appear in these pages next week; and then our readers can decide for themselves exactly how wicked Mr. Weiss has been. Even if they should vote him "naughty, but nice," THE INDEX is too stout a ship to be afraid of any Jonah, and no passenger in it need fear being tossed overboard to the whale. Seriously, this lecture is a capital one, and will probably create an extra demand for the issue in which it will be published.

REV. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE's essay in last week's paper, together with the reply to it published this week, will be printed at once as a new Index Tract. As a statement of the Liberal Christian or Unitarian view of the manner in which Christianity is to be reconciled with freedom of thought, the catholic-spirited essay of this distinguished clergyman will undoubtedly be regarded as conclusive by the cultivated Christian denomination to which he belongs, and the influence of which is so potent in this "hub of the universe." The essay that accompanies it is as fair and considerate a counter-statement as we can make from THE INDEX point of view, and tells a bit of history which cannot be overlooked in tracing the development of free religious thought in New England. We cannot but think that the two papers together are worthy of careful and thoughtful consideration by all those who believe that Christianity in some liberalized form is destined to be the permanent religion of the most highly civilized races of mankind. The price of the tract is ten cents, and orders sent in at once will be filled as soon as it is printed.

PROF. C. C. EVERETT says, in the Unitarian Review for May, that Herbert Spencer "represents the extreme of rationalism." This cannot be true of any man who sets bounds to reason; as Spencer does by his doctrine of the "Unknowable." The representative rationalist is he who holds that reason has, and can have, no assignable bounds,—who admits the "Unknown," but denies the "Unknowable." To affirm an "Unknowable" is to affirm the known existence of that which it is declared impossible to know at all; and the exposure of this contradiction breaks to pieces, as with a rod of iron, the irrational "rationalism" which Spencer "represents." Why do not those who see nothing greater or broader than his defective philosophy meet this point without flinching? There is a "rationalism" far more searching and thorough-going than Spencer's—the rationalism which claims for reason an empire unbounded by any man's arbitrary limitations—the rationalism of Science, which quietly annexes province after province of the supposed "Unknowable" to its own domain, and steadfastly refuses to listen to these noisy proclamations of its own imbecility.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhem, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Battle of Ideas at Syracuse.

AN ESSAY READ BEFORE A PRIVATE CLUB IN BOSTON, APRIL 26, 1875.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

The candid and catholic-spirited paper read at the February meeting of this Club by Dr. Clarke, "On a Recent Definition of Christianity," furnishes the most appropriate and timely topic on which I could address you this afternoon; and, without attempting to consider in detail the various points he raised, I would nevertheless ask your kindly attention to some further thought upon the same general subject—certainly the most important one which presents itself to students of modern religious tendencies.

DEFINITIONS.

Quoting a passage from THE INDEX which emphasized the importance of a "true definition of Christianity," Dr. Clarke understood me to assume that "this is the first point to be determined in order to decide whether or not we shall take sides with Christianity or against it." It is quite immaterial now whether the passage quoted was well or ill phrased; very likely the meaning he found in it might be naturally gathered from it, though such was not the meaning I intended. But I am glad to agree with him that our relations to Christianity cannot wisely be determined by a regard for mere words or forms of statement, since I do not lay the chief emphasis on any formula. It is the thing itself, and not the name, that is supremely important. Notwithstanding, I believe that the truth of our thoughts about things depends to a very large extent upon the exactness of the language we use concerning them; and if we cannot use names exactly, I more than doubt whether we know things correctly. When a teacher, in response to a question about the lesson, is told by his pupil, "I know the answer, but I cannot express myself," it would be a very foolish teacher who should be satisfied that the pupil really knew the answer as it ought to be known. Inexact, confused language is always, I believe, the result of inexact, confused thought; that is, of imperfect knowledge. Hence I believe it to be of the greatest consequence to possess an exact and truthful definition of Christianity—not at all for the sake of the definition as a mere string of words, but for the sake of the exact knowledge of the thing itself which it implies. To borrow Dr. Clarke's illustration, the man who could not tell exactly what the Feudal system was would be in no condition to decide whether he ought to uphold it or oppose it,—in no condition to decide whether that method of organizing society was a good or a bad one. He should know exactly what it was that he was going to uphold or oppose; and if he did know exactly, he could tell exactly. Men must often act, it is true, on very insufficient knowledge; but that is precisely the reason why they so often commit frightful mistakes. Whoever wants to act wisely must seek to know exactly; and whoever is determined to know exactly will soon discover the importance of exact definitions.

Let me, then, plead "not guilty" to the charge of over-valuing definitions for their own sake: it is only for the sake of the things they stand for that I value them at all. It is our ideas of the things that must determine our voluntary relations with them, and definitions are merely the symbols or verbal expressions of ideas. I am pleased, therefore, to be able to agree so heartily as I do with Dr. Clarke, when he says: "It is the thing itself, not what definition we may give it, which is most important." Yet it still remains true that wrong definitions are misrepresentations of things, and misrepresentations of things often lead us into the gravest and most disastrous practical mistakes in life. "What is it?"—is a question that must precede the other—"What shall I do with it?" And to answer the question is to give a definition.

CHANGING DEFINITIONS.

Experience, then, will eventually control and shape the definitions that men adopt. Definitions must change as things change, on the one hand, and as men's knowledge of them changes, on the other hand. When Dr. Clarke refers, so pointedly and with so much emphasis, to what he calls my own "former and present definitions of Christianity,"—when he conveys the implication that, since "Christianity itself in 1875 cannot have altered very materially from what it was in 1866," and since "the difference is only in Mr. Abbot's mind," therefore I may hit to-morrow on a new definition, and deny all that I now maintain, I think you will pardon me for dwelling a little on the reasons of the change he truly points out; especially as these reasons so vitally concern great and growing movements of thought in which we are all deeply interested, in one way or in another.

In the first place, I must in all seriousness disown proprietorship of any sort in what Dr. Clarke designates as "Mr. Abbot's former and present definitions of Christianity." I am not aware of having at any time "hit on a new definition," whether it was really a hit or a miss. I was born and educated among Unitarians; I was admitted to the Unitarian ministry before Unitarianism had any organized sectarian existence, and before any of its organizations had authority to represent its churches in any general ecclesiastical manner. There was no denominational creed, and nothing that even looked like one in those days; there were plenty of individual statements of belief, many of them published by the American Unitarian Association, which, however, is a voluntary association of individuals, and not of churches. These individual statements were mostly conservative, but they committed only their authors; and every man was free to make and publish his own, without being liable to have it compared with any "Preamble" test of denominational Orthodoxy.

At the Autumnal Convention in Springfield, in 1863, the radicals seemed to be decidedly in the ascendant; the convention was not a delegate one, but attended by whosoever chose to go; and the buoyant, expansive sentiment of the occasion, all in favor of unlimited mental freedom and of unrestricted spiritual fellowship, shed a beautiful light in advance on the ministerial path on which I was just entering. Mr. Frothingham was the most admired and applauded of the speakers, and represented the prevailing spirit of the meeting; in fact, his brilliant success at Springfield gave the alarm to the conservative managers, and was, I believe, one of the reasons why that was the last Autumnal Convention ever held on the old non-ecclesiastical plan.

Now the definition of Christianity which Dr. Clarke alludes to as my "former definition" was in substance one of those which I had simply inherited: namely, "Christianity is a spirit and life, not a creed." I supposed that "the right of free inquiry" was unchallenged and uncurtailed; that every Unitarian would unhesitatingly concede it for others and affirm it for himself; that every Unitarian organization would be not only willing, but eager, to make it the very first plank of their platform. On this acknowledged and jealously-guarded principle I supposed that all Unitarians to a man stood with one accord; and that, this being what the conservative wing cherished as dearly as did the radical wing, both wings would also unite on the principle that "Christianity is a spirit and life, not a creed." These two principles I had always heard emphasized as distinctive of Unitarian Christianity; and I took them for granted by simple inheritance, until my own reflection led me to affirm them by independent conviction. The definition of Christianity as "a spirit and life, not a creed," was certainly no invention of mine; I do not know to this day who first invented it, but I know I received it second-hand, and afterwards affirmed it with intelligent conviction as a grand spiritual truth to which my very soul assented as divine.

With these views I was delighted with the proposal to "organize the Liberal Church of America," out of which ultimately grew the National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches. That wording of the call, I feel very confident, was contained in the first circular I received on the subject, though I have lost this and have never seen it since. "The Liberal Church of America!" What a magnificent idea! How it fired enthusiasm! How eager it made me to go myself, and to have my Dover church represented at the first convention at New York, in April, 1865! It was a great and noble convention that then assembled. It opened splendidly in the overwhelming rejection by the delegates, Dr. Bellows at their head, of the proposition by Mr. A. A. Low to adopt a stiff Unitarian creed. Then came the discussion, cut off summarily by the "previous question," on the famous Preamble, which contained an explicit avowal of faith in the Lordship and Kingship of Jesus Christ, but not a word on the "unlimited right of free inquiry" and "Christianity a spirit and life, not a creed." That Preamble was adopted without any adequate discussion of the profound issues involved in such action. Dr. Bellows, however, declared that enough had been done for the first year, and that "the Broad Church question must be postponed till next year." That more than half-promise partly consoled me for bitter disappointment at the adoption of that creed-like Preamble:

one chance still remained to fulfil the professions that had brought at least one obscure country minister to New York.

In 1866 came the Syracuse Conference. A substitute for the adopted Preamble was offered which affirmed three things: first, that "the object of Christianity is the universal diffusion of Love, Righteousness, and Truth," which is only a paraphrase of the familiar principle that "Christianity is a spirit and life, not a creed"; secondly, that "perfect freedom of thought is at once the right and duty of every human being," which is only a paraphrase of the familiar principle of the "unlimited right of free inquiry"; and, thirdly, that the basis of organization should be "unity of spirit rather than uniformity of belief." This, I thought, was the very essence of genuine Unitarian Christianity, the cornerstone of "the Liberal Church of America"; and I saw no reason why a Unitarian Christian Conference could not plant itself on this grand spiritual foundation. It was indeed the fork of the road, where two possible futures, wide as the poles apart in their religious character, opened before the most advanced, cultured, and intelligent, though one of the smallest, of all the Christian denominations. One branch of the road led to the camp of the old creed-bound sects, with a compact ecclesiastical organization that would slowly and insensibly tighten its grasp on every member and set an impassable limit to spiritual freedom. The other branch of the road led to the great host of those who were seeking in isolation to explore Truth's untried fields, with a free and hospitable fellowship that should welcome every truth-lover, and be an inspiration, a help, and a friend in his lonely search for ideal excellence.

Nay, more than this. Not only did the Unitarian denomination come to the turning-point of its own destiny, as a small but influential company of religious liberals; but CHRISTIANITY ITSELF WAS BROUGHT TO THE CRUCIAL TEST, in the decision that must be made between the principles of those two Preambles, the old and the new. Could it, as here represented by the intellectual and spiritual vanguard of its forces, reconcile itself to that absolute liberty of thought and speech which is the soul of science, of civilization, of modern progress in all its aspects; or must it, by the inherent law of its own innermost being, sacrifice this vital principle in order to keep flying the banner of the Lordship and Kingship of Jesus Christ? Here for the first time (I think also for the last time) was a clean issue made between the first of persons and the first of ideas; and as its choice was, so should its future be. If it could only prove itself compatible with modern progress by boldly taking the lead of it, and pledging itself to perfect spiritual freedom (which, dependent upon it, the world will have at any and every cost), then Christianity would indeed demonstrate its own imperishability, its own capacity of developing into Free Religion without the name. But if not, then the sceptre must pass out of its hand; it must fade slowly away before a successor greater than itself; it must make room for the religion of perfect freedom and universal fellowship; it must die, that Humanity might live. Christianity itself, I say, was brought to the crucial test in the issue made between those two Preambles; for if the Christianity of the freest of all Christian sects could not reconcile itself with perfect freedom, of course the Christianity of no other Christian body could do it. It was a great historic moment, and history will yet recognize its vast and as yet wholly unappreciated importance.

These, and no smaller or meaner ones, were the issues decided that bright October day in Samuel J. May's church in Syracuse. Never again, I believe in my very soul, will the conditions recur when that decision can be reconsidered.

The evening before the Conference met, I went to the Secretary, Rev. E. E. Hale, notified him of my intention to bring up this question, and asked when it could be considered. He named the second day of the only two days of the session; to which I of course offered no objection. But that same night I had several hundred copies of the "proposed substitute" for the Preamble printed, and the next morning had them distributed throughout the pews, to prevent beforehand any parliamentary suffocation of the movement in the business committee; for I was determined, if possible, to have that great question fairly and fully discussed by the Conference, and not choked off as it had been at New York. The attempt was successful. Finding that the distribution of the printed "substitutes" had brought the matter prominently before the whole convention, and that it could not be suppressed, Dr. F. H. Hedge took the bull by the horns, and moved that the question be taken up at once. This was done, and a whole day was spent in the discussion. Dr. Bellows rallied his hosts at noon, and late in the afternoon had won the victory. The new Preamble, with its old Unitarian principles of unlimited free inquiry and a purely spiritual Christianity, was rejected.

The most influential man in winning that victory, next perhaps to Dr. Bellows, was James Freeman Clarke. He said then that the Lordship of Jesus could not be taken out of the Preamble, once being in it; that, if the new Preamble had been first offered the previous year at New York, he thought it would have been adopted; but that, if adopted now, it would look like hauling down the Christian flag, and he could not vote for that. These arguments, more than all others, I believe, decided the mind of the Conference; and the new Preamble was voted down by a two-thirds vote. To one, at least, of that Assembly, when the night came, it was night indeed; the very sun of Unitarianism, the one great principle of Channing, the one glorious inspiration of Parker, the divine idea of perfect spiritual freedom, had set for it forever. I never went to bed a sadder man.

But for the adverse vote of that day, there would have been no Free Religious Association, and no INDEX. Out of that apparent defeat the principles of perfect spiritual freedom and universal spiritual fellowship emerged unconquered, notwithstanding. They lived in too many hearts to be thus summarily extinguished. The Syracuse Conference might have secured the long-continued attachment of these many hearts by a different vote; but it spurned liberty in Christ's name, and one by one they began to leave. I, at least, should in all probability have lived and died a Unitarian Christian minister, and Dr. Clarke would never have written his not unkindly comments on my "change of definition." But I was taught by events; I got the first lessons of my anti-Christian education at Syracuse, and from Dr. Clarke.

When the smoke of the battle was over, I began to ponder intensely the real causes of that strange defeat. Why should Unitarians, in solemn council assembled, reject the ancient principles that had given the Unitarian name all its glory—the "unlimited right of free inquiry," and "Christianity a spirit and life, not a creed"? The answer was long in coming; but later events gave added lessons, and it came. At last I saw that I had no reason to wonder, still less to be displeased, at the action of that Conference. The members were most excellent and honest men—none better anywhere; they had doubtless voted under the influence of the highest motives; I must look deeper than to any personal causes for the true solution of the problem. I found it in the very nature of Christianity; Dr. Clarke showed me where. When this assemblage of Unitarian Christians were brought face to face with the alternatives, either to vote down the principles of perfect freedom and a purely impersonal Christianity, or else to "haul down the Christian flag" and seemingly deny their allegiance to their personal Lord, and Savior, and King, they could not, as Christians, do otherwise than they did. As thinkers, as men, they would have voted for freedom; as Christians, they could only vote for Christianity.

To Christianity, therefore, must I credit this point-blank rejection of liberty at Syracuse; and so, because I love liberty better than Christ, Dr. Clarke taught me the anti-Christianity which he now tries in vain to unteach. He has taught me himself that my "former definition" of Christianity, which I inherited from my early Unitarian education, is a false one; he himself helped to prove it false at Syracuse. Giving up that, therefore, I did not sit down to invent a new one; but, in the light of experience and Dr. Clarke's involuntary tuition, I have learned that history only repeated itself at Syracuse—that the Church has always and everywhere voted the same way, against freedom in the name of its own Lord; though never, I suppose, was the issue between freedom and Christianity made so clean as then. Such uniform action must have its cause in the very nature of the Christian religion. It is the Church, therefore, the universal Church of Christendom, that holds the secret of Christianity; and from the Church, therefore, I have simply taken the definition that it gives.

When, consequently, Dr. Clarke tells me, in his own fraternal way, that I once made a new definition of Christianity at Syracuse, that I make another new one to-day, and that I may yet make a third new one to-morrow, my answer is merely this: That at Syracuse I substantially adopted one of the definitions which Unitarianism itself invented a half-century ago; that to-day I substantially adopt the definition which the whole Christian Church has been making in the past two thousand years; and that, in the controversy between the new definition made by Unitarianism and the old definition made by the Church Universal, I now think the Church right where I once thought Unitarianism right. I have not, therefore, introduced a new one at all, and the ancient controversy respecting Christianity between Unitarianism and Orthodoxy is simply revived. The only difference is that Radicalism to-day holds that in this controversy touching the essence of Christianity Orthodoxy has the best of the argument; for the reason that Dr. Clarke and his friends, in order to remain Christian, were forced to surrender the liberal definition of Christianity at Syracuse, and plant themselves on the essence of the Orthodox definition as the only tenable Christian ground. Unitarian Christianity gave testimony against itself that day, and deprived Radicalism of all opportunity to defend it further.

What does this all prove? That I "changed my definition," and have changed my principles thereby? Not at all. But that the same principles of perfect spiritual freedom and universal spiritual fellowship for which I pleaded at Syracuse, with all the earnestness of intense conviction, in that name of Unitarianism which I inherited from my fathers, I still plead for to-day, but in the new name of Free Religion. Unitarianism itself has changed its principles, not I. It began with ideas it has been obliged to renounce by its own authoritative, collective voice, in order to save its Christian connection and name; and it can never rectify its great mistake except by repealing its present Preamble, and coming forward to Free Religion. The golden opportunity of identifying Christianity with Free Religion has been lost forever; and nothing now remains but either to side with Orthodoxy as essential Christianity, or to side with unlimited freedom and fellowship as essential Free Religion. It has made this issue itself; it has made its own children anti-Christian, as the only way to maintain fealty to the principles it taught them itself to stand for. Between fidelity to ideas and fidelity to names they have been forced by Unitarianism to choose; and therein consists all the "change" that Dr. Clarke can prove against me.

ACCEPTING DEFINITIONS ON AUTHORITY.

But Dr. Clarke considers that I submit to the very principle of authority which I disown, when I consent to take the definition of Christianity offered by the Church itself as the only true one. This is not a point that need detain us long. The question is simply as to the competency of witnesses. The principle of freedom requires no man to determine questions of fact by appealing to his own consciousness; and what Christianity is is nothing but a question of fact. Whose testimony as to the fact is most trustworthy?

I find the Church Universal speaking out of its own experience and history of nearly nineteen centuries, and declaring that Orthodoxy is that Christian religion of which itself has been from the beginning the only custodian and natural exponent. I find the Unitarian denomination speaking out of its own brief life and career of some fifty years, and declaring that the Christian religion is its own transformed and modernized faith; that the ancient Orthodoxy of which it is itself only a recent offshoot is a mere corruption of the primal gospel; and that the great bulk of the Christian world, with its hundreds of millions of believers, is really in dense ignorance of its own religion! Dr. Clarke thinks one witness the more credible, and I the other; that is all the difference. Neither he nor I do more in this matter than accept the testimony of the best witness to a mere matter of fact. There is no "submission to authority" here in any sense that either of us objects to. What Christianity is, is only a question of fact; what authority it possesses, is more than a mere question of fact. Dr. Clarke holds that it does possess a vital authority over the intellect, the conscience, the will, the heart; and this no Radical can admit, certainly as he explains it.

THE "AUTHORITY" OF CHRISTIANITY.

What is the kind and degree of authority which Dr. Clarke claims for Christianity? He says that it "practically makes no difference" that "Christians assume Christ to be an infallible teacher, while other masters are supposed to be fallible." He says that we go to any teacher "for truth, not for error"; and, if we find what seems to us false, we skip it, and do not venture to criticise it. "When we stop to criticise," he says, "we lose our teacher, and cease to be disciples. . . . All Christians, in studying the teachings of Jesus, are in this attitude. They are looking for truth, not for falsehood and error," etc. And this, he thinks, is the way in which Radicals themselves receive the words of Socrates, Plato, Parker, Emerson. It surely needs little knowledge of Radicals to correct this misapprehension. Such mental submissiveness in the spirit of faith, such reverential assumption of unmixed truth, such total absence of critical discrimination, is possible to no one but a Christian. Imagination of a peculiarly vivacious kind is required to attribute these Christian characteristics to the habitual free-thinker; and any religion which claims authority of this sort is irreconcilable with the Radicalism that understands itself.

ESSENTIAL CHRISTIANITY.

That Dr. Clarke is far more near to Orthodoxy than he seems to suspect, must occur to every clear-thoughted reader of these explicit words: "The essential thing in a religion, and the only essential thing, is that which was in it in the beginning in its source and fountain, and which has continued in it ever since. . . . The only essential points which remain [in Christianity], which were in the religion at first and have continued in it ever since, are faith in Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God; and the practical purpose of attaining that love to God and love to man of which he is the Mediator."

This tells us in few words the whole story of the Syracuse Conference, and explains fully Dr. Clarke's speech and vote on that occasion. Here we have fealty to the Christ, and the attainment of love to God and man through his mediation, set forth as the only essentials of Christianity; but not a word about spiritual freedom or a spiritual Christianity independent of the personal Jesus. Now these essentials are indeed the foundation and essence of Orthodox Christianity, whose whole dogmatic and ecclesiastical system is built up out of the logical sequences of which these things are merely the premises. The great principles which Unitarianism early advocated, and which gave it all its greatness as distinguished from Orthodoxy, are completely thrown overboard by Dr. Clarke in his present statement of the essentials of Christianity; they were thrown overboard by the denomination at Syracuse; they have been abandoned to those who loved them enough to follow their fortunes in the outside world. Now, with profound esteem and admiration for Dr. Clarke, whose genial character wins all sympathy and disarms all personal criticism, I must not omit to point out that he himself, in the definition he now gives of essential Christianity, proves that I am right in identifying it substantially with Orthodoxy, and in opposing it openly as the only way of adhering faithfully to the perfect spiritual freedom and spiritual, impersonal religion which collective Unitarianism, by solemn official action, discarded forever at Syracuse. To all intents and purposes he justifies my "present definition" by his own, and justifies my anti-Christianity by still pushing aside, in the name of Christianity, the great ideas which imperatively command me to obedience in the name of Free Religion.

LIFE IS MADE up of little things. He who travels over a continent must go step by step. He who writes a book must do it sentence by sentence. He who learns a science must master it fact by fact and principle by principle. What is the happiness of our life made up of? Little courtesies, little kindnesses, pleasant words, genial smiles, a friendly letter, good wishes, and good deeds. One in a million may do, once in a life time, a heroic action; but the little things that make up our life come every day and every hour.

THE UNITARIAN CHURCH THE CHAMPION OF FREEDOM.

We claim for the Liberal Church of America that it is, and has been from the start, the champion among champions of civil and religious liberty. If it had no other title, it might wear this title proudly on its front. And when from out the Liberal Church we single that portion which is called Unitarian, we do not mean to cast dishonor or discredit on any other part; but only boldly claim for ourselves a position second to none. The liberty which the Unitarian Church proclaims is a Christian liberty, a liberty within the bounds of truth and goodness—limits by which the Immortal Maker of the worlds is himself, of his own nature, bound.

There is in this Unitarian Church not the spirit of apathy but the spirit of life. It seeks the light. It would harbor no deceptions. It would tolerate no blindness. It recoils from falsehood, but it never shuns the truth. It would shake itself free from all superstitions and all disguises, and go forward with clear eyes towards the morning. With courage and hope, with confidence and strength, it would go forward and ever forward.

This church sees and acknowledges the vast amount of existing evil in the world; but it is not afraid of it. It cringes before no evil power. It knows no devil. It knows God only and believes in him. It believes that he holds undivided authority over all worlds, and that he can and will overcome evil with his good. It trusts in itself as one of the chiefest among his many agents for the winning of this victory. It fights against sin steadily in all its forms; and it fights the good fight of which faith is at once the inspiration and the leader. It holds to Christ's revelation of God as the Universal Father, and so it sees all men as brethren. It wears forms easily, using them as helps rather than as hindrances; binding them to its service rather than being itself their slave. It reverences the truth in old and new alike. It welcomes the truth wherever found. Above all, it believes in the future. It knows no everlasting hell or final death. It looks forward to life unending. Death is the body's dissolution, and at the same time the assurance of the soul's continuance; and so is not to be dreaded, but is to be welcomed in its time. All things that are right and true have in them the elements of life. All falsehood and wrong shall finally disappear. And so the only things worth seeking, the only things worth living for, are the things that are right and true.

Again and again we have examined the foundations of other creeds, thinking that there might perchance be in them some hidden strength and truth which we had overlooked. But we have always come back, with a renewed conviction of its superiority, to this broad and generous faith, to this free Christian Church, as our only religious home. And it is marvellous, when one seriously considers it, how all the sects are dropping, little by little, their differing doctrines, and advancing, slowly but surely, to our essential position. The Unitarian Church may never become in name the national Church of America; but certain it is that the essential principles of that Church—call them by what name you will,—the central ideas of that Church regarding God and man, must finally become the prevailing principles and the dominant ideas of the people. Nothing less than a free gospel can long abide in this home of civil and religious liberty.

Let us lay aside, then, our apathy and our doubts, and drown our faint-heartedness in the rising tide of a new hope, and honor that which we have inherited from the fathers with an increased devotion, and take to ourselves, with a new meaning, the old prophetic words: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee!"—Christian Register, May 1, 1875.

CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.

Is the office of the Christian minister consistent with perfect freedom of thought? The question in other words is this: Is a Christian minister supposed to have made up his mind on certain points before he accepts the office; and may it properly be understood that so long as he retains the office he retains also the belief which the acceptance of the office implied? The answer to these questions depends upon the answer made to a preliminary question: Are there any duties, or any primary conceptions of the nature and the destiny of human life, which reasonable men may desire to have taught, especially to the young? If there are no such duties, no such conceptions, there can be nothing to teach and no meaning in the Church.

The office of the Christian minister has always implied belief in three fundamental facts—God, Duty, and the Immortal Life. There have been in all churches ministers who have doubted or denied one or more of these fundamental doctrines of Christianity, but not without the consciousness that they were thereby acting against the just expectations of the world.

As we believe these three doctrines to be not only in themselves true and beneficent, but also essential parts of Christianity, we are now ready to say without qualification that the function of the Christian minister is inconsistent with absolute freedom. Just in so far as a man denies these doctrines, in so far he is disqualified for an office which implies belief in them.

Under all its cumbrous load of superstitions, dogmatisms, and irrational authority, the Church everywhere is striving to bring these three ideas to bear upon human life. If they should be surrendered, its reason for being would be gone. The fundamental question, then, Is a church desirable? is to be settled first. A contrast supposed to be unfavorable to the Church is often drawn between it and associations of science. The parallel is not complete unless the scientific association be an institution established and endowed for a special, useful, scientific purpose. Is a professor of mathematics in a school of technology a free man? By no means. His acceptance of that office implies belief in the fundamental laws of mathematics. He must believe in the multiplication table, the rule of three, the binomial theorem, and several hundred more rules and applications. The nominating committee might ask him to write upon a blackboard the formulas for the hyperbola, the ellipse, and circle. If he should reply that he had lost faith in conic sections, that would probably settle the question of his appointment. Suppose a candidate for the Christian ministry were asking settlement in some Christian Church, and some doubt should arise whether he accepted the idea of duty and its binding obligations, and he should reply that the idea of duty was a tradition which he thought might be discredited; at any rate it was a subject upon which he could not speak with assurance,—would there be anything absurd in dropping that candidate without ceremony as one who had not the most remote idea of the meaning of the function he desired to exercise? Or suppose again that he accepted the idea of duty as the result of physical necessity, but did not believe it indicated any God to whom spiritual worship could properly be directed,—would it not be absurd to ask him to conduct services of worship? Or again, if he accepted these two ideas, but said that when he stood by an open grave it would be his duty to tell the sorrowing friends that this was the end of all things,—would it not be absurd to perform funeral rites?

We admit that in the constitution of the Christian Church there are certain ideas without which it cannot exist, and that to doubt and deny these principles is to shake the foundation of the institution.

The question then arises: Is it worth while to have an institution which is intended to influence the minds of the young in favor of a cheerful trust in God, a hope which can smile in the face of death, and a sense of obligation to do all noble things and abstain from all evil? If the answer is in the negative, the Church is an impertinence. If in the affirmative, the Church is a necessity. Now when so much depends upon impressions which are made in the earlier years of life, before a child can possibly comprehend the reasons for faith in God and goodness, it seems to be the clear right of parents to attempt by all legitimate means to spare the child the pain and sorrow of doubt and despair, and the liability to transgress the moral law before he is aware of its sanctions. To the majority of moral and religious people neglect of these matters would seem to be culpable, and therefore they attempt to provide against ignorance on these points. They desire to have the grounds of such belief presented as clearly and forcibly as possible, by one who believes them himself.

Therefore we deliberately say that a Christian minister is debarred from exercising the functions of his office if he doubts whether a bad life is not as praiseworthy as a good one, or if he denies the hope of immortal life and trust in God.

Is, then, the Christian minister not a man, that he is not allowed to deny what his hearers may? Are the executive officers of a republic, paid and pledged to the service of a republican form of government, at liberty to advocate secretly or openly the advantages of a monarchy? Is one less a man because he cannot hold his office and destroy it at the same time?

If society has the right to punish crimes which tend to its detriment, it certainly has also the right to provide for the advocacy and encouragement of whatever tends to its welfare. So that at last the question comes to this: Is a belief in God, Duty, and the Immortal Life of sufficient importance to society to justify the establishment of institutions devoted to the teaching and illustration of these views? If so, the Church is justified; if not, it must go to the wall. But meanwhile the Christian minister is not justified in defeating the main purpose for which he is supported.—Liberal Christian, March 27.

THE CARDINAL'S OATH.

We inquired a day or two ago into the nature of the mysterious oath which Cardinal McCloskey must have taken, but of which no report appeared in the New York papers. We are now able to answer the question, quoting the text from the copy furnished to Lord Palmerston, in 1850, by the British minister at Turin. It is as follows:—

"I, ———, Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church, do promise and swear that, from this time to my life's end, I will be faithful and obedient unto St. Peter, the Holy Apostolic Roman Church, and our most Holy Lord, the Pope, and his successors, canonically and lawfully elected; that I will give no advice, consent, or assistance against the Pontifical Majesty and person; that I will never knowingly and advisedly, to their injury or disgrace, make public the counsels entrusted to me by themselves, or by messengers, or letters (from them); also that I will give them any assistance in retaining, defending, and recovering the Roman Papacy and the Regalia of Peter with all my might and endeavor, so far as the rights and privileges of my order will allow it, and will defend against all their honor and state; that I will direct, and defend, with due form and honor, the legates, and nuncios of the Apostolic See, in the territories, churches, monasteries, and other benefices committed to my keeping; that I will cordially cooperate with them, and treat them with honor in their coming, abiding, and returning, and that I will resist unto blood all persons whatsoever who shall attempt anything against them; that I will by every way and by every means strive to preserve, augment, and advance the rights, honors, privileges, the authority of the Holy Roman Bishop our Lord the Pope and his before-mentioned successors; and that at whatever time anything shall be decided to their prejudice, which it is out of my power to hinder, as soon as I shall know that any steps or measures have been taken (in the matter), I will make it known to the same our Lord, or his before-mentioned successors, or to some other person by whose means it may be brought to their knowledge. That I will keep and carry out, and cause others to keep and carry out, the rules of the Holy Father, the decrees, ordinances, dispensations, reservations, provisions, apostolic mandates, and constitutions of the Holy Pontiff Sixtus of happy memory, as to visiting the thresholds of the apostles at certain prescribed times, according to the tenor of that which I have just read through. That I will seek out and oppose, persecute and fight against [Latin—omni conatu persecuturum et impugnaturum] heretics, schismatics, against the same our Lord the Pope and his before-mentioned successors, with every possible effort."

The remainder of the oath provides in detail not to sell or give away or otherwise alienate any church property without due authority; to maintain the "constitution of the blessed Pius" of 1567; and the declarations of his successors, particularly those of Innocent IX., 1591, and those of Clement VIII., 1592. It also engages to maintain the papal claims to various Italian cities; and closes with the words: "I will not seek absolution from any of the foregoing articles, but reject it if it should be offered me (or in no way accept it if offered), so help me God and these most holy gospels." How any American citizen can reconcile honest allegiance to our national and State constitutions and laws with this complete and abject devotion to a foreign potentate, we cannot see. It is no mere theoretical obedience that is promised. On the contrary, should a band of devout Catholic filibusters, or a Spanish army, resolve to drive the government of Italy—a power with which our nation is at peace—from Rome, the cardinal would be pledged to give the assailants all the aid in his power. Should any legate or nuncio get into trouble with any government, the cardinal must defend them "unto blood." He must play the spy for the Holy See; must obey the mandates of the persecuting Pontiffs of the sixteenth century, and must use "every possible effort," even to persecuting and fighting against the heretics and schismatics who oppose the Pope reigning when the oath was taken, and his successors. Now, as the encyclical of Pius IX., of 1864, often quoted in our columns, clearly denounces as wicked freedom of religion, and other fundamental doctrines of our national Constitution, it follows that an American cardinal must actually pledge himself to overturn the government by which he is protected. If Cardinal McCloskey took any other oath than the one from which we have quoted, it would be satisfactory to see it in print.—Cincinnati Gazette.

CAPTAIN FREDERICK MAXSE, R.N.

The name of Captain Frederick Maxse requires no introduction to our readers. His writings, speeches, and public conduct have marked him as a man who has the cause of the people at heart, and who looks undeviatingly to the advancement of it as the one sure method of promoting the welfare of England.

Captain Maxse first became known to his countrymen by distinguished services in the Crimea. He is the son of James Maxse, Esq., whose father was a wealthy Bristol merchant, and of Lady Caroline Maxse, daughter of the fifth Earl of Berkeley. He entered the navy in his thirteenth year, was made lieutenant in 1852, and served in H.M. Sloop Espiegle in the West Indies, and subsequently as flag-lieutenant to Admiral Sir Edmund Lyons, and lieutenant of the Agamemnon in the Black Sea. Upon the disembarkation of the allied French and English troops in the Crimea, he was appointed naval aide-de-camp to Lord Raglan, the chief of our army. While serving in this capacity, he obtained promotion to the rank of Commander for the successful performance of a somewhat hazardous enterprise in conveying a message to the fleet across the head of the Bay of Sebastopol, riding over fifteen miles of unknown country, swarming with the enemy's defeated troops and Cossacks. He served on the Head-Quarter staff during the whole of that disheartening period which we remember in connection with the early months of the Siege of Sebastopol, was present at the Battle of Inkermann, and a witness of the charge of Balaklava, in which his brother, Colonel Fitzhardinge Maxse, was engaged as aide-de-camp to Lord Cardigan. On the death of Lord Raglan, he, with the other members of personal staff, accompanied the remains of his chief to England on board H.M.S. Caradoc, and was shortly afterwards appointed to the command of the Ariel, a steam corvette, on the Mediterranean station. From the Ariel he was promoted to the rank of post-captain; and, if he had continued afloat, he would have been now the youngest admiral in the service. His reputation in the navy was that of a smart officer, and he had doubtless a fine career before him; but experience of English life on shore from time to time, a growing perception of England as it is—not the fictitious England toasted at a Ward Room officers' banquet—began to trouble his mind with vexed social and political problems, and he became at last, in his efforts to amend some of the wrongs and evils afflicting the country, by working as a politician, gradually alienated from a career he had commenced with such high promise.

In abandoning it he did not love his profession less, but his country more. What, indeed, is the character of a naval officer's life in a time of peace? If his mind is not bent on graver things he may very honorably continue the work of his profession afloat or on shore, but in a case where the political and social destinies press on the mind, this can hardly be possible; and with Captain Maxse the choice had to be made either to brood over the miserable state of the English poor without an effort to speak in their interest, or to destroy his personal prospects, and enter the unpopular side—unpopular in his class—in the field of politics, where, unhappily, the strife is incessant because oppression is permanent. Those who have followed him since his name has been established as one of the strenuous advocates of the weak, and an inflexible opponent of legislative wrong-doing, will acknowledge that a keen sense of justice, combined with a warm sympathy for his fellow-creatures, was the motive of his conduct. He is emphatically a Radical, radicalism being, according to his own definition, "rebellion against wrong, and the assertion of the utmost attainable justice." He believes the people of this country will never prosper until certain distinct evils, resulting directly from political institutions, have been dealt with at their source; and he has never wavered in his views. He began as a Radical, and he is a Radical now, differing herein from some who have started on a generous impulse, to repose, after a period, on the pillow of moderate Liberalism. Captain Maxse's radicalism is not of this quality. Sympathy and study formed it from the first; hard blows have stimulated, experience has strengthened it.

We have the clue to his original and confirmed convictions in a paragraph of one of his recently published speeches:—

"My profession," he says, "has been, as you are aware, that of a naval officer. I was brought up to the tune of 'Rule Britannia,' and 'Britons never shall be slaves.' Ignorant of politics when at sea, I was indifferent to politics. If I had been polled for my vote as a young lieutenant, I dare say I should have voted Conservative—indifferentism forming a main element of Conservatism. What made me an active politician was—when I came to live on shore—observing the condition of the English agricultural laborers. I found that a large number of Britons were slaves, slaves to artificial oppressive circumstances, for the maintenance of which the governing classes stood, in my eyes, responsible; and upon the discovery of this I determined that if, during the whole of my life, I should carry but a single handful of earth towards the foundation of a better state of society, that handful I would carry."

In 1868 he came forward as a candidate in the Liberal interest for the borough of Southampton, plainly declaring his Radical principles, and speaking mainly of the evils caused by the land system and want of national education. He was defeated. There are not many boroughs yet in England where a professed Radical, speaking from his conscience, will have much chance.

At the late general election he accepted an invitation on the part of the Tower Hamlets Radical Association to contest the borough. His candidature was, no doubt, the popular one. His meetings were the most successful ones, and his speeches were warmly applauded, full as they were of well-digested thought, not florid commonplaces. But at that election, out of 32,000 voters, scarcely 17,000 went to the poll; such was the amount of public interest evinced by a metropolitan constituency, said to be Radical, in the great questions of the day and in the earnest, thoughtful politician who appealed for support. It is true that the hours of polling are such as to disfranchise thousands of working-class voters, and various vexatious restrictions hamper their registration; but, nevertheless, some efforts and self-sacrifice should be forthcoming on the part of those who have so much to gain by the representation of progressive ideas. We have, however, lately seen East-end Londoners flocking in prodigious crowds to the sensational performances of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, for morbid spiritual excitement and the comforting illusions of "other worldliness"; and are, therefore, the less astonished at the result of the last Tower Hamlets election.

At this election, with one Tory and three Moderates against him, Captain Maxse was the solitary champion of Land Tenure Reform, Electoral Reform, Religious Equality, and the Laborers' Enfranchisement. He has repeatedly written and lectured on these questions. An article contributed to the Fortnightly Review upon "Our Uncultivated Lands" has become an authority on the subject. He has himself, as a landowner, carried his doctrine about waste land and the value of small cultivators into successful practice. He has reclaimed the common land near his estate in South Hants, and rented it solely to laborers. The comparison of this land with that of the neighboring enclosures of uncultivated heath which belong to other landowners is more eloquent than a volume of essays. He has also built a laborers' club on his property.

The little work by which Captain Maxse is best known to working-class politicians originally appeared as a lecture, which he delivered at St. George's Hall, London, and at several of the principal towns. "The Causes of Social Revolt" is, in the words of the Westminster Review, "a very bold and striking plea on behalf of democracy, free thought, and free speech." We commend it to our readers as containing in a small compass a remarkable impeachment of the true authors of social discontent and ultimate revolution, as well as a challenge to the non-politicians whose indifference to public affairs and periodic panics constitute an almost hopeless obstacle to social advance.

Politically, we may perhaps regard Captain Maxse as a disciple of John Stuart Mill. It is evident that he adopts many of the principles of this great and fearless writer, and he is never weary of paying him homage; but there is one point at least upon which he takes independent ground; this is the question of Woman Suffrage. The telling speech that he made against the admission of women to the franchise at the Electoral Reform Conference, held in November last, will be doubtless in the recollection of many of our readers. He has just expressed himself further upon the same subject in a pamphlet under the title of "Whether the Minority of Electors should be Represented by a Majority in the House of Commons?"

Whether right or wrong in his view upon this point, Captain Maxse may be relied on never to trim a conviction in order to win success for himself, either in votes or applause. He will form his own conscientious judgment, and defend it without reserve, whatever may be the cost; and if we have here, as we may have, an explanation of the defeat of his attempts as yet to enter Parliament, it is a recommendation of him all the stronger to men who, because they have been much deceived, look around with some doubt for one in whom they can place their confidence. We should despair of the future of this country if we did not believe that the self-sacrificing spirit, high tone, and moral enthusiasm which Captain Maxse and others like him bring to politics will not some day receive a fitting response.—The Bee-Hive (Eng.) of March 27, 1875.

A RATIONALIST'S ROOM.

THE PRESIDENT AND HIS THEORIES—WHO ARE THE MEMBERS, AND THEIR CHARACTERISTICS—FURNITURE OF THE RADICAL AND WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE CLUBS.

If a man is known by the company he keeps, he is known also by his books and his pictures—that is, if he buys them himself and makes them his companions. The finest private library in the State of Pennsylvania is owned in this vicinity, and the citizen for whom it was purchased knows as little of its contents as he knows of the laws of gravitation. A Times reporter yesterday visited the place of meeting of the Radical Club and of the Citizen's Suffrage Association, No. 333 Walnut Street. Mr. Edward M. Davis is President of both these associations. The former meets every Wednesday at three P. M.; the latter once a month. Both will meet to-day. Mr. Davis is rich and out of business, and is in favor of universal suffrage whether the voter wears crinoline or cassimere. Nearly all of them being Unitarians, the members also eschew tobacco and intoxicating drinks. The Bible they regard simply as a good book, but they are Unitarians to a man—or woman. The members of the Club residing in this city number at present from seventy to eighty.

The Times man found the President writing like a scrivener, for his correspondence extends all over the Union, and he subscribes regularly for no less than twenty-three newspapers. You could tell by the surroundings of the room where you were, even if you did not know that every Wednesday here you will meet the pure-hearted Lucretia Mott, in her garb of slate color, and are certain to encounter visitors such as Orvis, the lecturer of the Grange; C. C. Burleigh, with his flowing hair, and Friend Thorne, of the North Carolina Legislature. The late abuses in the House of Refuge were brought to light by this Club; and, though people may deplore their lack of Orthodoxy, it cannot be denied that all their purposes are benevolent. Their Club has no organization, no other officer than President, and their meetings are free to every one. From the wall opposite the entrance door Charles Sumner and Horace Greeley, side by side, look down on you with lithographic eyes, while beneath is represented Martin Luther, surrounded by a crowd of converts. The picture somewhat matches its vis-à-vis—a very rare steel-plate engraving made in England. It represents a slave mart in Africa, and, like everything else in this Radical and Rational Club room, stands out pure and simple for "liberty." John G. Whittier, of all Quaker poets the sweetest, smiles across the room upon the long-haired Charles C. Burleigh, and, to a fanciful view, exchanges looks with the founder of Quakerism, George Fox, whose physiognomy is portrayed opposite to it. The pictures of Toussaint, Robert Collyer, and John Brown of course are there; so is that of Hahnemann, the founder of the homœopathic system of medicine. To homœopathy the Radicals, as a rule, are inclined. The portrait of the beautiful actress Kate Field also adorns the walls of the Radical Club room. Those of William Lloyd Garrison and Benjamin Lundy face each other. (Benjamin was one of the pioneers of abolitionism). Robert Collyer, of Chicago, once a Methodist minister, converted to radicalism, faces Rev. Dr. Furness, of this city, from a frame. The renowned Passmore Williamson (white), who was imprisoned in Moyamensing by Judge Kane, and who suffered "for freedom," looks at the author of the "underground railroad," Mr. William Still (colored). A bust of Lucretia Mott is opposite to them. Wendell Phillips is represented in a splendid photograph presented to Mr. Davis, and beneath it he (Wendell Phillips) has written: "With the memory and gratitude of a life-long friendship." Edward Kellogg, in portrait, smiles out from a margin of black walnut. He is the author of The Interchangeable Bond. The officers of Camp William Penn, for colored troops, on the North Pennsylvania Railroad, during the late war, of which General Wagner was the commander, have left their portraits for the delectation of the Radical Club. More than eleven thousand men enlisted there, and the use of the ground was given to them by this same President of the Radical Club, when nobody else owning ground would permit the colored troops who fought so bravely to bivouac there. A picture of one, who headed the insurrection of the slaves up the Armistead, is a valuable one. Upon the wall, also, was noticed what is printed below, A portrait of General Fremont is beneath it. As an autograph of General Fremont it is of interest. The President of this Club was his private secretary during his service in the war in Missouri. Jessie Benton Fremont gave to him the original MSS. of Fremont's Emancipation Proclamation, August 30, 1861. "The property of all persons, real and personal, in the State of Missouri, who shall take up arms against the United States, or who shall be directly proven to have taken active part with their enemies in the field, is declared to be confiscated to the public use, and their slaves, if any they have, are hereby declared free men." It is to be conceded to the ladies and gentlemen of the Radical Club that they are certainly in earnest, although the headway that they make on their various purposes and objects may be imperceptible. What they manifest is a very strong love of liberty—political and religious. The Radical Club rooms are sometimes a place where a great deal is to be learned. At other times the proceedings are boring. To-day they will probably have, for some people, especial interest.

The Radical Club "wrinkle" is this: It was not formed; it grew. "If you have the material—and I have no doubt every community has—form one," said one of its originators to a visitor from a distance. "Fix upon but few rules; make little effort to gather people; name the day and hour that you meet, so that all in your vicinity may know it; be punctual; only one speak at a time; be honest in your expressions; avoid merely intellectual controversy; do not be afraid of personality; it is sometimes well to say, as Nathan did, 'Thou art the man,' but let your spirit be fraternal; exclude no one; recognize occasional visitors as equal in rights to regular attendants; be unselfish; do not assume that you only are wise; cultivate self-control; respect heartily each one's rights; cherish those upon whom the world frowns; thus the good and true will be drawn to you, and you will grow wiser and better."—Philadelphia Times, April 21.

MEMORIAL DAY.

BRINY TEARS SHED AT SAMSON'S TOMB BY THE LIBERAL LEAGUE.—RESOLUTIONS TO BE FORWARDED TO HIS AFFLICTED FAMILY.

There was a large audience at Harrison Hall yesterday afternoon. The resolutions appended below were introduced, and elicited considerable discussion. They were finally adopted by a nearly unanimous vote:—

WHEREAS, Samson, the noted ruler and lawgiver, is dead, having been fatally injured by the tipping over of a public building where he was stopping, causing some surprise to his enemies and a great deal of trouble to his brethren, who travelled thirty-eight miles to bury him; and

WHEREAS, We do not expect to look upon his like again for some time to come; therefore,

Resolved, That the Liberal League joins this day with the Sunday-schools of the entire land, in celebrating and drawing lessons of wisdom from this high-toned worthy, whose pure and merciful life has been thus prematurely cut off.

Resolved, That the summary method of Judge Samson in deciding cases that came before his tribunal, denying all motions for a supersedeas or a change of venue, preventing the subterfuge of habeas corpus and forbidding a dilatory appeal to other courts, should be adopted by his successors to facilitate business and to discourage litigation.

Resolved, That the fact that seven of the miracles of our departed brother were wrought to obtain a wife, who finally got away from him, and the other five to circumvent the plots of his concubine, is an illustration of the principle that the course of true love never did run smooth.

Resolved, That the transaction of paying his lost bet with the plunder obtained from the bodies of thirty inhabitants whom he murdered for that purpose, shows the man of sagacity and resources whom no emergency could baffle.

Resolved, That the friends of Samson should be congratulated that this weapon with which he killed his thousand men, being at the rate of one a minute for seventeen hours, was a "new" jaw bone; otherwise the skull of the nine hundredth Philistine might have broken it, thus compelling Samson to slay the last hundred with his naked hand, as he did the lion.

Resolved, That, while we extol the valiant deeds of Samson, we cannot forbear to render some praise to this thousand Philistines who waited patiently and politely till their turn came to be knocked on the head by the hero of Israel with his osseous tomahawk.

Resolved, That a similar meed of partial approval is due to the three hundred foxes, which came and meekly backed up to him while he tied their tails together, and fastened firebrands thereto, for the desolation of the enemies of the Lord.

Resolved, That this affliction to his bereaved family and his fellow-citizens should be tempered by the reflection that Samson's faithful god, the successful rival of Dagon, for the most part stood by Samson through thick and thin, and would doubtless have saved Samson's life at the last if he could have possibly done so.—Evening Mail (Minneapolis).

MR. CONWAY'S CHAPEL.

Mention has been made of the South Place Chapel, London, where our friend Moncreu D. Conway preaches. In his last letter Mr. Conway tells how it is to make the centre of a much larger influence than ever before. He says that ever since the famous address of Prof Tyndall at Belfast, there has been observable among men of science a tendency to popularize their work more than formerly. It is hardly consistent with the traditions of existing institutions that lecturers in them should directly deal with questions plainly involving theological dogmas. Max Müller's lectures at the Royal Institution, on the "Science of Religion," carried the latitudinarian capabilities of the broadest of our institutions to their utmost limit, which was of very moderate extent when compared with the known opinions of its chief, Prof. Tyndall. Under these circumstances there has been felt the need of an institution to be the organ and creation of to-day, an institution without traditions or restrictions however palpable, which will invite and welcome such expressions of thought and fact as are elsewhere intimidated or at most tolerated. Such an institution is now being formed in the city of London by a number of educated people with substantial purses. It is called the "South Place Institute," the lectures to be given in South Place Chapel (Finsbury), near the Bank of England. This building seats nearly a thousand people, and has been renovated within, the pews having made way for modern seats, and the pulpit replaced by a neat platform and lecture-desk.

Those who have founded this new institution had thought there might be some difficulty in obtaining the consent of distinguished men of science and scholars to appear in a place so long notorious as the centre of heretical views as South Place Chapel. This is the jubilee year of that ancient fortress of free thought. Fifty years ago it was founded for the ministrations of the late W. J. Fox, M.P., whose work in London corresponded to that of Theodore Parker in Boston. From that time to this the chapel has not receded from the principles of its founder, though it must wait long for an equally eloquent expounder of them. It is true that there is a difference between South Place Chapel and the new South Place Institute, but it may easily be anticipated that the latter will hardly fail to inherit the notoriety of the former, especially as it will probably exceed the former in the radicalism of its ideas. Colonel Forney has, I see, described South Place as a "materialistic congregation," but the description is inexact, so far certainly as any ordinary interpretation of the word "materialism" is concerned. However, the founders of the new institution have found the chief men of science quite prepared for their movement. Prof. Huxley has consented to inaugurate it with a lecture, which will probably astonish even blasé London. Charles Darwin has expressed his warm sympathy with the institution, though he is unable, through ill-health, to lecture. Mr. John Morley, of the Fortnightly Review, Norman Lockyer, the astronomer, and Professor Clifford, of the University College, will follow Huxley in the first course, which will be opened, probably in March. It does not require a prophet to foresee an important career for the new institution, which will not merely have courses of general lectures, but regular classes taught every evening by competent professors in every branch of science and other studies.—Golden Age.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

NOBLENES.

'Tis easy growing cynical at men,
And pointing scorn at those we trusted dear,
And showing shame in those we counted near;
'Tis easy work to dip in gall the pen,
For all our hearts are rankled now and then;
We strive to do our best, to act the right,
We strive with willing love and generous might,
And those we serve return not thus again!
But scorn on him that dare not still pursue
The high-born love and impulse nobly sent,
That will not still his kindness oft renew,
And still preserve his manhood's fair intent;
For thus alone can we attain the true,
And show the world a soul on virtue bent!

WILLIAM BRUNTON.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"THE UNDER MUST COME UP."

A tree was planted in a city street—
A slender sapling, neither strong nor tall;
Yet in its heart it bore the heart of all,
And what has life, must have conditions meet.
The tender, spongy roots began to grow;
The subtle sunshine and the summer rain
Leagued influence with the winter's needed pain,
And every hour brought greater strength; when lo,
A man who passed tripped o'er a loosened stone!
Life in the root, drawn from the fostering day,
Had slowly pushed the oppressive curb away.
So power brings always power unto its own:
From straitened souls to a frail acorn's cup,
Life shall find room—"the under must come up!"

MRS. M. F. BUTTS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 15.

H. L. Green, $2; Elmore Sharpe, 30 cents; W. M. Holloway, 25 cents; W. O. Mack, $5; G. H. Williams, 20 cents; C. Whittaker, $1.75; J. E. Peck, 10 cents; W. Hanford, 50 cents; James Eddy, $50; A. G. Wheelock, 75 cents; J. H. Simpson, $1.75; Roberts Brothers, $3; Clara E. Aldrich, 15 cents; F. E. Abbot, $50; Wilcox Wilson, $3; F. H. Brown, $3.20; O. W. Holmes, Jr., $3.20; C. F. Folsom, $3.20; Miss C. E. Watson, $3.20; Geo. B. Drake, $3.20; S. E. Brown, $3.20; Frank B. Cotton, $3.20; J. R. May, $3.20; John Green, $3.20; R. J. Trumbull, $3.20; Thos. Tasker, $3.20; E. H. Hopkins, $3; L. Adams, $2; J. H. Holly, $3; E. C. Hyde, $1; W. H. Young, $3.20; Clemens Vonnegut, $3.20; J. J. Byrne, 25 cents; Milan C. Edson, $3; Leonard Beck $3; Philip Hake, $3; F. W. Vogel, $3.20; Chas. B. Bowditch, $3.20; Robert Willard, $3.20; Saml. Brooke, $2; Louis Liebmann $3; Henry Damon, $3.20; Mary W. Wellman, $4; Chas. Goodridge, $5.25; R. S. McIntosh, $3; Kersch & Schies, $3.20; Anna E. Thompson, $3.20; Warren Emerson, $1.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 20, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAHAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOSEY (England), Prof. FRAN-
CIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

NOTICE.

The Fourth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held in Toledo, Ohio, at No. 35 Monroe Street, on Saturday, June 5, 1875, at 2 o'clock P. M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The eighth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston as follows:—

May 27th, 7½ P. M. Session in Horticultural Hall (Lower) for business and for free discussion on the objects and work of the Association.

May 28th. Two sessions in Beethoven Hall (Washington Street, near Boylston), at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M. for essays and addresses. Essay at the morning session, by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Forces in Religion."

Essay at the afternoon session, by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion."

Addresses are expected at some one of the sessions from O. B. Frothingham, T. W. Higginson, Charles G. Ames, Miss Mary F. Eastman, M. J. Savage, E. W. Mundy, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and (probably) Prof. Edward S. Morse.

Friday evening, May 28th, there will be a social festival in Parker Memorial Hall, Berkeley Street, for brief speeches, music, refreshments, conversation, and for subscription to the funds of the Association.

It is hoped that as many of the members and friends of the Association as possible will be present at this annual meeting. Members who cannot be present are hereby reminded of the annual subscription fee, which it is desired they should send to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

SIX hundred thousand people are reported to be supplied by the Boston meat market. One-fifth of the meat used is brought from the West. The necessity of some rigorous system of meat-inspection is sufficiently obvious, on the score of public health.

"It is of no use," exclaims the hard-hearted Christian Union, "to send us stamps for reply to queries, unless you have more stamps than you need. We never reply to queries by mail—it is impossible to do it." Well, THE INDEX is just as hard-hearted, and is glad to learn that it is not worse than a Christian for being so. Do our readers who ask such favors ever dream how sick an editor grows at the bare thought of a pen?

THE HISTORY of the Emma Mine Company, which the English Vice-Chancellor declares was "formed on delusive statements emanating from persons on the other side of the Atlantic," is a great mortification to every decent American. Who likes to see his country's name become a synonyme for fraud? The parties who thus disgrace a whole nation ought to smart bitterly under its merited indignation; and the Nation deserves thanks for pointing them out.

DR. HOLBROOK'S Eating for Strength (Wood & Holbrook) treats of "The Science of Eating," "Receipts for Wholesome Cookery," "Receipts for Wholesome Drinks," and "Answers to Ever-recurring Questions." Recipes for good, wholesome food will be found here in abundance, and directions for preparing various summer drinks of a strictly "temperance" description; also answers to questions of all sorts (some verging on extreme simplicity) on "practical dietetics."

THE NEW BOOK OF FREE RELIGION.

The Free Religious Association have just published through Roberts Brothers a volume of four hundred and twenty-four pages under the title—Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. It is a collection of elaborate essays by Wasson, Longfellow, Johnson, Weiss, Potter, Abbot, Frothingham, Chadwick, Higginson, and Mrs. Cheney; together with brief extracts, under the designation of "Voices from the Free Platform," by Potter, Emerson, Frothingham, Malcom, Mrs. Burleigh, Wasson, Longfellow, Mills, Abbot, Wise, Mrs. Howe, Bartol, Owen, Gannett, Higginson, Weiss, Mrs. Stone, Alcott, Sanborn, Phillips, Seaver, and Mrs. Mott. All these writers are either members of the Free Religious Association, or have occupied its platform. There is an introduction by Mr. Frothingham on "The Religious Outlook," and an "Explanatory Note" by Mr. Potter which says explicitly: "It will be perceived that the organization represents certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or jointly subscribed system of faith. These principles and tendencies are perhaps best suggested by the title of the book, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim. And they are expressed in the two chief articles of the Constitution as follows:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

It would be unbecoming to make any public criticisms of the separate papers among which one of our own is included. But the book as a whole has a meaning apart from that of its isolated component essays. It is designed, as its title implies, to express the one and only great idea which, by its Constitution and even by its bare existence, the Free Religious Association affirms collectively before the world. The entire moral and religious value of the Association, as an organized body distinguishable from the individuals that compose it, is contained in the one principle which the well-chosen title of this new book proclaims. The affirmation in words and the practical illustration in deeds of this great principle, as not only true and right in theory but possible and practicable in fact, sum up, constitute, and include the whole historic mission of the Free Religious Association. That every man and woman should be respected by all mankind in the exercise of the rights of absolutely untrammelled thought and utterance, and that the perfect spiritual liberty thus conceded as an inalienable individual right should be accompanied, beautified, and ennobled by profound sympathy and fellowship in the common love of truth,—these ideas constitute the total significance of the Free Religious Association, the entire pith and purport of its mission as an organized body in the history of religion. Any vacillation, inconsistency, or want of energy in the affirmation of these ideas, or any practical treachery to them in practice, would be the total failure, and the only possible failure, that could befall the Association in its great public work. So long as these ideas are faithfully served by it, it will be protected from all possible danger, whether from within or without; and no enemy can possess the slightest power to harm it, or to frustrate the magnificent truth it sets forth in a living embodiment before the world, who cannot tempt the Association itself to some actual unfaithfulness in the advocacy of its own glorious cause. Only by fidelity to its idea can it stand; only by infidelity to its idea can it fall.

The present volume, therefore, entirely apart from the intrinsic value of the papers it contains, possesses an ideal significance as a whole which alone throws real light on the nature of Free Religion, or which really answers the question, "What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?" If the book exhibits, each in its fullest and strongest form, all the phases of thought represented in the Association's membership, it will be found to illustrate satisfactorily its Freedom; if it expresses in evident reality the close ties of brotherhood, mutual respect, and reverence for individual liberty, which unite all the members in the free and common pursuit of the highest truth touching religion, then it will be found to illustrate satisfactorily its Fellowship. Failure in either of these respects would be so far failure of the book to answer the question it proposes to answer; and whether, thus judged, the book does actually fulfil its mission, it must be left for each reader to decide. All we wish to point out here is the large and grand object which was to be accomplished, without a full appreciation of which the chief value of this volume will be lost sight of. The magnificent idea on which the Free Religious Association is itself built furnishes the only just rule or criterion by which the success or failure of the book can be measured.

Now, in undertaking to represent the breadth of the Free Religious movement, the volume just issued could, of course, only follow the method adopted by the Association in holding its Conventions and arranging its Lecture Courses: namely, to offer a free platform on which invited speakers might represent each his own individual convictions, and thus to furnish an opportunity for each phase of free religious thought to represent itself through the utterance of some earnest believer in it. If the editing committee (of which, by the way, we were not a member) had undertaken to appoint some "suitable man to represent the breadth of the movement," as the anonymous critic of ours, quoted in these columns a fortnight ago, intimated ought to have been done with THE INDEX,—if they had entrusted to him the delicate task of interpreting to the world all the different types of thought and feeling embraced by it,—the result must have been failure, total and ignominious. No man, however gifted with "broad sympathies and judicial habit of mind," could possibly have done more than to caricature the views of some of those for whom he would have been presumptuous enough to speak. The committee fell into no such mischievous and irretrievable blunder. They have, on the contrary, adopted the method which the Free Religious Association and THE INDEX have both practised from the beginning; that is, they have simply offered a free platform, and invited each phase of thought to represent itself in the best way it could. The book they have published, therefore, is a chorus of many voices, by which alone the deep harmonies as well as the sweet melodies of Free Religion could have been brought out; and they did not invite any unfortunate "suitable man" to essay the ludicrous task of singing a chorus by himself. The result is a far "broader" representation of Free Religion than could possibly have been made by the ideal hippogriff editor of our anonymous critic—who reminds us of Lord Dunsyre's comment on the old proverb that "birds of a feather flock together": "Why, you don't suppose that any bird would be such a fool as to go off and flock all alone by itself in a corner!"

Both as a truly broad and catholic representative of the Free Religious Association as a whole, and as a collection of representative individual utterances of many of its best-known members and friends, Freedom and Fellowship in Religion is sent forth to the world to receive such welcome and hospitality as its merits may command. May it win at least the reward of being counted one of the sincerest and most earnest contributions yet made to the religious thought of our time!

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—Messrs. Moody and Sankey are in the full height of their London glory.

After weeks of uninterrupted success at the Agricultural Hall, in Islington, they have abundant means at command for the hire of Her Majesty's Theatre, to which crowds of five thousand persons flock every afternoon and evening. The carriages around the building are as numerous as on the best opera-nights, and duchesses and even princesses are to be seen patronizing the Gospel of an afternoon as they were wont to patronize Jenny Lind or Patti.

Mr. Moody, I trust, has not forgotten that memorable passage in his own sermon on "The Blood," in which he says: "The more the world assails me, the more thoroughly I am convinced that I am right. It is a good sign when the world assails us. It is an evidence that we are right."

If his mind is not changed by his matchless success, I should imagine that the amount of favor and flattery which "the world" is now pouring upon him will somewhat disturb his conscience and weaken his convictions that he is "right." Poor man! the world never felt less inclined to assail any one and cannot even get up a pretence of opposition or put on a feigned attack, even to strengthen his assurance in his own infallibility. We must hope that this humiliating season of unheard-of popularity will have its blessed effects in self-examination and self-enlightenment.

Who knows but that this painful embarrassment through "the friendship of the world" may lead him to question his "friendship with God"?

But I leave the revivalists to their own thoughts on this matter, and will call attention to the fact that they are doing much more good than they think they are doing—and in a way very different indeed to their intentions. Their blind but honest purpose is to preach "the old, old story of Jesus and his love," and that in the most plain, straightforward, literal manner possible—a lost and doomed race trembling on the verge of eternal hell, and a Man-God dying on the cross and shedding his "Blood" to turn away the wrath of God, and thus deliver them from damnation.

Now it so happens that, if there is one view of the Gospel more than another which is showing signs of decay and death, it is this literal view of damnation and salvation. Even in its stronghold, the Evangelicals of churches and sects, it is being more and more modified and even ignored. The coarse and crude notion of God's curse against a fallen race has given way to a much milder method of describing our state of ruin and danger. The old hell-fire, with its flames of brimstone, is seldom depicted in sermons, lest people should be needlessly harrowed, or lest others should scoff. On every hand, ministers are trying to do away with the endlessness of hell-fire, and some of them substitute for it, as the true teaching of the Bible, annihilation of the wicked and unbelieving. The atonement by vicarious suffering is also more than questioned; it is openly condemned, and a milk-and-water theory of atonement by the pleasing aspect of the self-sacrifice of Jesus has taken its place. Thanks to Mr. Maurice, the atonement has got another squeak, and may survive in this emasculated form for some time to come. Such is the prevailing condition of mind among Evangelicals, though of course a faithful few still keep up the true old Puritan conception of it, in its integrity.

Among the High Church party, Purgatory is generally substituted for hell-fire. God's curse is all washed away in baptism, and, instead of the horrible doctrine of the "Blood," atonement is now made by a clean piece of white bread and a sip of pure wine. It is all neat and picturesque, and the ghastliness is gone.

Whatever changes have come over the aspect of the Gospel, they are in the very opposite direction to the retrograde views of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. But inasmuch as all the Christian churches and sects still believe in some doom or danger, from which Christ has delivered them, and therefore to all of them alike the name of Jesus is especially dear and sacred, "the old, old story of Jesus and his love" has some attraction for them, even when set in the rude and repulsive frame-work of the American revivalists.

I am therefore led to infer that one of two results must favor the wide-spread hearing of Messrs. Moody and Sankey: Either the Christians who have been slipping away from the old landmarks, and adopting a new interpretation of the Gospel events in place of the literal one, will be led by these preachers to go back to the old views which they had so lately renounced, and confess with humility and sorrow the error of having departed from the "simplicity of the Gospel"; or else they will be more than ever repelled by these preachers from the old literal view, presented as it is with marvellous warmth and earnestness, and almost forced into grotesque outlines bordering on caricature.

It is not difficult to foretell which alternative will be chosen. It is contrary to all human experience for a large number of persons who have unanimously decided against a particular view—and that after much controversy and heart-burnings—to take to it again suddenly and sincerely on a mere repetition of the "old, old story" by a popular preacher and a good singer of hymns.

The stream of religious thought has set the other way, and no number of revivalists of any qualifications can wholly turn the tide. Eddies they will make, of course, and many a straw will be wafted back by the disturbance; but the river of humanity will flow on and down, and seek the broad sea, and will not flow backwards and upwards to the springs from which it started. Therefore, as this revival cannot come and go without any results at all, it must have the effect of hastening the decay and downfall of those very doctrines which the revivalists are endeavoring to reestablish.

Hence, Messrs. Moody and Sankey may be welcomed as doing our work and playing into our hands; actually encouraging scepticism by the very means which they hope to make effectual in crushing it. Their extravagant and idolatrous praises of Jesus will fall, in time, on the ears of those to whom "the Savior" used to be precious; and the reaction must be fatal to the claims made on his behalf upon the love and gratitude of mankind.

That Christianity has lasted so long is owing to the fact that its most objectionable and repulsive features have been veiled under ingenious interpretations or painted over with modern embellishments. That it is certain to be damaged hopelessly in the eyes of modern Christians by the removal of the paint and the rending of the veil, is a prospect too probable to require much discernment to see, or much daring to predict.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, April 24, 1875.

THE MAY FESTIVAL.

The Free Religious Association invite their friends to unite with them in a social donation festival to take place in Parker Memorial Hall, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets, Boston, on Friday evening, May 28, 1875.

The objects of our yearly festival are to strengthen the Association by binding closer ties of sympathy between all those who accept the principle of Religious Freedom, to promote that "Fellowship in the Spirit" which is one of the objects named in our Constitution, to increase our membership, and replenish our treasury. All persons, therefore, of every name, sect, or party, who sympathize with the spirit of the Free Religious Association, are invited to renew with us the pleasant time we have had at previous gatherings.

The evening will be devoted to conversation, music, and short speeches. Refreshments will be for sale from 6 till 10 P. M. Music and speaking will begin at 7.30.

This invitation, shown at the door, will be a sufficient pass to the festival, and those desiring invitations for themselves or their friends can obtain them by application to any of the Committee.

Membership-subscriptions and donations will be received at tables arranged for the purpose in the hall, or may be sent by letter to the Treasurer, Richard P. Halliwell, 139 Federal Street, Boston. We would remind friends that the year's work of the Association depends very largely on these contributions received at the festival.

The Committee will also be happy to receive flowers and supplies for the refreshment tables, at the Parker Memorial Hall, on the morning of the festival.

HELEN M. IRESON,
EDNAH D. CHENEY,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL,
JOHN T. SARGENT,
CHARLES K. WHIPPLE,
JOHN C. HAYNES,
W. C. GANNETT,

Committee on the Festival.

The Annual Meeting of the Association begins on Thursday evening, May 27th, at the Lower Horticultural Hall,—a business session, to which all interested are welcome. On Friday morning and afternoon, in Beethoven Hall (Washington Street, opposite the Globe Theatre), are held the two sessions for public addresses. In the evening, at the Parker Memorial Hall, this festival.

President.—Octavius B. Frothingham.

Vice-Presidents.—Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Lydia Maria Child, Isaac M. Wise, George W. Curtis, Frederick Schünemann Pott, Edward L. Youmans, George Hoadly, Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

Secretary.—William J. Potter.

Assistant Secretary.—Hannah E. Stevenson.

Treasurer.—Richard P. Halliwell.

Directors.—John Weiss, Charles K. Whipple, Ednah D. Cheney, Helen M. Ireson, John T. Sargent, Francis E. Abbot, W. C. Gannett, John C. Haynes.

"I AM COME for my umbrella," said the lender of it on a rainy day to a friend. "Can't help that," said the borrower; "don't you see that I am going out with it?" "Well, yes," replied the lender, astonished at such outrageous impudence; "yes, but—what am I to do?" "Do!" said the other, as he opened the umbrella and walked off, "do as I did—borrow one."

Communications.

THE COMMISSIONERS' REPORT.

TIPPECANOE CITY, OHIO, May 1, 1875.

MR. EDITOR:—

To-day for the first time looking over THE INDEX for April 1 (the number had been mislaid) I was somewhat astonished at the report of the Commissioners on Taxation of Church Property—not astonished that they reported as they did, but because of the arguments used in support of their report. They lay down principles of government, as I think, diametrically in opposition to those on which our government is founded. They say: "When this self-surrender" [of the individual to the State] "is free and complete, there is nothing more to be desired, either on the part of the individuals or the State." This is assuming that the State is all in all, and individuals have no rights, except such as are mercifully granted by the State—as if the State was the prior being and individuals came afterwards! This does not sound like—"we the people make and ordain"—"that all governments derive their just powers from the people"—that the people, individuals acting in concert, can amend, alter, or abolish all governments—that individuals have certain "inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness"—that "governments are established to secure these ends"—and that "governments have no right to tax individuals only to protect them in the enjoyment of their rights." But the Commission do not talk as if they admitted the doctrine that the State should tax individuals only for the protection of individuals; they hold that it can tax for the good of the State, as if the State was not composed of individuals—as if they could tax for State purposes without any regard to the individual rights mentioned! Is it not plain the State has no right to do anything whatever except to secure to each individual his inalienable rights? When this is done, the State is rightly protected, being only an aggregate of individuals.

I am not trying to draw a line between what a State may tax for, and what it may not; I only wish to show the State has no right to tax the community to support religion, as it is taught by the different denominations which profess to teach it. All churches make a wide distinction between what they call religion and morals, holding that even morals are dangerous without religion. A question now naturally arises, What is the religion of the churches when separated from morality? Take first the Catholic Church. Its religion consists in what it teaches about God, his attributes, what he has done, how he has established the Catholic Church as the only true one, and condemns all others as false; how he has made the Pope infallible and given him the infallible wisdom and authority to utter the following: "To teach that liberty of conscience and worship is the personal right of every man, which ought to be protected by law, is insane nonsense,"—the "liberty of perdition." By the "authority of his Divine Master" the Pope declares he has "authority not only over individuals, but over nations, peoples, and their sovereign rulers." The Catholic religion further requires that you believe all this—submit yourself, and this "nation" too, to the dictation of the Pope, obey all his commands, and have full faith that all this comes from God, or suffer the pains of purgatory as long as the Pope might please to sentence you for! All this, and more of the same sort, the Commission finds it just and right to tax the people of Massachusetts to support!

Now what is the religion of the Protestant aside from his morality, which he too teaches is dangerous unless supplemented by his religion? The first part of it is that the Pope is a great imposter and humbug; so far, so good. The next is that the Scriptures were in a miraculous way dictated to man by God himself, and are infallible, and you are bound under penalty of hell to believe all they contain; and the Orthodox part of Protestantism say the Scriptures teach that God is composed of three distinct parts, the Father, Son, and Spirit, and "these are the same in substance, equal in power and glory." Yet the son is of the same age as the father, and born of a woman under circumstances not considered moral in these times. They also teach that man was created holy and with all his faculties entire, and from this "state of holiness" he fell into one of "sin and misery"; that for man's thus falling God was very wroth, and sorry, and, to satisfy his anger and allay his sorrow, sacrificed his son, a holy and perfect being, that he might have mercy on his creature man, and restore him to happiness. But, as we are now told, the whole plan is likely to fail, because before man can be saved he must first come to God, which he can't do unless God help him, and God will help only a few such as he determined to help before he made man at all; and we all know what is to be done with the balance. According to Orthodox Protestant teachings, a most implicit faith must be had in all this, or no one can be saved.

Even among the Orthodox Protestants the times was, if not now, when each thought of the others that there was not truth enough in their doctrines to save them. Now comes in the heterodox Protestants who have no faith, or not much, in all that preceded them. Then come the Jews, calling everything bosh but the Old Testament. Then come along the sceptics, infidels, Free Religionists, etc. All of these have consciences and rights; and, according to the foundation on which our government rests, we are bound to protect them all in the free exercise of these rights. How can we do this impartially, except by taxing alike all the property held by each for the propagation of his own religious views?

But it is said: "Religion is essential to good government." I have simply been telling what religion, separated from morality, consists of. Can any one think that the good of the State requires a belief in all this nonsense, and that we should trample under foot the very foundation of our government to build up such ideas? It is sound morality our State needs; is it impossible we should have that without this religious jargon? The opinions of the Commission appear to be founded on such an idea! They say: "The culture of the State, its freedom from crime, its social order, will rest ultimately upon the religion of its subjects." When all the trash now called religion is thrown out, and religion becomes love to God and man carried out in "doing to others as you would have others do to you," "visiting the widow and fatherless in their afflictions, and keeping unspotted from the world," then may it do for the State what the Commission thinks it may do. But this is morality, which our religionists think dangerous unless supplemented by their "insane nonsense" which they call religion.

But for the sake of the argument let us admit that the teaching of all these absurdities is necessary for the preservation of good government in some degree. Does it then follow as a matter of course the government should exempt their churches from taxation? If church property should go untaxed because the teachings in them conserved the morality of those who listened, then all property, when so used as to serve the same end, should also be exempt. Does not agriculture, the mechanical branches of business, manufacturing and mercantile occupations, have much more to do in conserving good morals than all the churches ten-fold? On the principle the Commissioners apply to churches, they should be exempt. The press at this day perhaps does more in this way than the same amount of property in any other occupation; on their principle it would come in for exemption.

The good and thoughtful all over the land saw and deplored the demoralizing effects of the stoppage of a few mechanical and manufacturing establishments which has taken place lately. According to the theory, our government should have sent the "tramps" to our religious houses of worship. But all know employment was the best means of securing good morals. Adopt the principle advocated, and we would have no property left for taxation.

E. L. CRANE.

LIBERALISM TRIUMPHANT IN SAN FRANCISCO.

SANTA CLARA, Cal., April 25, 1875.

DEAR ABBOT:—

The matter of religious exercises in the San Francisco public schools came up again before the City Board of Education last Tuesday evening. As I wrote you some weeks ago, the Board had decided that the Lord's Prayer and all religious exercises must be excluded from the schools as "sectarian," within the meaning of the prohibitory statute.

The Presbyterians and others protested that only the dogmas of special sects were properly to be considered sectarian, and petitioned the Board to rescind its late vote and order the Lord's Prayer to be recited, and the Psalms of David to be read or chanted in the schools.

On the other side, the enclosed counter petition [written by me at the request of San Francisco liberals, and read at the close of my address on the subject in Dashaway Hall last Sunday] was submitted, numerously signed, mostly by Americans and Germans, with some Jews and a few Catholics.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, who reported, last Tuesday evening, in favor of continuing to exclude all religious exercises whatever, and the Board voted accordingly.

This settles the matter for the present.

The San José Liberal League, at its April meeting, voted to petition the School Board of that city to prohibit all religious exercises in their schools. I will inform you of the result.

Yours, J. L. HATCH.

PETITION AGAINST RELIGIOUS EXERCISES IN OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

To the Honorable Board of Education of the City and County of San Francisco:—

The undersigned, your petitioners, desire to represent to your honorable body that we have been greatly pleased with the determination evinced by your recent action to carry out the spirit of our school law, and of our National and State Constitutions, by making our public schools truly and thoroughly unsectarian; and we earnestly hope and trust that you will continue to maintain that position, and take no backward step in this matter, whoever may desire it.

We observe that those who have petitioned you to reverse your late action, and to issue a positive order for the use of the Lord's Prayer and the reading of the Holy Scriptures as parts of the daily exercises of the schools, represent that the statute upon which you have founded your action "only forbids the preference of any one sect," and only requires "the exclusion of special dogmas of sects in religion."

It seems to us a sufficient answer to this that it must have been the intention of the Legislature to confine the State system of instruction within certain limits, corresponding strictly to those which our National and State Constitutions recognize as marking the legitimate and proper sphere of civil governments. This, as all the constitutional commentators agree, is secular and excludes religion from all consideration, except that of equal protection; not on the ground of its inutility, but from the conviction that the interests of religion as well as civil government would be better subserved by maintaining a strict independence and complete separation between them.

The late John C. Spencer, one of the most eminent of American jurists, has officially decided that "It is no part of our public school system to give religious instruction," and Rev. Dr. McVaine, a distinguished educator and Presbyterian divine, in endorsing his decision as the only honest interpretation of our Constitutions and laws says: "Even the reading of the Bible in these schools... is in palpable conflict with this idea of governmental neutrality in religion, under which it is the Constitutional right of the Romanist to object against the common version of the Scriptures, of the Jew against the New Testament, and of the heathen and infidel against the whole."

Judge Taft, of Ohio (a State whose Constitutional guarantees of religious freedom are identical, in substance, with those of our own Constitution), in a published "opinion," which has been sustained by the Supreme Court of that State, says: "No sect can, because it includes a majority of the citizens of the State, claim any preference whatever. . . . Nor does it make the case any better if several sects agree in a certain degree and kind of religious instruction and worship, among themselves, though forming together a large majority of the community or State. So long as there are any who do not believe in, or approve of, their mode of religious worship or instruction, they cannot insist that it is not sectarian, or that any non-believing taxpayer shall be compelled to submit to it in the common schools."

We submit to your honorable Board that King James' version of the Bible is essentially a Protestant symbol, as the Douay version is a Catholic symbol; and so the former as well as the latter should be excluded from the schools. We further submit that the reciting, singing, or chanting the Lord's Prayer is as much an act of distinctive Protestant worship, as the making the sign of the cross is of Catholic worship; and therefore that the former can with no more propriety, under our Constitution and laws, be introduced into our public schools, than the latter.

Finally, we would remind you that when, in 1830, numerous petitions were presented to Congress to order the mails not to be transported, or the post-offices opened, on Sunday, upon the ground that it was the Christian Sabbath, counter petitions were presented opposing such legislation for the reason that it would be sectarian in character, and so unconstitutional; and this was the view taken by the Committee to whom the matter was referred, in their report, which view Congress endorsed by adopting the report. Now, if discrimination in favor of "the Christian Sabbath" be sectarian, is not discrimination in favor of "the Christian Scriptures" and the Lord's Prayer equally so? We cannot forbear quoting, in conclusion, a few words from that able report which has stood for thirty-five years as the deliberate sense of our National Legislature, not only on the particular matter of Sunday mails, but on the general issue of the complete religious impartiality or neutrality of our National and State Constitutions. It says: "The Constitution regards the conscience of the Jew as sacred as that of the Christian, and gives no more authority to adopt a measure affecting the conscience of a solitary individual than that of a whole community. That representative who would violate this principle would lose his delegated character and forfeit the confidence of his constituents. . . . If a solemn act of legislation shall, in one point, define the law of God, or point out to the citizen one religious duty, it may with equal propriety define every part of revelation and enforce every religious obligation, even to the forms and ceremonies of worship, the church and the support of the clergy."

These positions seem to us impregnable, and we are persuaded that a persistent disregard of the principles which they involve, by those to whom the interests of our public schools are intrusted, would inevitably result in their great injury and the final complete overthrow of our beneficent common school system.

Therefore we, your present petitioners, respectfully ask and earnestly entreat your honorable Board firmly to maintain the position you have assumed and the decision you have recently made in the matter of religious exercises in the schools under your care.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, etc.

NO FREEDOM BUT IN CHRISTIANITY.

MOST VALIANT INDEX:—

Considering how prone you "free-thinkers" are to claim for yourselves an attitude of positive freedom—a freedom that is ample for all needs, I am led to inquire concerning the actual realities of the case. We are all inclined, doubtless, to put on and wear the habit we fall into, with much complaisance,—sometimes, perhaps, with stilted airs of superiority; but in any case it is well enough to have the shelter behind which we dodge put to the test, that we may know if it will positively serve us in extremities of need. Bear with me, therefore, while I inquire if "Free Religion" makes that final advance requisite to justify the claim of its votaries. Is it a reality fully answering to present human needs? Or is it only an ignis fatuus that will carry the head into the realm of distressing fogs and vapors, and the feet into loathsome sloughs?

I grant, and affirm with all my might, the wrongs of authority on every hand, as administered to partial and private ends rather than with human intent; but my aversion to unregulated and mistaken freedom is hardly less than to undue authority. Hence what I now want to know is whether this "freedom" in breaking away from fetters and chains assumes conditions of freedom befitting the occasion; or does it only exhibit the spring of a natural reaction against galling oppression? Does it intelligently plant itself upon the central laws of life, and then unfold those laws as a sure guide to weary and worn seekers for the immutable; or does it merely break away from the thralldom of the conventional "rings" of Christendom, and find its jubilation inspired simply by the loose freedom of extreme self-poise? Freedom that has no definite law and appreciable form competent to make an immutable standard of action is a spirit without a body to embrace and operate it; a moving principle without a method adequate to assume true expression. Is the freedom of the new school more than this? If so, please let us see wherein. If this school holds and calls into use an intelligible system of law competent to organize its force upon undeviating grounds, let it be set forth accordingly. But if its boasted freedom ends in breaking old trammels, giving us no law of human freedom beyond the stale code of recognized ethics, I, for one, propose a Protestantism newer and more vital still; one that repudiates alike stagnating authority and disordered or riotous freedom. I protest in behalf of liberty and law—law that shall be found clear and constant, so satisfying the intellectual nature of man; and liberty positive and absolute for all occasions, so satisfying his emotional nature. Beyond authority and freedom as separate and controversial factors, let us have a reconciling term that will give us permanent authority and freedom as one—authority that is never a yoke, and freedom void of every taint of looseness. Freedom void of definite authority is fully as shocking as authority without freedom. Radical and Conservative, poised against each other in struggles for special ends, are alike partial and without promise of the ultimate and all-sufficing good. What seems to me most needed to-day is not the intensifying of freedom against authority, but an adjusting term that shall give us perfect liberty in law and perfect law in liberty, thus ordering and reconciling opposites, keeping the full glory of both; just as the glaring beams of the full day, becoming suffused with the shades of night, give to the eye the matchless hues of sunset, before which mid-day lustre pales to insignificance. What, therefore, do you emancipationists propose as the regulative law of liberty?

For myself, I may say, I regard the Christian Gospel as the only clear affirmation of the principle of absolute freedom that has ever been made.

In a former communication I instanced mathematics and the relations of the human mind thereto as illustrative of the principles of relative and absolute freedom. As mere learner of the rules, laws, or principles that make any science, one must be tolerably free in his pursuits or investigations, while he is yet held to certain tutelar dictation by the instructor, and is under the sternest obligations constantly to abide the rule of the laws which make the theme a science. While a learner, one cannot escape tutelar pressures, nor the rigors of the immutable laws of science in the abstract. But the moment one is educated thoroughly therein—comes to such an understanding of the principles thereof as to need no further instruction,—then, for the first time, such one is duly empowered in positive or absolute freedom as to the subject in hand. And this power is not derived by nullifying law or authority, but by becoming perfected in the knowledge and use thereof. The master or freeman in mathematics is such master when he knows, and conforms to, the laws of mathematics. The law is not annulled in him, but is livingly fulfilled; and in that fulness alone are his freedom and delight assured. In that only is he master of the whole situation, and empowered to occupy and use without limit.

Now, this principle of full human freedom—of divine human mastery over all the obstructions and limitations incident to all stages of minority—was, to my mind, livingly revealed in the Christian Gospel; and nowhere else, to my knowledge. A scientific rendering of that principle will exhibit to the understanding the laws of creation, as a complete system—the full scale of cosmic evolution and organization. This rendering, clearly held by the intellect, will unfranchise thought and give the range of the whole field; while a strict application thereof to the affairs of life and experience will make mankind practically free and orderly in all respects—will "make free indeed."

Ever yours, THERON GRAY.

["We emancipationists" propose NATURE as the "regulative law of liberty," and SCIENCE as the knowledge of Nature. Since science includes (or will include) ethics just as much as chemistry, and is wholly based on the idea of immutable law, our correspondent need not become uneasy over the supposed absence of "law" in Free Religion. But the "Christian Gospel," which he propounds as the "only clear affirmation of the principle of absolute freedom that has ever been made," is an attempt to strain the universe of Nature through the uneducated mind of Jesus, and let only so much of it through this little sieve as shall favor his Messianic hallucination. The result is that no follower of Jesus knows what "absolute freedom" means; for it is the freedom of Science, and throws all sieves aside. There is something melancholy in the delusion which looks to Jesus for the ethical knowledge which can come only from science; and the wretched inadequacy of Christian morality is nowhere more evident than in its total contempt for the rights of the scientific intellect.—ED.]

IS "THE INDEX" UNJUST TO CHRISTIANITY?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Some time ago a letter from Prof. Newman was published in THE INDEX, in which exceptions were taken to some of Mr. Abbot's views of Christianity. The statement differed from numerous others of a like character that have appeared, both in THE INDEX and out of it, in that several apparently strong points were made against the anti-Christian position. For this reason it seemed to me at the time that some direct explanation was due from the anti-Christian side; and, as this explanation has not yet been offered, I will venture to give a few thoughts of my own. THE INDEX can hardly afford to rest under the imputation of being unjust to the religion of the Bible. It certainly cannot afford to merit such an imputation. Every earnest and sagacious thinker who finds himself compelled to take a stand outside of Christianity will admit that it is better, from any point of view, freely to concede to that religion all that rightfully belongs to it. If, then, it should appear that the editor of THE INDEX fails in this, if his criticisms of the prevailing faith are uncandid or unfair, it follows that he so far forfeits his title to be regarded as a true representative of honest radical thought.

But is he thus unjust? I think not. My opportunities for becoming acquainted with Orthodox Christianity have been pretty good,—I having been brought up under strictly evangelical influences, though myself an "unbeliever" almost from my earliest recollection; and I do not hesitate to say that, if my observation and reflection are worth anything, Mr. Abbot's estimate of the religion of Jesus is, in the main, correct. Let me remark here, parenthetically, that I recognize no Christianity which is not evangelical. There may be those who will say that the Orthodox doctrines of eternal punishment, salvation through faith in Christ alone, etc., have no warrant from Scripture; and that what is called Liberal Christianity is the only real Christianity. I should hardly take the trouble to dispute with them. It is enough to say that, if Jesus did not intend to teach these doctrines, and if he did intend to teach their opposite, he was most unfortunate in the selection of words; so that, in any case, Christianity is responsible for the doctrines.

Prof. Newman thinks THE INDEX unjust in imputing to Christian doctrine "the punishment of heresy as a crime." This is a matter, it seems to me, that ought to be easily disposed of. The real, underlying question is, whether, regarded from a purely Christian standpoint, false belief, or unbelief of any kind, is a crime. Does Christianity teach that those who deliberately reject its essential doctrines, either wholly or in part, are for that reason offenders in the sight of God? I see not how any intelligent man, with the facts before him, can deny that it does so teach. But it is not necessary to insist upon that. We have only to point to the indubitable fact that "Jesus and the apostles" seem to teach this, and that the effect of their recorded words upon the minds of their followers has been to make a vast majority of them believe it, in order to show that Christianity is responsible for the doctrine. Theologians—with excellent apparent reason, from their own standpoint—have been almost unanimous in the opinion that the deadliest of all offenses, the unpardonable sin, which shall not be forgiven in this world or in the world to come, is persistent unbelief. It is evident, then, that Christianity is responsible for the teaching and for all its fearful consequences. For who does not see that this doctrine, if true, affords a justification for all the persecutions that have engaged honest bigots since the Church began? If unbelief is so terrible an offense in the sight of God, it is clear that the man who promulgates infidel or heretical views (for heresy is only a form of unbelief) must be a very great sinner against his fellow-man; and the right to punish him follows as a matter of course. It is true that in this age, and especially in a Protestant country, there are numerous difficulties and objections that might be urged against a full practical enforcement of any such right; but the careful thinker will find that they are difficulties and objections which bear against Christianity itself, not against Mr. Abbot's conception of it.

What Protestants think or "how they feel" with reference to the criticisms of THE INDEX is a matter of very little importance, so far as the correctness of the editor's views is concerned. Let me illustrate from my own experience: I am a confirmed anti-Sabbatarian, and often put my principles in practice by engaging in secular employment on Sunday. This I can do with a clear conscience, and it is impossible for any one to be more strongly convinced that the practice is wrong than I am that it is perfectly innocent and proper. And yet for doing this I am liable under the Sunday Law to be at any time arrested and locked up like a common thief. Now if I know anything I know that this law is outrageously unjust; and I have sometimes so represented it to Protestant Christians. The first expression on their part has generally been one of surprise that I could possibly charge anything unjust or oppressive upon their religion. After that, the answer has always been, in substance, the same: "It is you who are wrong, and not Christianity. God has commanded you to keep holy the Sabbath day, and you have no right to disobey his command." And so on to the end. Now I believe this to be excellent Christian reasoning; but it is a kind of logic that would justify the worst outrages ever perpetrated in the name of religion. Jesus himself showed this same disregard for the rights of others, when he drove the traders out of the temple at Jerusalem. Supposing one of these astonished people had turned upon the "meek and lowly" Nazarene (I do not mean that he was not meek and lowly; but the devil of intolerance was too strong even for him)—suppose one of them had turned and said, "What right have you, sir, to interfere with us? We are harming nobody, but are engaged peaceably in trade. Our business is not in itself sinful, and we do not see that the mere fact of carrying it on in a church makes it so. We do not believe there is anything wrong about it." What answer do you suppose Jesus would have made? What answer could he have made, save that which religious intolerance makes always and everywhere: "You have no right to believe" thus and so. "God has instructed you differently," etc.?

It seems sufficiently clear that the spirit which eighteen hundred years ago prompted Jesus to this act of lawless violence, and which to-day, even in Protestant countries, makes the non-observance of religious days a criminal offence, is the same in kind with that which in almost every age and country has stained the page of religious history with blood.

To Mr. Abbot's charge that Christianity "deteriorates ethics by making an inspired book the test of morality," Prof. Newman returns the rather singular answer, "No inspired book was preached by Jesus and the apostles." Surely the gentleman has not examined this subject with his usual carefulness. If the teachings and commands of Jesus were authoritative, as from God (and this much he certainly claimed, if we know anything at all about the man); if they were to be followed and obeyed not only by his own immediate disciples but by Christians of all succeeding generations (and this may safely be assumed as a Christian view of the matter, otherwise there is no authorized church to-day),—does not an "inspired book," an "infallible church," or some such contrivance, become an absolute necessity? There are difficulties enough, to be sure, attending this view of the case; such, for example, as the fact that, so far as we know, Jesus never took any pains to have his sayings collected and put into permanent form. But they are purely Christian difficulties, and do not at all affect Mr. Abbot's proposition.

I had intended to notice some other points in the same letter, but this communication is already too long. Perhaps enough has been said to show that the anti-Christian position is not so entirely unreasonable as many have seemed to suppose.

C. E. M.

"INDIVIDUAL FREEDOM."

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I read the article with the above caption, in THE INDEX of April 22, with great interest. It was evidently penned by a practised writer. Your correspondent has graphically portrayed the two opposite phases of society—the state of chaos and the state of high art; but she is not clear to my intelligence upon two or three important points. She says, for example:—

"Freedom—that means the opportunity to do as we like, as we think best; it means entire exemption from control. . . . With the gratification of self, action grows arrogant, personality magnifies rapidly, and very soon encroaches on the boundaries of other individuals, equally pretentious, and spreading at the same fast rate. Then whose freedom is to be respected? For one of the two will have to yield."

Here are three assumptions which I think open to criticism. First, "freedom means the opportunity to do as we like with entire exemption from control." Is that indeed what the Protestant world has been fighting for during the last three centuries? Have we simply been rebelling against legitimate "restraint," and clamoring for "license" that we may become abandoned to self-indulgence? The party of freedom would be loth to accept that as a fair definition of their principles and objects. Says John Stuart Mill in his work on Liberty: "The only part of the conduct of any one for which he is amenable to society is that which concerns others. In the part that merely concerns himself his independence is, of right, absolute." Herbert Spencer says (First Principles, page 8): "The freedom of the individual, limited only by the like freedom of other individuals, is sacred." For the most part, those who have spoken or written in the interest of freedom have invariably qualified it with conditions and limitations. They hold with Mill and Spencer that the individual is entitled to freedom without interference only so long as he refrains from encroaching upon the freedom of others; in other words, that the individual be allowed by society to participate in the privileges of freedom only on condition that he assume the cost of his personal acts. It may be granted there are thousands screaming for freedom who have no clearly defined notions regarding its proper limitations; but that does not justify the lumping of all those who preach the gospel of freedom as sore-heads clamoring for personal indulgence.

Secondly, your correspondent regards it as matter of course that self-assertion invariably coexists with arrogance and disregard of the rights and feelings of others. I submit that the attitude of the early Protestant Reformers, the heroism of Hampden and Sydney, and the noble self-sacrifice of the leading spirits in our own American Revolution, negatives such an implication.

Thirdly, the assumption that the freedom of one necessarily destroys the freedom of another is, I think, sufficiently answered by the formula, "Equal freedom of all." Your correspondent seems to have only in view the lawless freedom of the mob; but I protest that the definition is narrower than the term imports.

Your correspondent has delineated with a delicate appreciation the estate of a perfected society; delineated, too, with great fidelity, the conditions essential to high performance and noble living. But fortunately, or unfortunately, society has "neither the developed capacity nor the training essential to orchestration." The road between the actual and the ideal is long and difficult. How shall we traverse the route which leads through such an interminable wilderness? While your correspondent is evidently out of sorts with the manner in which Democrats and Republicans have deputed themselves, she fails to suggest any scientific method by which the transition from the Old to the New may be effected. And it is a canon of criticism, a knowledge of the natural laws, a perception of an adequate method, that the world needs to-day. Fourier saw with prophet eye the harmonious adjustment of society as it is to be; but he lacked a scientific method by which to train and conduct the world into social solidarity. Undoubtedly the major desires of men and women to-day tend toward better rather than toward worse society conditions. The need of the hour points quite as unmistakably toward a more perfect social science, as it does toward higher moral aims. Neither does it seem probable that the drift of the Western races toward self-assertion and individual freedom is either accidental or calamitous. There are possibly conditions and epochs in the career of nations when "obedience" is the requirement; and yet there are other periods when self-assertion, and even revolution, may be the only condition of progress.

I am not one of those who "cherish the expectation that by the removal of hindrances the world will rise immediately to its grandest proportions." The evolution of the race is slow. The advocates of freedom contemplate it only as one among many conditions of growth. Even after we have started upon a sound basis, and with correct methods, the upbuilding of the social structure will be a question of time.

E. WHIPPLE.

4 CONCORD SQUARE, Boston.]

"DO WOMEN DESIRE THE BALLOT?"

MR. EDITOR:—

This is a question about which your correspondent "F. H. G." seems to be in doubt, yet he intimates a knowledge that perhaps one in eleven may desire it, though he confesses that, while he sympathizes with the one, the ten have a stronger claim upon his feelings because of the "grievous burden" brought upon them by the action of the one.

Although I am one of the "ones" who do desire the ballot, yet I am ready to agree with "F. H. G." in his estimate of the number of women who at present desire or demand it. And yet, unlike "F. H. G.," my sympathies are not with the ten undesiring ones, for I fail to understand how a mere acquiescence in any wrong is ever going to make that wrong right. It is no new thing in the history of any reform to find the masses slow to follow, although glad to do so, when they can follow in crowds over the level road hewn out for them by the pioneer "ones." Herbert Spencer in his Social Statics remarks:—

"But the strangest peculiarity exhibited by those deficient in sense of rights—or rather that which looks the strangest to us—is their inability to recognize their own claims. We are told, for instance, by Lieutenant Bernard that, in the Portuguese settlements on the African coast, the free negroes are 'taunted by the slaves as having no white man to look after them, and see them righted when oppressed'; and it is said that in America the slaves themselves look down upon the free blacks and call them rubbish. Which anomalous-looking facts are, however, easily conceivable when we remember that here in England, in the nineteenth century, most women defend the state of servitude in which they are held by men."

I also agree with "F. H. G." in his opinion that "taxation without representation" is not the fundamental basis of woman's claim to the ballot. Whether women "desire" to vote or not makes no difference as to their right to do so. As one of the wrongfully disfranchised, I affirm that, back of the old barbaric idea that "might makes right," men have no just claim to arrogate to themselves the voting power as a purely masculine attribute or privilege. If I knew quite well that I should never care to cast a single vote into the ballot-box, I would still insist strenuously upon my right to do so if I chose.

So long as the elective franchise is allowed to remain the prerogative of the male sex, just so long is there a virtual admission that woman is the inferior and creature of man; and just so far is true progress hampered and hindered. And just so long as this invidious aristocracy of sex is kept up and believed in, just so long must there remain in the midst of our vaunted civilization an undoubted "relic of barbarism."

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

SO LONG as the towns remained small and homogeneous, this injustice was not possible. No measure could be passed, whether good or bad, which did not affect all equally. Even the old ecclesiastical laws, which would now be exceedingly tyrannical, were not so at the time they were passed; for they were based upon that which all alike professed, and were required for the good of the whole, not for the benefit of a part only. When the Quakers and Baptists were finally allowed to remain in Massachusetts, for example, the religious homogeneity of that State was forever at an end, and, gradually, everything connected with religious belief has been excluded from the province of legislation. Nothing of this once close connection now remains, with the exception of a few more or less atrophied strands, which are slowly snapping in obedience to the logic which first began their severance. While special ecclesiastical regulations are thus entirely abandoned, there still remain in force many general laws in which Baptist, Quaker, Puritan, and Infidel are alike interested—laws of restraint, of protection, of the maintenance of justice. In short, as religious variations were introduced, it became necessary to take religion out of the field of legislation, or, in other words, to make ecclesiastical laws as general as those which apply to all associations for special purposes. And this seems to indicate a simple principle of legislation; namely, as population becomes more varied, legislation must become more general, affecting equally the whole, and not any one portion of the people. More and more, therefore, will it become necessary to remove from legislation many things once admissible, until at last, as interests become more conflicting and population more heterogeneous, legislation will more and more tend to confine itself to the task of perfecting the laws of equity. Only when this principle is generally recognized will legislation, in town-meeting or anywhere else, be restricted to the limits within which it rightly belongs.—N. Y. Nation.

AN AMATEUR naturalist, writing of the fondness of cruelty for its own sake observable in the human species, says: "To refer to the striking similarity of this passion in man to that which is manifested by monkeys, is not of course to explain its origin; but I am quite sure that it is in the monkeys that this explanation is to be sought. Every one knows that these animals show the keenest delight in wantonly torturing others, but every one does not know how much trouble an average monkey will put himself to in order that he may gratify this taste. One example will suffice. A friend who has lived a long time in India tells me that he has not unfrequently seen monkeys feigning death for an hour or two at a time, for the express purpose of inducing crows and other carnivorous birds to approach within grasping distance; and when one of the latter was caught the delighted monkey would put it to all kinds of agonies, of which plucking alive seemed to be the favorite."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, assisted by ABRAHAM W. STEVENS, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 PROF. FRANCIS W. NEWMAN, London, Eng.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

ASSOCIATE EDITOR:

ABRAM WALTER STEVENS.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 F. W. NEWMAN, England.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

OF THE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 10 cents, singly; package of ten, 60 cents; of one hundred, $3.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all readers of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's breviary.....	2.25
The World-Preist.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist, With Memorial Verse. 2 vols.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
How and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Boy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Chadwick's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Two-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Acquaintance with Black England.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticism of Darwin.....	1.00
trative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGLOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGLOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Egyptian.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. 2 vols.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of the Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait, 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Brown Monastery.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait, Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours: A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHULLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.75
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fennimore.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. 1.2	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unre-printed Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.0
Letters.....	2.00
A Week in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Life.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTEY'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER!

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 14 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 75 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FREE DISCUSSION

is held at HOSPITALER HALL, 593 Washington Street, Boston, every Sunday, at 10½ A.M., 2½ and 7½ P.M. All that relates to the Religious, Political, and Social interests of mankind constitute the subjects for discussion. THE INDEX and Index Tracts are for sale every Sunday at Hospitaler Hall.

PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
MORSE'S NEW BUST OF
THEODORE PARKER.
Cabinet size. Price 50 cents.
Sent by mail on receipt of price. Address

S. H. MORSE,
25 Bromfield Street, Boston.
Also for sale at the office of THE INDEX.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,
BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,
—AND—
GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co's Bank, 41 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

READY THIS WEEK.Freedom and Fellowship in Religion.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses Edited by a Committee of the Free Religious Association. With an Introduction on "The Religious Outlook," by Rev. O. B. FROTHINGHAM. 16mo. Price $2.

One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association? It is one of the objects of that Association to encourage and to bring before the public just such discussions of religious problems as this book contains. The Free Religious Association is an organization representing certain principles and tendencies, and not any new creed or system of faith, best suggested by the title of the book,—Freedom of inquiry and opinion, and yet Fellowship in spirit and aim.

Sold by all booksellers. Mailed post-paid by the publishers,

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

JUST PUBLISHED.National Hymn and Tune Book.

Now ready. Adapted for Opening and Closing Exercises in Schools and Seminaries, for Congregational, Social, and Home Singing, 128 pages, 200 choice tunes, 340 hymns. Price but 40 cents. $35.00 per Hundred.

Clarke's Organ Voluntaries, $1.50.
Batiste's Organ Voluntaries, $2.50.

CLARKE'S REED ORGAN COMPANION.

A valuable, useful, and brilliant collection of Exercises, Airs, Songs, and Pieces for Reed Organs. Price $2.00.

Strauss Dance Music, Violin and Piano, $1.00
Winner's Party Dances, Violin and Piano, .75
Winner's Violin and Flute Duets 1.00

CLARKE'S DOLLAR INSTRUCTORS

For Reed Organs. For Piano. For Violin. Useful, cheap, instructive Books with Exercises and numerous Attractive Airs for practice.

Sold by all the principal music dealers. Sent, post-free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.

CHAS. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

$200 A MONTH to agents everywhere. Address EXCELSIOR MANUFACTURING CO., Buchanan, Mich.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

FRED GRANT & CO.

A capital Story for Boys, full of wit and wisdom. Price, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE BOUND INDEX FOR 1874.

The bound volume of THE INDEX for 1874 (Volume 5) will be promptly forwarded to any address on receipt of $3, by express, at the purchaser's expense. A complete file for the year can be furnished in no other form. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

WEST NEWTON English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

ABOUT CHEAP RATES WEST-

WARD.—We have frequent inquiries about the cheapest rates, best route, &c., to Western points. We cannot undertake to answer such questions in detail. It is evident that many of our readers are seeking new homes and fortunes in the West, and for complete and reliable detailed information about that country—from Missouri to Oregon and California inclusive—we do not hesitate to commend them to Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent of the Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis. Mr. Ford has thousands of pamphlets, circulars, time-tables, maps, rate-sheets, etc., for free distribution, and answers all questions, promptly and cheerfully, without charge.

H. H. CHANDLER & CO.,

NEWSPAPER
Advertisement Brokers,
Chicago, Illinois.

RELIGIOUS and AGRICULTURAL NEWSPAPERS a specialty.

Complete files for inspection of advertisers.

Lists sent upon application.

Send for estimates.

REASONS FOR USING THEEUREKA SPOOL SILK.

It is full length. It is full size. It is smooth and elastic, and is equally adapted to hand or machine use.

Many kinds of spool silk are a perfect fraud, being not only shorter in length, but a much finer size than they are represented to be, and of so poor a quality as to be unfit for use. The ladies will always find the Eureka Silk exactly as represented. Every spool is warranted, and the manufacturer's name indelibly branded on every spool. Call for it.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

4th Ave. & 23d St., New York,

HAVE NOW READY

The Religion of Humanity.

By O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

Third Revised Edition. Square 12mo. Cloth, extra, $1.50.

"The Religion of Humanity is a marked book,—a cause of admiration and satisfaction to those who hold with the author, a target for the keenest shafts of those who differ from him. . . . It impresses the thoughtful reader as profoundly sincere, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently, and of vigorous and finished style."—Boston Globe.

"Nobody can peruse Mr. Frothingham's book without respect for his learning, for his mental honesty, for his skill in stating his convictions, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

Mr. Frothingham's Sermons.

Second Series. Published semi-monthly. Price 5 cents each, or by mail, paid, 10 cents.

Subscriptions received for the year at $2. Complete lists of both series mailed on application.

CHARLES SUMNER.

A finelikeless of Massachusetts' great Senator, the copy of a recent Photograph by Black, is for sale at THE INDEX office, and will be sent by mail to any address on receipt of the price—fifty cents.

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT

BETWEEN
Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

THE VATICAN DECREES, IN THEIR BEARING ON CIVIL ALLEGIANCE.

This famous pamphlet, by Hon. W. E. Gladstone, containing also the Replies of Archbishop Manning, Lord Acton, and Monsignor Capel, is for sale at this office, at the price of THIRTY CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

KANSAS, COLORADO, NE-

BRASKA, CALIFORNIA.—The Spring tide of travel Westward has fairly set in. Thousands are migrating to Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, and especially California. To such, as a cheap and desirable route to destination, we commend the Missouri Pacific Through Line, by way of St. Louis and Kansas City. Call upon or address Mr. E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, 25 South Fourth Street, St. Louis, who will cheerfully furnish you correct and complete information, descriptive pamphlets, maps, time-tables, etc., for gratuitous distribution.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heresies and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," "The Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

OUTLINES OF COSMIC PHI-

LOSOPHY. Based on the Doctrine of Evolution, with Criticisms on the Positive Philosophy. By John Fiske, author of "Myths and Myth-Makers," etc. 2 vols. 8vo. $6.00.

An important work, containing a careful and popular exposition of Herbert Spencer's philosophy, trenchant criticisms upon the Positive Philosophy, and a thoughtful study of the relation between Science and Religion.

Price, 2 vols., post-paid, $6.00.
For sale by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manhood whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price
Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEXIN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES,

has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU GOING WEST? IF

so, and you desire full and reliable information as to the cheapest and best route to Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, California, Oregon, or any of the Western States or Territories, we recommend that you call upon or address E. A. FORD, General Passenger Agent, Missouri Pacific Through Line, at 25 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo., who will cheerfully answer all questions, and furnish you with maps, pamphlets, time-tables, rates, etc., free of charge. Now is the season of low rates, and applications should be made at once.

THE COLORADO HORTICULTURIST AND GARDENER'S COMPANION.

Issued Quarterly. Sixteen Pages. J. H. FOSTER, Editor.

A selection of 35c. worth of useful seeds, Green House Plants, &c., given gratis to each subscriber. On our List of Premiums is to be found that delicious, wild, hardy Raspberry (found growing at an altitude of about 6,000 feet above the sea level), known as the "Rocky Mountain Red"; also the Colorado "Wild Cucumber Vine," exceedingly ornamental and vigorous.

If you want to learn how we of the "New West" cultivate Fruits, Flowers, and Garden Vegetables, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. If you want to learn how we irrigate gardens, subscribe for the Colorado Horticulturist. It will please you. It will pay you.

"Rocky Mountain Raspberry" Plants, 35c. each; 3 for $1; $3 per dozen, post-paid by mail.

"Colorado Wild Cucumber Vine" seeds, 10c. per packet. Send 50c. for Horticulturist, and get both these as a premium. Send 5c. for specimen copy.

FOSTER & Co., Publishers,
P.O. Box 350, Greeley, Colorado.

THE FREESUNDAY ADVOCATE.*A MONTHLY JOURNAL AND REVIEW DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE NATIONAL SUNDAY LEAGUE.

The objects of the League are to advocate the opening of all Museums, Art Galleries, &c., on Sundays; to maintain during the summer the running of cheap Sunday Excursions; to provide during the winter "Sunday Evenings for the People;" and generally to promote everything conducive to rational recreation on Sunday.

The Free Sunday Advocate is published in London, England, and is conducted by an Honorary Editorial Committee, consisting of the following: Mrs. J. H. Simpson, London; Thomas Marshall, London; Fred'k Long, London; Francis W. Souther, London; Mark H. Judge, Hampstead.

THE ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION for delivery by post to any part of the United States is one dollar (payable in advance). Address

THE FREE SUNDAY ADVOCATE,
256 High Holborn, London, W.C., England.

CHARLES SUMNER'SGREAT WORK.*PROPHETIC VOICES

CONCERNING AMERICA.

By CHARLES SUMNER.

Fine Edition, Tinted Paper, with Steel Portrait, Crown 8vo., Cloth extra, $2.

Aside from its literary and historical merits, this volume has a special interest, from the fact that it was the last work on which Mr. Sumner was engaged before his death.

"PROPHETIC VOICES" will be found of great value to all who take an interest in the history of our country, so full is it of passages in which the unexampled prosperity of our land has been foretold by philosophers, poets, statesmen, and orators, of whom the lamented author has also given interesting sketches.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 6.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1875.

WHOLE No. 283.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———.

Also, as soon as five hundred such Liberal Leagues shall have been formed in different places, to send two delegates to a National Convention of Liberal Leagues, to be hereafter called, in order to co-operate with all the liberals of the country in securing the needed reforms.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the National Convention of Liberal Leagues when called together.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances. No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State; and no person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

SECTION 3.—Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of the second section of this Article by appropriate legislation.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

GLIMPSSES.

NOTHING should be dearer to an American citizen than the beneficent system of public schools. It is the foundation of all our liberties.

WE ARE sorry to learn from the report of the Building Committee of the Paine Memorial Hall that there is a debt of $71,810.07 on the building. The friends of the enterprise should unite to lift off this embarrassing load.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD kindly informs us that the Second Liberal League of Milwaukee was formed in that city at the close of his lecture on May 16. Mr. Robert C. Spencer was elected President, and Mr. Robert Boyd Secretary. The good movement is spreading.

IF EVER a sincere, and manly, and generous word was spoken, it was by O. B. Frothingham at the Bryant Commemorative Service. We republish it this week as a lesson in the humanities that is greatly needed; and we credit it to the Golden Age, in which we find it, though with well-grounded doubt whether that journal ought not itself to have credited it to some other journal.

REV. GEORGE S. BISHOP, of Orange, N. J., has been dismissed by his Presbyterian congregation because he "preached sound doctrines too faithfully." This would be a lesson to preach false doctrines and make-believe they are sound, were it not that one hundred and fifty other Presbyterians of the place, who like true-blue theology, forthwith organized a new society and gave Mr. Bishop a call.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD was quite recently invited to lecture in the Unitarian church at Omaha, Nebraska, by the pastor, Rev. S. P. Putnam, who has often contributed to these columns. As a consequence, Mr. Putnam has been turned adrift by his society. We recommend this fact for comment to the Christian Register, which publishes the "Unitarian Church" as the "Champion of Freedom."

MR. FRANK J. MEAD, of Minneapolis, reports that the Liberal League of that place, on May 2, passed the following: "Resolved, That the Liberal League of Minneapolis cordially indorses the proposal for an international convention of advocates of free thought to be held in the city of Philadelphia during the summer of 1876, and recommends that some organized effort be made by Leagues throughout the United States to bring about such convention." Mr. Mead's letter will be published in full next week.

REV. J. D. DOHERTY, a Catholic priest of St. Louis, said in a report on the schools of the Annunciation Parish: "I believe it will come to denominational education." That is the objective point aimed at by the Catholics; to break up altogether the secular education system which has made the United States what they are, and substitute for it the wretched, inefficient, sectarian sham called the parochial system. They do not want education at all, unless it can be made education in subservience to the Pope and credulity towards the priests.

PROF. LOOS, of Philadelphia, has just written to us: "I was glad to see that the Liberal League of Boston have taken the first practical step towards a more general representation of Liberalism during the Centennial. I hope that at your September meeting the time of the proposed Convention may be so fixed as to enable us to fall in with you, and make the representation of Radicalism in 1876 as universal as possible. I wish the Free Religious Association, at its forthcoming anniversary, would likewise do something towards joining hands for that purpose."

HERR WINDTHORST declared in the Landtag lately that "no peace was possible" to the Germans until they "accepted the American system; namely, the complete separation of Church and State." If an Ultramontane Catholic can see that, is it creditable that so many Americans cannot even yet see it—American liberals, too, who think it very outrageous that some of their number should press the "Demands of Liberalism"? But of course Windthorst could not have intended the full force of his words, for that would prove him not to be a thorough Catholic at all.

MRS. BESANT has given a most noble rebuke to the temporizing and timid policy of the Woman Suffrage Society of Great Britain. Her brilliant success as a lecturer and the great popular influence she is winning by her character and ability led the Society to offer her a handsome income, "on the condition that she should not give public expression to her radical, free-thinking views on religious matters." Mrs. Besant spurned the bribe, declaring that superstition is the tap-root of all oppressions, those of woman included. Woman-suffragists who defend Christianity in this country might well learn a lesson of insight, courage, and moral dignity from brave Mrs. Besant.

THE INDIAN CHIEFS who have travelled all the way to Washington from their reservations, to enter complaints against the officials in charge of Indian affairs, have been refused a hearing by the President, who coolly refers them back to the very officials against whom they complain! Moreover, the interpreters have cunningly falsified these complaints, turning them into praises! Such things are a burning disgrace to the Administration, no less than to the "Indian ring." Who wonders that the Indians are driven to desperate retaliation for their wrongs? Every honest American owes it to his country to rebuke such wickedness in its official servants, and to demand justice even for the despised and plundered savages.

THE PHILADELPHIA Radical Club, having called attention to "shocking cruelties perpetrated in the House of Refuge in that city," a Legislative Committee was sent to investigate, and found the facts reported to be true. When Radicalism shall everywhere wake up in this way to the great duties of humanity and begin to work, it will win respect and influence which are justly withheld from most of its present forms. A movement which never gets beyond talk will soon stop moving. We frankly confess to a daily lessening esteem for much that passes as Radicalism to-day, because it not only will not work itself, but cavils, and criticises, and turns up its nose when men in earnest take up the neglected business of the hour. Well may the world laugh at and deride the feebleness of what is only redeemed from absolute contempt by such useful work as that of the Philadelphia Club.

WE HOPE that no reader of THE INDEX will overlook the communication in this issue which we have entitled—"An Avowal of Faith in the Literal Truth of the Gospels." Rev. Jesse H. Jones, the writer, is a man of irreproachable character; and his letter is what Humboldt would have called a "psychological curiosity." He believes that "God was the infinite magnet which drew Jesus Christ up from the earth through the sky into heaven." As a pendant to Mr. Weiss's lecture on "The Bible and Science," Mr. Jones's article is exceedingly interesting reading. He narrates how he put directly to his congregation the question whether they believed in the miraculous birth of Jesus, and how the members joyfully and unanimously voted Yes! And he adds that "what was done here would, I am persuaded, be done under like circumstances in all our New England churches." As to what he intimates concerning the Free Religious Association, we are in total ignorance, and believe him to be laboring under a strange hallucination; but if he will forward the Independent's article he alludes to, with an explicit statement of what he means, we will publish both in these columns.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Isaac Rhen, President; Carrie S. Burnham, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

The Bible and Science.

AN ESSAY READ TO THE BOSTON RADICAL CLUB, JANUARY 18, 1875.

BY JOHN WEISS.

I wish to take notice of the latest argument pursued by the popular theology to protect its sacred book from scientific insinuation. It does not appear that scientific men think it worth while directly to attack those portions of the Bible which contain allusions to Nature, or to theories of the origin of things. But there is an attack that is none the less damaging because it is only implied; for it is one that is made through the silent recognition by the popular mind of scientific progress. Something must be done to recover authority for the Bible on all the topics which it treats, and to reimpose it on the people: for unless the book can make good the claim to be in all its parts of equal authority, the common people will soon learn to make it no more authoritative than their common sense may please. The leaders in this defence show no quality so striking as the power of unconscious evasion, the only one which seems to have been granted in supernatural degree to the human mind.

Dean Stanley, in his memorial sermon at the funeral of Sir Charles Lyell in Westminster Abbey, stated, with a noble fearlessness, the true relation which the Bible bears to modern investigation. It will be instructive to preserve some of his sentences. The text was the second verse of the first chapter of Genesis, and fitly introduced the theme. The sermon was, in fact, upon the religious aspect of geology. The Dean said:—

"It is well known that when the study of geology first arose it was involved in interminable schemes of reconciliation with the letter of Scripture. There were and are two modes of reconciliation which have each totally and deservedly failed. The one attempts to wrest the words of the Bible from their real meaning and force them to speak the language of science, and the other attempts to falsify science to meet the supposed requirements of the Bible. The 'Seventy' finding that the hare was described as chewing the cud inserted the word 'not'; and, on the other hand, the Jesuits in editing Newton's Principia announced in the preface that they were constrained to treat the theory of gravitation as a fictitious hypothesis, else it would conflict with the decrees of the popes against the motion of the earth. But there is another reconciliation of a higher kind, or rather not a reconciliation, but an acknowledgment of the affinity and identity which exist between the spirit of science and the spirit of the Bible. First, there is a likeness of the general spirit of the truths of science to the general spirit of the Bible truths; and secondly, there is a likeness in the methods. For instance, the geological truth which our illustrious student was the chief instrument in clearly setting forth and establishing was the doctrine, wrought out by careful, cautious inquiry in all parts of the world, that the frame of this earth was gradually brought into its present condition, not by sudden and violent convulsions, but by the slow and silent action of the same causes which we see now, but operating through a long succession of ages beyond the memory and imagination of man. There need be no question whether this doctrine agrees or not with the letter of the Bible. We do not expect it should. For, had there been no such scientific conclusions, we now know perfectly well, from our increased insight into the nature and origin of the early biblical records, that they were not and could not be literal, prosaic, matter-of-fact descriptions of the beginning of the world, of which, as of its end, no man knoweth or can conceive except by figures or parallel.

"It is now clear to all students of the Bible that the first and second chapters of Genesis contain two narratives of the creation, side by side, differing from each other in almost every particular of time and place and order. It is now known that the vast epochs demanded by scientific observation are incompatible both with the six thousand years of the Mosaic chronology and the six days of the Mosaic creation. No one now infers from the Bible that the earth is fixed, that it cannot be moved, that the sun does literally go forth as a bridegroom from his chamber, or that the stars sang with an audible voice in the dawn of the creation. But when we rise to the spirit, the ideal, the general drift and purposes of the biblical accounts, we find ourselves in an atmosphere of moral elevation which meets the highest requirements philosophy can make. The discoveries of geology are found to fill up the old religious truths with a new life, and to derive from them in turn a hallowing glory. When the historian of our planet points out that the successive layers of the earth's surface were formed by such agencies as we know of now, by the constant action of wind and wave, of floating ice and rolling stones,—that there were not separate centres of creation, but one primeval law which formed and governed all things,—what is this but the echo of those voices which of old declared that in the beginning the heaven and earth were created, not by a thousand conflicting deities, but by One supreme and indivisible, and that he hath given all things a law that shall not be broken? And we may compare the vast infinities of time and space, that long ascending order, that gradual progress demanded by geology, with the words sublime in the 90th Psalm, read at the burial service: 'A thousand years in thy sight are but yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night.'

"Surely the view of the gradual preparation of the earth for mankind is grander than that which makes him coeval with the beasts which perish, and we ought to honor the archaeologist who by unhesitating, unrelenting research revealed in all its length and breadth the genealogy and the antiquity of man and of his habitation. He rent the veil and showed the long vista in the temple of the Most High not made with hands—'Apparet domus intus, et atria longa patescunt.' Not the limitation but the amplification of the idea of God is the result of the labor of such a student, and not the descent but the ascent of man is the outcome of his speculations."

But when Dean Stanley remarks, as above, that no one now draws the old inferences from the Bible, he imputes his own generous intelligence prematurely to the modern theologian. It will be salutary to appraise the popular mind of the tenacity with which the theologians cling to the antique view, and of the adroitness they expend, with motives, no doubt, of the highest sincerity, to keep their creed still respectable in the eyes of the people. And we shall see that in this process they are unwittingly guilty of an irreverence toward their sacred book which has never been surpassed for flippant puerility.

As it becomes more probable with every year that the theory of evolution, in some form or other, will prevail in all the departments of science, the theologians who are intelligent enough to anticipate this result, and to perceive that it must be due to the general reasonableness of the theory, are beginning to exercise their ingenuity in tracing evolution back to the Bible, in order to rescue its character as a book divinely inspired, and to defend it from the charge that it contradicts the facts of science. Pretty soon it will be difficult to find an Orthodox thinker who will not claim to be a disciple of Darwin, just as we have lived to hear the old-fashioned Whigs assert that they always were original Garrisonian abolitionists.

The more thoroughly the new facts obtain control of our modern intelligence, the more imperatively summoned it will feel to make its great authoritative religious book appear to harmonize with late investigations: for if any strong discrepancy between its utterances and those of science can be proved, its character as a book of complete authority will be damaged. Admit one radical discrepancy, and where will people stop? The first step is fatal. The first concession will concede the whole claim that it is a book of plenary inspiration. As a distinguished advocate of Orthodoxy lately said: 'If God declared a way of salvation and a cosmogony, the cosmogony would be as true as the way of salvation. If there is an error in the cosmogony, the way of salvation may be rightfully discredited. A man might be imagined as making a mistake in his physics and yet being true in his moral philosophy, but a God never. If he err anywhere he is no God.' Judge by this childish utterance how badly the religious world has been scared by Prof. Tyndall.

Therefore Orthodoxy is wonderfully moved to resist the mischief in the outset, to vindicate the claim afresh, and upon ground newly broken, to preserve the book, in the interest of Orthodox schemes of religion, as a still flawless and continuous word of God, "from title-page to closing line," to snatch it from the path of the scientific scoffer who kicks its Genesis with careless foot. So that we are invited to hear it proved that the Bible is not only sound upon every point of sacrificial theology, but sound on every point of geology, of the creative method, of the gradual development of organic forms; and not only sound, but prophetic, so that Darwin and the rest, if they had only been Bible-reading men and had loved to sit where good men go to church, would have been saved years of patient toil and experiment by finding ready made for them the theory to which they have so laboriously arrived.

But it must seem wonderful to us that the theologians have so strictly kept this important knowledge to themselves. If Genesis has been Darwinian for so many thousand years why has not the Church proclaimed it? Has the civilized world just attained to a fitness to comprehend and embrace the great idea? Then why, in this fitness of time, was not the genuine gospel according to Genesis promulgated by its accredited keepers and spokesmen? It is just as bad for Orthodox assumption to have waited supinely and mute until these infidel men of science brought to light, without the aid of inspiration, the order of creation, as it is bad for it to find that the order refutes the sacred record on which Orthodoxy leans. Reticence on a point of such importance will be found more troublesome to account for by those who have so long sustained it, than any discrepancy that may appear between the record on the stone tables of the earth and the one on the page of Scripture. Orthodox men are not only called to make their choice between the two writings, but, are summoned more sternly than that, to give an account of their stewardship of a book, and to allege some reason for withholding the light of this knowledge from mankind.

But science can point to no discrepancy so great as the one which has just now declared itself between intelligence and faith, between the exigency of ideas and the constraint of tradition, between a desire to have the best mental method and a dread lest it cannot be had without the abandonment of cherished articles of belief. I fancy that the old punishment of being torn asunder by two horses was not so trying as this new torture of the mind that has truth pulling one way and superstition another. And it is a curious spectacle to which we are invited. Orthodox mutters in the ring, with lowered head and dangerous look, pestered by the agile picadores who shake the red rag of science at it, and plant their aggravating darts; while behind there waits the fatal matador of disbelief on peril of damnation. The facts are in front, the certain death behind. There is considerable excitement of a not disagreeable kind to the spectators, who, safely seated behind the barrier which the universe itself draws round them, can watch these baited souls trying to escape from a universe and rush back into the den of a book. But it is too late; the arena is wide open, and the gates are barred.

It will be instructive to notice by-and-by some of the stratagems which modern intelligence resorts to in its effort to escape. However, the difficulty is not one which peculiarly besets the modern mind. Ever since the canon of the Bible was established, its books printed and translated into the various languages of Christendom, and launched upon the tides of the human heart down the ways constructed by a scheme of salvation, the intellect of every age has found itself at variance with inherited emotions; the ignorance of every age has met the age's intellect at the sword's point; and the battle has been fought out upon some open page of the Bible. Its green meadows of morals and religion, sprinkled with the simple wild-flowers of human nature, which spring up amid the corn that yields righteous bread to man, have been selected for appointments for duels to the death between the past and the present. Every present has been obliged to bear a train, like a page, for some queen of the past, who issues from her ancestral halls to squander her smiles in proportion to the homage she receives; but the page is apt to advance so rapidly as to tread upon the train which he ought to be content to carry, and for which purpose he is kept in service; so that some affront between nature and custom is sure to occur.

No more fruitful cause of human tragedy has ever existed than this variance between intellect at rest and intellect in motion. Whoever happens to be at the point of contact is bruised and sorely treated. No passion has so often embossed history's page with the blood of heroic souls; not love itself, striving amid the fatalities of circumstance to vindicate Nature and possess its object; not ambition, throwing its shield far ahead into a sullen mob of malcontent events to fight clear through them and reclaim it, has ever more copiously endowed our sense of pathos with the bitter-sweet tears it sheds. All tragedy is the result of aversion, of irreconcilable pique and feud, between fate and wish, between love and hate, between policy and truth, between reality and tradition. Divine providence has tasted the hemlock of a Socrates many times since its creatures began to justify its own discontents. In every country, and from immemorial time, hands which have been stretched forth to bless or to defend, feet which have gone about with errands of redemption, have crumbled away from the anguish of the piercing nails; vinegar mingled with hyssop has drugged and palsied the tongues which vibrated with electric words to dispute the past, to dictate the volumes of the future. The fulfillers have been mistaken for the destroyers. It was said of Spinoza that he "spent the better part of his life in clearing his language of ambiguities," and we know that intellectual freedom was so dear to him that he refused pensions, legacies, money in many forms, and maintained himself with grinding glasses for optical instruments. Yes, he lived to make things clear, and furnish mankind with increased facilities of vision. But his contemporaries could not see him; they went right over the place where he stood, and the invisible spirit was hardly sustained against the disregard. When Galileo pried a flat and inert earth out of the page of Scripture where it lay embedded, rounded it, and set it spinning in a fair orbit to the tune of law, men looked at their Bible with dismay; an empty pit where the earth had rested on its pillars, and all around its edge were texts left as ragged as a crater;

the eccentric orb must be flattened into place again to restore the integrity of Scripture. And therestood Galileo, in the fatal nick of time, in the very spot where this readjusting process caught him, and neither God nor man could afford remorse at the spectacle. And all this happened because somebody in Joshua, exulting over a battle, said that the sun stood still until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. It must therefore previously have been in the habit of moving round a stationary earth. Now-a-days the credit of this miracle is saved at no expense except that of the common-sense of the divine, who said lately in its behalf, that, although there seems to be a slight astronomical difficulty in the case, there must have been an apparent stoppage of the sun, produced, no doubt, by refraction; at all events produced in some way, because the statement is unqualified. The same theologian will have it that the Bible recorded the fact of the asteroidal showers more than thirty centuries ago, when Deborah, singing of a battle, praises God for having pelted the enemy with meteors: "The stars in their courses fought against Sisera." He also claims divine inspiration for the text which speaks of the ant storing up its food, though it has been thought by naturalists that it only stores up its eggs; because, he says, "Col. Sykes discovered at Poonah a species of ant which regularly stores up the seeds of millet for its food in stormy weather." Wonderful scientific deity, considering the ways of that ant in India, mentioning them in confidence to Solomon, then waiting quietly for Col. Sykes. "Oh, star-eyed science, hast thou wandered there?" If such be the faculty which is sometimes called the handmaid of religion, we should prefer to see its domestic service restricted to ordinary chores. There was lately advertised a lot of paintings which are exhibited by means of a magic lantern; they represent the unconverted and converted state of man, "and are calculated to awaken the sinner and give strength to the Christian." Here is a legitimate opening for clerical enterprise; churches might be provided with apparatus to magnify their theology, and employ science in the work of saving souls. Scientific authority is also claimed for the Bible when it speaks of the ostrich's habit of abandoning its eggs; this has been denied; but "late researches have proved that the ostrich quits her eggs during the day, and abandons them altogether if there has been any intrusion upon them." Thus the text is saved to be a subsequent support to all other texts of religion, such as the Beatitudes, which cannot presumedly stand if the ostrich does not quit her eggs.

Dr. Dawson finds the doctrine of development in the first chapter of Genesis. The time which the science of geology shows to have been necessary to make the earth compels him to interpret the six creative days as six epochs; and he finds warrant for this freedom in the text which declares that a thousand years are as a day to God; the writer of the Psalm intending to have us infer that a day is many thousand. Then the doctor proceeds to force the geological succession into parallelism with the succession in Genesis. To do this he must ignore the fact that the original vaporous nebula was incandescent and luminous, for the book says that darkness was upon the face of the deep. He must slight, though he mentions, the fact that science knows nothing of a vegetation which preceded by a whole period the introduction of animals; for in the Mosaic account the land elevated above the waters is in the same creative day clothed with vegetation; and the Hebrew phrase includes not merely the lower and humbler groups of plants, but the higher phenagamous groups, having fruits and seeds, also trees as well as the herbaceous plants. But in fact land plants do not appear as fossils until a comparatively late geological period. He must ignore the fact that rain-marks have been found upon slabs of the earliest rocks which were once soft beaches of sand. The marks even indicate by the slant of the little pits made by the drops which way the wind was on that ancient day. But Genesis says that "the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth." He must ignore the fact that darkness is not an element of Nature, and that to Deity there can be no such thing as night. Yet Moses says that God divided the light from the darkness, calling the one day and the other night. He must ignore the fact that there cannot be any such object as a firmament to the Creator, whose universe, with all its moods, conditions, and objects, is comprised within himself, to whom, therefore, there can be no relation of place. He must ignore the fact that the sky was full of lights as soon as the first nebulous ocean shrank into rings and rounded into planets. Yet Genesis will have it that though light was made in the first creative day, the lights in the firmament of heaven were not made until the fourth day, and then with the object of dividing the day from the night; whereas we are told that the evening and the morning were the first day. But in a book which has lately appeared this discrepancy is turned to choice account, on the ground that the existence of light previous to sunlight could never have occurred to the unaided human reason, nor have been indulged as one of its cosmic speculations. Therefore the light of the first three days, before the lights were made, must have been a cosmic fact known only to the divine mind, and by it revealed.

But our review of the cosmogony in Genesis, as well as any speculations which we may indulge upon the original condition of the universe, are checked by the reflection that we are using the invention of language. Our finite words may not have had objects corresponding to them. The word light, for instance, denotes the impression which results from the vibrations of an æther when they touch the optic nerve. So the word sound denotes the effect of atmospheric vibrations when they play upon the row of stems in the organ of hearing. Could Deity have said or reflected, "Let there be light," before he had developed a corresponding organ? In fact the eye is the creator of the light. The ethereal vibrations travel through space, strike innumerable objects, spill over them, and are lavished upon vacuity, or die away on the absence of a shore; and nowhere do they reach the estate of light unless there be a nerve to receive their far-travelled hint, and to translate it.

"How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here we will sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears; soft stillness, and the night,
Become the touches of sweet harmony.
Sit, Jessica; look how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold;
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-cy'd cherubims;
Such harmony is in immortal souls."

And such immortal words, too, which ripple on the coast-line where creation's ocean, that had been running so long without a tune, meets at length a human lip. The passage of Shakspeare is full of words which tell how human senses have arrived upon the cosmic scene, and furnished night and day, light and music to a creator who waited to be thus companioned. And we ask, What is the condition of this universe outside of the human eye and ear? We have invented a touchable, tastable, aromatic world, and flooded it with light and sound. What was the wild state of the Creator before we caught it to domesticate? What is it now where no nerves are on its trail to obtain subsistence for five senses? There are light-vibrations and tone-vibrations, both of them pitched in too high a tenor and too deep a bass for us to hear. Do I say tenor and bass? I mean them, and intend to go for them some day; but until then they are not extant. We may say they are still at large, primeval savages of a continent unadopted yet by a Columbus. They are unformed, untutored liabilities, and will not exist till we arrive. We may well admit that the world's infinite condition is ineffable, for language is but its local and suburban echo.

But to return; Mr. Dawson must ignore the fact that God is still the creator and sustainer of the world, because, according to the Mosaic account, on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day. But it ingeniously occurs to the doctor that this is the seventh day in which we live, when we ought to have entered on his rest, and should have done so if Adam by his fall had not set us sinning, and allowed the Lord no respite.

Such is the latest attempt, not four months old, at a reconciliation of the cosmogony of the Bible with the inexorable facts of science. Were piety, truth, and morals really involved, to live or die with the first chapter of Genesis, the above result is plainly equivalent to another Fall of Man. It is at any rate a fall of the seraphic intellect into "second childishness and mere oblivion."

At the beginning of the discovery of fossils in Europe, the Orthodox naturalists declared that those objects could never have been alive, because death was not introduced into the world till after the lapse of Adam. Therefore the fossils must be sacrificed to save the texts, which the trilobites suddenly made more fossil than themselves, though it took a generation of men to see it. In the mean time, here were the fossils, rapidly accumulating in every museum to petrify the faith of the common people; and they must be accounted for. There were three most notable theories, one by De Rougemont, one by Von Raumer, and one by Gosse. The former said that although in the Mosaic account animals were created on the fifth day and man on the sixth, it was easy to suppose that the animals lived their day, and lived over till man could arrive at years of discretion, introduce sin and death into the world, and give animals the benefit of those luxuries.

Von Raumer was appalled at these fossil evidences of death, so entirely irregular and unscriptural, before it was in order for death to occur. The whole plan of salvation was in danger from this apparent looseness of dying among primeval creatures, and their want of manners in forestalling Adam, so as to infringe upon his patent of precedence. The exigency called for the strongest draft which a learned man can make upon his unconscious fatuity. So he proved that those fossil forms were not the relics of plants and animals which ever lived; they could not, therefore, have ever died. They were arrested embryos which never reached a birth, counterfeits of beings, although provided throughout with a structure which might correspond to life. This theory enjoyed a plausible currency until it was demonstrated that the plants were found in all their various stages of bud, blossoming, and fruit; and the stomachs of fishes and reptiles still contained the half-digested matter of their last meal. Specimens were found which indicated every stage of life from youth to maturity, and snails and muscles whose shells, describing those convolutions which result from growth, described also when the growth had ceased.

But Gosse, undaunted at these difficulties, resolved to employ his reason and secure the safety of a book; so he proposed the idea that these fossils which mark unmeasured periods of time were the prelusions of Nature, who meditated live creatures, and conned them over to herself by means of these clay models, as a sculptor works towards his breathing image by setting up crude lumps and slowly moulding them toward his thought. These dead specimens, left lying around in Nature's workshop, show how she meant to finally attain to the felicity of a living creature; but they were merely studies looking toward the consummation of a being who might become capable of developing into a tendency to introduce wickedness and death to the glory of God. Such are the shifts of intelligence under the imposition of a widely spread opinion that a Bible cannot err. Is it not something pathetic that these men sincerely imagined that they were using their reason in behalf of theories which have been found irrational? Let us pass, without further comment, for we may do the same.

The latest discoveries of relics of human life in the ancient caves which have been covered up by more recent deposits, have destroyed the Biblical chronology of the human race. Those implements of stone, those rudely carved plates of ivory, with scratchings of mammoth hunts, those bones of animals split longitudinally for their marrow, those hearths whose extinguished coals sparkle with notices of human life, those occasional skulls and skeletons of men that are found in places where no accidents of the modern period could have deposited them, are very afflicting to believers in the ordinary chronology. I heard of a distinguished mathematician, well known and esteemed by the best minds in America, who was much impressed by all these facts, and gave them the tribute of his conviction. But then the necessity occurred to him of making the conclusions harmonize with the Bible. Failure to do that was "the great doom's image" to his mind. So he seized upon the fact that plenty of celts, ornaments, and bones of animals have been discovered in the caves, but only one or two doubtful traces of the bones of men. Why not? Ah, there was the point; and a bright idea occurred to him, as he explained it to a friend, that he had hitherto thought that the rising of dead people at the time of the crucifixion was only local; that only those in the vicinity of Jerusalem came out of their graves. But he was now convinced that it had been a universal resurrection, including all bodies and skeletons of people who had died up to that time! Hence the absence of bones in the primeval caves, and the compatibility of this absence with the great antiquity of man! It seems to me that a person who is inspired by the vulgarest motive of unbelief might invent something like this to belittle that sublime sacrifice of a holy man. The irony of infidelity can be matched only by the irony of superstition.

This event of the crucifixion reminds me that a distinguished leader of the Reformed Protestant Episcopal Church sees a miracle in the account that the veil of the Temple was rent from top to bottom; man, he says, might have rent it from bottom to top, but only Deity could have got a purchase on the veil at the top. Is it possible that the reverend doctor, from his own point of view, can see no irreverence in this? And who, let us ask, is the more reverent person, the one who sets up such a ridiculous defence of miracle, or the one who exposes the defence to ridicule?

I have heard of another Episcopal clergyman who became profoundly convinced that some theory of Evolution must be true, after reading Darwin, Huxley, and the rest. And it occurred to him, too, that it would never do not to find the Bible in harmony. So he ingeniously made it out that the modern doctrine was clearly foreshadowed and implied in the following verses of a Psalm: "My substance was not hid from thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them;" and he proposed to translate the original Hebrew thus: "My protoplasm was not hidden from Thee, when, while still undeveloped, I floated on the old Silurian Sea, a fringed and embroidered jelly-fish (Hebrew for 'curiously wrought'); thine eyes did see my sarcode, still unevolved; but in this germ all my members lay involved, so fashioned as to pass through continuance of evolution, while as yet there were none of them." Could King David have known of this, I doubt if he would have been content to cut off only the skirt of this Saul among the prophets.

The same gentleman informed a friend that the Hebrew word which is usually translated, naked, meant also hairy. So that the verse in Genesis: "And they were both naked, the man and his wife," should be Darwinized thus: "And they were both hairy, that is, anthropoid apes, and were not ashamed of it."

But enough of this. We are ashamed of it. How the Bible bursts the green withes of this criticism, like a mighty Samson, and slays the Philistine with his own jaw-bone! How we hurry to escape with the grand old book into its own landscapes of beauty, to consider the lilies in its meadows, to listen among its mountains to thunder that seems stricken with some distant awe; to go into its wildernesses and eat wild honey with the forerunners of righteousness; to claim under the shadows of its olive-trees the hand of a brother; to sit with Saul where David's harp can soothe us, or hang up our own by the willows of Babylon and hear them prolong the sighs of a dispersed people; to be smitten on the Temple-steps with the great antiphonies of the Levite's Psalm; to quiver in the denouncing breath of Isaiah's trumpet, and share his own dread of iniquity; to dance to Miriam's timbrel; to glean with Ruth, "amid the alien corn"; "to sit a guest with Daniel at his pulse"; to weep among the dolorous women; to share the visions of the haunted night with Job; to divide our oil with David, and hold his lamp as we go deep into the mystery of God's presence; and to find through all the moods and climates of the books everywhere pure nature that is so divine by being so human; to be so thrilled, as with the delight of a lover, at the touches of a kindred heart, compact with the fibres of our own emotion, our conscience, our piety. Nothing but simple human nature, in a rapture of abandonment to its own best impulses, could have bequeathed those books to successive generations of its own breed. Anything that is distinct from the function and capacity of the human soul, any intruding supernature, would have hushed this sweet prattle of childhood and dispersed it; would have flayed this virility of righteousness and hurt its simplicity; would have turned this aspiration into ventriloquism; would have spoiled this awe with self-consciousness; would have made this piety the babbling echo of an unseen speaker. And nothing but this same human nature, set loose upon the earth with its capacity for wonder still untamed, and its tendency to search for causes still unexercised, could have dashed the flavor of mystery and legend through those pages, pretending that seas divide, that the sun puts back his dial, that trumpets rend battlements asunder, that the Nile runs blood, that the dead are raised and sit by hearths again. We would not manipulate a verse of it, nor expunge a line. Would we make an expurgated edition of the Arabian Nights; would we lift a finger against the saintly legend of the Holy Grail; would we grind up the marble gods of Greece for lime, deface the frieze of the Parthenon, send a newspaper man to interview the Sybil, or put a constable on the track of Ariel, and bid the fairy revellers of every age disperse? If the Bible did not contain the element of fable, I should suspect it. Youth cannot exist except on terms which the fancy dictates; and maturity cannot cure the children of the past or of the present of their dear delusions. Let them weave nests amid the budding branches of Maytime, and rear their wondrous brood.

It is torture to see these modern adapters at their work upon the cosmogonies and artless narratives of the old book, knowing that their dread is lest religion should come to grief, and that men should cease to worship in their Church. Can religion ever come to grief? Yes, when love can, the indestructible instinct of men and women, the perpetual sacrament of creation, the continuous resurrection of our human life. Yet these men affect to believe that the spiritual function of mankind depends upon their success in tinkering a cosmogony, and putting the Bible poetry ridiculously upon Darwinian stilts.

So long as a great Unknown is the womb of man, who emerges upon this little earth, and salutes its air with a feeble cry that soon becomes stouter and fuller with all the cries against injustice, evil and deformity which follow the sun around our upper and our nether world, while hymns which belong to the star-promise of the night temper them; so long as the man inhales this breath of time, and foresees another Unknown waiting to deprive him of it, Religion will be a great deal safer with us than the book of Genesis will be. For this migrating soul knows the cardinal points, and finds a compass-flower in every desert.

When the men who reel out the Atlantic cable lose it overboard in a gale of wind, a calculation depending on the heavenly bodies marks upon paper the spot where it fell through the ocean and left no dint. After the bad weather has subsided, the ship returns at her leisure, and pauses with unerring directness, on this waste of water, as if a stake marked the spot; and the truant is reclaimed. What a dramatic action of the mind this is!

The Soul makes a voyage to connect two shores, perpetually applying her electric test. She is often delayed by the bad weather of this world, and the clue is rudely snatched from her grasp. The loss inflicts a scar, but not upon an oblivious surface. What, then, is her resource? Hopelessly would she recall tradition, or summon the obsolete methods of another age; its books she need not consult, nor figure with her compasses upon imperfect charts. "By the sole bearing of a visible star," her immortal instinct recovers the lost thread and completes communication.

PROFESSIONAL JUDGMENTS.

A MEMORIAL SPOKEN AT THE BRYANT COMMEMORATIVE SERVICE, WEDNESDAY, APRIL, 28, 1875.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

I have been kindly invited to say a few words on this memorial occasion. Kindly invited I say; for in my regard it is a kindness to intrust a clergyman with such a service. It is not often that actors ask favors of preachers. It is not often that preachers offer favors to actors. The jealousy between them is old and bitter. They have dealt each other hard blows. On the whole, it is probable that actors have suffered more at the hands of preachers than preachers have at the hands of actors. Therefore the kindness on this occasion is the greater.

I am not asked to make an address; that, even if time allowed, would on such an occasion be out of season. A eulogy would not be in place, for the man who is dead was unknown to me. I never saw him except in his own theatre where, it is to be hoped, he did not look like the man he was. In reading the eulogies in the papers since his decease, I have wondered whether the testimony to his virtues was more strictly accurate than such testimony commonly is; but it was no concern of mine to raise questions, and it is now no concern of mine to suggest misgivings. I am better acquainted with my own sins than I am with his; so well acquainted, indeed, that even if I had a stone to throw, as I have not, there would not be in me the heart to throw it.

Certainly the last thought that could occur to me is the thought of bringing up against him the profession he belonged to. That profession is a very ancient one, and has, in ages in some respects nobler than our own, been cultivated by the greatest minds, and honored by the best. It has even been considered sacred; has been taken under the patronage of priests, and employed by them to commend high truth and impress important lessons on mankind.

There have been times when precisely such men as our deceased humorist would have been welcomed by ministers of religion, and valued for his power to move the popular heart to mirth. In all ages his calling has numbered among its professors a fair proportion of talented, refined, able, and excellent men and women; its fair proportion of geniuses and exemplars in virtue. All are not such; but all are not such anywhere. What calling includes in its membership none but saints? What calling does not include in its membership for the most part sinners? Every profession has its characteristic virtues and its characteristic vices. The theatrical profession has its share of the former; the clerical profession has its share of the latter. I am too deeply sensible of the failures of my own brotherhood to care to imagine what may be the failings of a brotherhood in which I have no part, and which, in some respects, stands at an opposite extreme to my own.

Standing on this stage, surrounded by men and women who have made the theatrical profession the study of their lives, and who have devoted to it an amount of energy, thought, and talent that would be acknowledged as brilliant in any other field of effort, haunted by the memory of a man whose name has been in all mouths, spoken in connection with innocent mirth, I seem to hear a voice that says: Let no individual, sect, or calling, judge another from the outside. "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man that is in him?" What profession knoweth the things of a profession, save the spirit of the profession which is in those that practise it? The clergyman complains of the criticism made on him by men of the world, who do not understand the conditions or penetrate the hidden motives of his calling. The lawyer complains of the fault-finding that preachers indulge in who, from the nature of the case, cannot comprehend the advocate's position. The physician complains of the coarse innuendoes that are flung at him by the mocking crowd whose diseases he has tried, but unsuccessfully, to alleviate. The merchant complains of the arbitrary censorship of the ideal moralist. Why should not the actor be justified in complaining of the judgment pronounced on him by people who, absolutely ignorant of the laws of his profession, its capacities, its limitations, the rules to which it must conform, and the conditions within which it must be exercised, hold it up to censure or to ridicule?

What is there in the profession, in any of its legitimate aspects, whether exhibited in the stately edifice that bears the respected name of Edwin Booth, or in the more modest temple, on the same street which is affectionately associated with Dan Bryant, that ought to subject it to animadversion or contempt, and fasten a suspicion of immorality upon all its members?

Shall we say with Rousseau, who said it most eloquently to our modern world, that the profession in its very nature implies insincerity; that its inmost heart is pretence; that the actor is one whose whole business is to seem what he is not, to wear robes that do not belong to him, to utter fine sentiments that are not his own, and simulate qualities to which nothing in his character responds?—an unreal person, living in an unreal world, devoted to an unreal pursuit, and encouraging the principle of sham which is altogether dishonorable in itself, and demoralizing to society? That is a matter the actor must answer for to himself. For the rest, are not all professions open to the same censure? Can the lawyer endure to be tried by the ideal standards of justice that he glorifies in the court room? Does not the preacher habitually preach above his own living, and pray above his own aspiring? Of the actor this much at least may be said, that he never pretends to be what he seems. He leaves his dress in the theatre, and claims no credit for the sentiments he has enunciated, or the qualities he has represented on the boards. He wears no mask on the street. Because he plays Joseph Surface, it is not to be inferred that he is a Joseph Surface. The Shaughraun is not found outside of the play-house. It is only in the drama that the particular Col. Sellers blows his radiant bubbles; it is only in the drama that Rip Van Winkle is a sot and a simpleton—that Kinchella is a ruffian, and Pistol a humbug. The people who live their lies are the demoralizing people who, at bedtime, hang their lies up in a wardrobe, and in the day are not ashamed to be known for what they are.

That the profession to which our brother belonged is beset with temptations and dangers peculiar to itself, need not be said. What profession is not? Twenty years ago a man very eminent in my own profession—as eminent for piety and humanity as for learning and eloquence—said to me, with tears in his eyes: "Frothingham, ours is a perilous profession." I have since learned but too well the truth of the words. But to say this feelingly is one thing; to say that the temptations are for the most part succumbed to, that the dangers are commonly neither resisted nor avoided, is a very different thing. To say that is to say what is not, what cannot, be true; for if it were, all professions would be rotten at the core, and society would come to an end.

Let me be pardoned for insisting so much on this point. We all feel, do we not, that it is vital; that it is the point of justice? For my own part, I am constrained to say that the average judgment on actors and actresses is unjustified and unjustifiable. My acquaintance with these people is not extensive or close; but I am happy to testify in my own place, and out of it, to qualities among them of delicate consideration and unselfish generosity, such as are nowhere too common, such as are everywhere beautiful and precious. Indeed, generosity, good-heartedness, compassion towards the unfortunate, sympathy with the suffering, seem to be at once a strong and a weak point of the profession.

The man whom we commemorate here, and for the benefit of whose family all the theatres will to-morrow conspire in loving service, brought himself, I believe, by his kind-heartedness to the pass of needing this bounty. A "whole-souled," warm-natured man, with an open, friendly hand that could not shut even upon hard-earned money which, at the moment, a comrade needed more than he. There are greater virtues than generosity, but none are more winning. None make their possessor more beloved in fortune, in misfortune more pitied. It would be pleasant to think that I had ever done him as much good as he has done me. He was a benefactor in his way; and it was a very much needed way. In a world full of care, anxiety, depression of spirits and bitterness of heart, who has a right to be called a benefactor, if he has not who promotes harmless merriment? Nightly the people flocked to the pretty little theatre on Twenty-third Street; nightly the tears of mirth rolled down their cheeks, and side-shaking laughter "cleansed the stuffed bosom of that perilous stuff that weighs upon the heart." The mirth had no sting in it; none came away loving his neighbor less, or feeling less sweetly toward the Providence that appointed his lot. Long after the evening was passed, the cheer it had awakened revived and stimulated. Thousands never thought of him without a joyous emotion. Thousands will continue to think of him with gratitude—as of one who changed life's frown into smiles.

At the first performance of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" in Munich, Madame Lebrun sang the part of Donna Elvira with such pathos that the composer thanked her for interpreting to him his own song. That night the great singer, while kneeling at her devotions, burst a vessel in her over-charged heart, and died. On hearing in the morning of the death of the woman whose voice he felt had lifted up so high the note of his own flame, Mozart said: "The angels needed one voice more to interpret the Creator's Works." The songs of the dead minstrel were not of that seraphic quality. Mortals needed them more than immortals. Their music was "the still sad music of humanity," which touches and should touch us more than any strains from heaven.—Golden Age.

STATE AND CHURCH IN GERMANY.

A PAPER READ AT THE CONVENTION OF THE AMERICAN SOCIAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION, DETROIT, MAY 11.

BY DAVID A. WASSON.

During the great debate of March 5, 1874, in the Austrian Parliament, the chief orator of the Ultramontanes talked continually of the "Apostolic Empire," which the heathenish modern State was seeking to supplant. In that phrase lay the whole secret of the Ultramontane creed. According to this, the Church is not simply nor characteristically a system of faith and worship, but an empire; a system of despotic government, supernatural in origin, having supernaturally authorized officers, and sustained supernaturally. The imperial head is a sacerdotal Caesar, more absolute in power than the Roman Augustus ever was, or any successor of Augustus. The bishops are prefects or satraps ruling absolutely in their dioceses save as subject to the Papal Shah; the parochial clergy are local magistrates, ruling also in their degree; the laity are subjects pure and simple, bound to obey implicitly in thought, in conscience, and in deed the "divine" authority set over them. The idea of religion, it is seen, disappears in that of government. Everything turns upon the acquisitive exercise of power. In the latter half of the eighteenth century the imperial pretensions of Rome had become little more than a reminiscence. Of all men in the world, those of '93 were to be the restorers of priestly imperialism. Robespierre did for Rome what Loyola, what the Society of Jesus, had been unable to accomplish—a lesson for all radicals and reformers. The wild, terrible years of overturn, war, conquest, and carnage wrought a total transformation in the temper of Europe. The outcast priesthood won sympathy by their sufferings, and were hardened in the school of affliction. The people harassed, beggared, decimated, lost hope in this world, and fled for a refuge from despair to the consolations of religion. Governments and statesmen, inspired with a supreme horror of revolution, saw its source in Jacobin unbelief, and security for the future only in a new "Union of Throne and Altar." So on all sides, in all ranks—here from a simple, impassioned impulse of religion, there from motives of class-interest or of political prudence,—there was a turning of eyes and desires to the Church. Meanwhile toward the Pope personally there was a new sentiment. He had been a brother in affliction, deprived of his lands, led captive from Italy, five years a prisoner, while as head of the Church he necessarily possessed a yet greater one, and the greatest of all possible virtues, that of being immutably conservative. What weighed even in Protestant eyes a small matter of theology against those supreme recommendations? Protestants could not zealously enough show that it weighed nothing. So Niebuhr was as zealous for Rome as a modern ultramontane, and utterly scorned all precautions against its power. And thus it came to pass that in 1814 Pius VII. returned in triumph to the Holy City, amid such a chorus of blessings as the divided confessions of Europe had scarce ever united in before.

It soon appeared that another spirit had come back with him. He had had his lesson, and had learned from it—to profit or otherwise. Among his very earliest exercises of power were the restoration of the Inquisition and of the index office, designed for the suppression of all knowledge not favorable to the doctrine and dignity of Rome. But before these, and his very first act, stood another, which told trumpet-tongued how the tide had turned. It was the reconstitution of the order of Jesuits after a dissolution of forty-one years. These restless agitators, these apostles of governing religion, these ever steadfast champions of the sacerdotal empire, were to be set again at work. It signified much. Against this ominous act Catholic Portugal, alone of all the powers, protested; the Protestant powers one and all looking on serene. But there were eminent Catholics who saw in it a sure prognostic of evil, and raised their voices in emphatic remonstrance. Wessenberg was one of them. "If," he wrote Metternich, "the order should gain a foothold in Germany, a long and violent contest of light with darkness may be foreseen, a contest that will be alike dangerous to the peace of the Church and the tranquillity of the State." The order did gain a foothold in Germany, and the prophecy has been fulfilled to the letter.

Another spirit had come, the Apostolic Empire was in the air. Everything favored the new turn. Those of the clergy whose culture dated from before the revolution, and who were often men of liberal sentiments, were already old; and, as they yielded to years, young men stepped into their places, who were children of the anti-revolutionary passion, not seldom of very imperfect culture, and bred in a period when minds were singularly concentrated upon the one thought of Force. To such men the new or newly revived religion of Empire was peculiarly congenial; and as their numbers grew, and as they began to feel one another by sympathetic contact, the set toward sacerdotal imperialism became strong. Succeeding revolutions of 1830 and 1848 brought new waves of reaction, upon whose crests this spirit rode. Then came a young doctrinaire liberalism to lend it slow phrases and play unwittingly into its hand. . . . Quickly after 1815, in the height of the reaction, the States of Germany—Bavaria, Hanover, Prussia, and the Upper Rhine Province, comprising Würtemberg, Baden, and a dozen more—entered into negotiations with Rome, with a view to a better establishment of the Catholic Church within their borders, and an amicable adjustment of their several relations with it. Protestant powers, mostly, they were eager to put the Church on a good footing, and expected at first to be met by the Curia with some recognition of their handsome intentions. Those expectations were quickly dissipated. They encountered at Rome a spirit which surprised and perplexed them. Genotta, the ambassador of Würtemberg, speedily remarked that the other party to the negotiation seemed vastly less intent upon "the interests of religion" in Germany than upon the interests of power in the Vatican. . . . Nevertheless, Prussia and the Pope came to an amicable understanding. Their affair was arranged without limit of time to the immediate satisfaction of both parties. In truth, Prussia purchased the agreement with a price. The Church, at that time, shattered and impoverished by the long years of war and revolution, was disordered, destitute, in distress. The Prussian government offered to restore and provide for it liberally on condition, first, that only such men should in future be chosen bishops as should be to itself acceptable; secondly, that all else should be passed by the Pope in silence, and Prussia be left to exercise at discretion all the powers with respect to the Church which were then in use. The terms were taken, and as the result the government of Prussia remained in unchallenged possession of rights and powers much more extensive than are embodied in those recent laws against which such a deluge of denunciation is poured out. For sixteen years, from 1821 to 1837, all that is now cried out upon as a barbarous, unheard-of assumption of civil supremacy over the Church of God was in use with free consent of a Pope—of a reactionary Pope, too,—and without one suggestion of protest or dissatisfaction on the part of his successors. Then came the Constitution of 1850, supported by the Liberals, which guaranteed what is called the "freedom of the Church." This phrase being the best weapon Romanism has acquired during the century, it merits a careful scrutiny. All just freedom of individuals is limited as subject to the restraints of law. The rightful liberty of each man, it is everywhere said, is founded by the like rightful liberty of every other, as by duty to the nation, and by obligation to support all that system of public order without which civilization could not exist. A liberty which rejects these limits is that of the thief, the swindler, the murderer. Now, that is the freedom which the Church demands in Germany—precisely this immunity from the restraints of civil law. It is to be absolutely independent of the State, and urges its freedom distinctly as against civil obligation.

What is the state of mind which can find in such laws a "barbarous persecution of the Church"? Surely it is one against which legal precautions are needed. . . . It is quite true that Prussia is in direct contradiction with the Roman Church—for the reason that modern civilization itself is so. Just at the points where modern civilization, or any State representing it, must maintain freedom, just there Rome must imperiously demand subjection. Freedom of religion, of intellect, of personal conscience, of science, research, discussion, communication of thought and knowledge—the State is barbarous which does not sustain these liberties yet that one which does sustain them is under the condemnation of Rome. The State, again, cannot undertake its proper functions, as having charge of the public order and welfare, without being from the same side declared a trespasser. It necessarily assumes authority in regard to marriage, but is imperiously warned off. "Civil marriage," Rome says, "is concubinage," while the Catholic Professor Stolz of Freiburg gently terms it "a sacrament of the devil." It undertakes a systematic education of the people, and again is warned off. "The school is an appanage of the Church." It offers equal and impartial protection to its citizens, without distinction of class, creed, or profession; and is met once more with the awful gesture of prohibition. There are classes of citizens—Catholic priests, professors in Catholic universities, teachers in Catholic schools, etc.—to whom, as against their ecclesiastical superiors, the State shall offer no protection. We are not here imagining cases, but touching upon actual points of collision in Germany. The contradiction exists, and is unextinguishable. Rome, however, that has seldom been wanting in craft, knows where to conceal and gloss it over, as in England and America; and where, as in Prussia, to insist upon it, and force a quarrel under pretence—for such is ever its strategy—of being itself invaded and assailed. Which of the two courses it will take in a given case depends upon the advice received. If the bishops of a country report that they are doing well under cover, but dare not as yet take the field openly, they are left under cover; if they report, on the contrary, that they are strong enough for open conflict, the conflict comes—always under the pretence that the Church is persecuted. And so it has come in Germany.

What is the result to be there? It will be asked. But who can tell? Who dares predict with confidence any immediate future? History is a series of surprises, especially in the complicated politics of Europe, so much may come or not come. Germany stands there alone, the one Protestant power, to be named a power, upon the Continent—stands resolute, asking peace, but a nation armed with lightnings, if lightened it must; yet combinations against her might be formed—and it will not be the fault of Ultramontanism if they are not formed—that would terribly test her strength. This, however, may be said: Rome as yet in direct struggle with Prussia makes simply no headway. It beats against the rights and liberties of the State, like a storm-driven sea against a shore-wall of mountain rock, with many a wild rush and thunderous shock that seem for a moment to crush all before them; yet ever as the blinding spray falls, the rock-firm State is there unshaken—it is the Roman billow which has broken in fury and foam. We have reason to hope that the barrier will still remain when the Ultramontane tempest shall have blown itself out, and that calm have come which will be at once the peace of Catholic religion and the liberty of modern civilization, to find its way and do its work without encountering at every step the warring pretensions of "the Apostolic Empire."—New York Tribune, May 12.

A LAY CATHOLIC ON THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

The importance of the school question, and present revival of the subject, makes me think that the experience I have had may interest such of your readers as give any thought to educational matters. My family is Catholic; and the head of it, possessing and knowing the advantages of education, quite naturally desired his son to be equally equipped for the journey of life. When we came to this city, eighteen or twenty years ago, one of the first things done was to enter the writer in public school number 5. I was then about eight years of age. At that time the only Catholic school in what is now the cathedral parish was held in the basement of St. Patrick's Church on the site of the present cathedral. The reputation of this school was not good, all ages being huddled in one room, and the principal, through fondness for the bottle, giving his pupils but an ill example. Even at that time the sectarian point was in argument, and Catholics were threatened with eternal woe who sent their children to the "godless" schools.

The Catholics were indeed in a dilemma. If they obeyed their spiritual superiors and sent their boys to "old M—n," they would have a tutor whose life was anything but exemplary; and if in defiance of ecclesiastical authority the boys were sent to the public school, anathemas were incurred from their own sect, while at school the children were taught prayers of Protestant composition, evangelical hymns, and directed in the way of salvation from a version of the Bible that all good Catholics repudiate and believe false. At the period I speak of it was the rule to kneel down to prayer in the public schools, and I distinctly remember compounding with my Catholic conscience, when kneeling to Protestant prayers, by sticking pins in my young comrades! It was a bad thing for me that the State authorities compelled me to sing their trashy hymns, and kneel to prayers I was taught to despise. If the schools had been totally "godless," I think I could thank the State of New York for a good education; for I had abundance of religious instruction at home, and I have no doubt that, if the State had not winked at the proselyting efforts of the school board, I would now know a great deal more than I do in secular matters, and be a not less worthy son of the Church. But the bigots on either side wrought me evil, and I was finally taken from number 5 under pretence that the railroad made it dangerous, and in truth it was dangerous, for two or three boys lost legs, one was killed, and I escaped decapitation by an ace, all within a few months!

When I was taken from number 5, I went to the school under the church, where a decent but simple old man had succeeded the former teacher; but it was still a poor excuse for a school. Children six or eight years old were mingled among hardened devils of twenty, proficient in every vice. Oh, it was a rare school! A deaf mute used to attend, and I have often seen him soundly thrashed because he could not pronounce A, B, C. One day "the bad boy" of the school was caught in some unusual deviltry, and was brought before the teacher, who in vain exhorted him to repentance and amendment. The culprit was contumacious; and the old man, after exhausting his rhetoric to no purpose, turned in despair and horror to those who held the sinner, and exclaimed, "Take him away, take him away, he's possessed."

The absurdity of educating young people in such a place at last forced itself on the Catholics, and St. Patrick's Academy was built, and the Christian brothers given charge of it. If prayers without number and ceaseless inculcation of religious duty be agreeable to Heaven, this was certainly a godly school. When exercises began in the morning we knelt down and prayed for twenty minutes by the clock; classes were then heard, and at every quarter of an hour a gong sounded and a monitor called out, "Let us remember that we are in the holy presence of God." Then followed a momentary pause to carry out the injunction, and work was again resumed. At every hour a prayer of a few minutes duration was said, and before dismissing school at noon we prayed ten or fifteen minutes. In the afternoon we had religious exercises at the same intervals as in the morning, and at half-past 3 all secular studies were stopped and catechism was taught for half an hour. The above was the daily routine on week days; and on Sundays we had to go to church twice, and listen to religious instruction in the school for about two hours. We were also required to receive the sacraments of penance and eucharist (the latter I believe is called the Lord's Supper by Protestants) every six weeks. Scarcely any one would call such a school godless, and in a common way of thinking one would expect a marked improvement in its graduates over those of less religious institutions. The facts as far as my observation goes do not support the notion. On the contrary, among those of my acquaintance who have least respect for religion, if not morality, are graduates of St. Patrick's Academy, who went through all its drill. The deductions I draw from the foregoing facts are that the ecclesiastics of the Catholic Church are less anxious to have the children of their flock learned in worldly wisdom than in matters of faith. They believe in a literal acceptance of the saying, "Seek first the kingdom of God, and all things will be added to you." But when they do control the whole education of the young, the results are not so much better as to be noticeable. On the other side the public schools have been and are unfairly conducted as against the Catholics; their beliefs are openly or covertly attacked in text-books that have no right to be used in schools supported in part by the money of Catholics. The Catholic body is not fairly represented among the teachers of the public schools. For instance, there is not one Catholic principal in the twenty schools of this city. It is not in human nature to love such a system, nor can an unprejudiced person blame their warfare against such palpable oppression. I presume the extremists on neither side will regard my views as of any weight, but I do not doubt that many on both sides will concur with me in saying that, if the public school system is to survive, all just ground of complaint against it by lay Catholics must be eliminated. I say Catholics, because no Protestant sect to my knowledge has ever complained of the schools on religious grounds; and if the schools were purely secular most Catholics, who are not without sense, would see the folly of supporting a separate and costly system merely to teach certain doctrines that for all practical purposes can be learned well enough before and after school and on Sundays. PEDRO.

—Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle, Mch. 24.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

WAIFS.

BY S. H. MORSE.

Gird thee, gird thee, soldier strong!
Gird thee with the hate of wrong,—
Gird thee with a love that smites
Down the hate of him who fights!
Victory be his as thine,
Soldier strong, whose face doth shine!
Erring world, sweet Charity
Vileth all thy sins that be:
She forgives e'en darkest crime,
She, with vision reaching far,
Sees the land whose glories are
Fair fulfillments of all time.
God wists not to hear thee pray,
When thou'st somewhat wise to say;
Finite wisdom blocks the way.
Better far thou speak'st no word—
Only let thy heart be heard.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 22.

H. J. Fosnot, 10 cents; C. H. Peirce, $10; H. L. Green, $2; A. Williams & Co., $3.72; B. C. Ward, $2.15; F. G. Johnson, $1.50; S. S. Bliz, $5; B. Hallowell, $1.6; Mary Adair, 25 cents; Geo. H. Briggs, $5; Jas. W. Goodrich, $5; T. H. Buchanan, $5; K. T. Briggs, $5; W. E. Darling, $5; J. T. Clarkson, $5; E. B. McKenzie, $3.25; W. W. Sharpe, $1.50; J. Dunn, 50 cents; W. L. Heberling, $2.60; Miss Chase, $1.60; A. Morrison, $5; Jos. Bartman, 30 cents; Winthrop Butler, $3.20; Asa Peirce, $3; Chas. Oesting, $6; Jereh Swift, Jr., $3; Jas. N. Clark, $3.20; J. W. Reyeroft, $3; W. E. Boardman, $3.20; Geo. B. Young, $3.20; Maggie Dickey, $3.20; Birney Mann, $3.20; Henry Pratt, $3.20; J. E. Follett, $6; F. W. Hackett, $3.20; G. H. Bixby, $3.20; J. H. Senter, $3.20; C. L. Palmer, $3.20; J. T. Frey, $6.20; Frank Lessman, 75 cents; Louis Haefel, $3.20; L. J. Doyle, $3.20; L. Lombard, $3.20; L. Adams, $1.20; W. H. Boughton, $3; Lady Caroline Maxse, $5.64; N. K. Chalteeja, $3.47; Chas. Hazeltine, $1.60; Hugh McHugh, $1.60; C. Wilhelmus, $3; Mary Shapton, $6.40; Mrs. Lucius Booth, Sen., $3.60; Hugh Calderwood, $3.25; C. H. Green, $1.60; L. H. Stockbridge, 75 cents; B. A. Ballou, $4.20; J. C. Dexter, $3.20; E. F. Ring, $4.40; J. H. Deering, $3.20; Thos. Smith, $3.20; Jas. Blinn, $3.20; Thos. Dana, 2d, $3.45; Marion Mc. G. Noyes, $3.20; Ed. Whicher, $3.20; Tiffany Brockway, $2.25; Giles H. Adams, $3.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 27, 1875.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No writer in THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
ABRAM WALTER STEVENS, Associate Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
RICHARD P. HALLOWELL, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E.
D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOYSEY (England), Prof. FRAN-
CIS W. NEWMAN (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE
(England), Editorial Contributors.

NOTICE.

The Fourth Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held in Toledo, Ohio, at No. 35 Monroe Street, on Saturday, June 5, 1875, at 2 o'clock P. M., in accordance with the articles of incorporation.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The eighth annual meeting of the Free Religious Association will be held in Boston as follows:—

May 27th, 7½ P. M. Session in Horticultural Hall (Lower) for business and for free discussion on the objects and work of the Association.

May 28th. Two sessions in Beethoven Hall (Washington Street, near Boylston), at 10 A. M. and 3 P. M. for essays and addresses. Essay at the morning session, by Wm. C. Gannett, on "Present Constructive Forces in Religion."

Essay at the afternoon session, by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion."

Addresses are expected at some one of the sessions from O. B. Frothingham, T. W. Higginson, Charles G. Ames, Miss Mary F. Eastman, M. J. Savage, E. W. Mundy, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and (probably) Prof. Edward S. Morse.

Friday evening, May 28th, there will be a social festival in Parker Memorial Hall, Berkeley Street, for brief speeches, music, refreshments, conversation, and for subscription to the funds of the Association.

It is hoped that as many of the members and friends of the Association as possible will be present at this annual meeting. Members who cannot be present are hereby reminded of the annual subscription fee, which it is desired they should send to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

BISHOP HAVEN, of Georgia, said at Springfield that "when the war broke out, the South was one vast house of ill-fame, so far as men were concerned, with but solitary exceptions."

MR. AXON, an English statistician, calculates that, in the year 2000, the British Isles will be inhabited by a population of 91,000,000, and the United States by a population of 546,000,000. What a jam there will be!

THE Golden Age is a little rusty in its knowledge of the classics. It says that "Free Religion sprung out of its [Boston's] thinking as Juno came from the brain of Jove." We have heard such a story of Minerva; but, if Juno was thus born, it must have been her "second birth."

THE SIXTH Annual Convention of the Boston Eight Hour League will be held in Wesleyan Hall, in this city, on May 28, beginning at 10:30 A. M. Addresses will be made by George E. McNeill, E. M. Chamberlin, E. R. Place, Henry Sevey, and others, and papers read by F. A. Hinckley and Ira Steward.

THE Christian Union of May 5 mentions "Herren, Behm and Wagner, the German statisticians," as if they constituted a trio! We are not intimately acquainted with the gentlemen, but suspect they only count up two. If the Union had introduced to an admiring public "Messrs. Beecher and Johnson" as an editorial trinity, we imagine that the analogy would be complete. The "German statisticians" should pass a vote of thanks to the Union for the Mr. Messrs whom it has added to their distinguished company. They certainly "owe it one."

THE OATH.

Nothing is more surprising than the manner in which Christendom professes to obey the precepts of Jesus, and yet is guilty of gross violations of them,—not merely as occasional sins which it repents and repudiates (for these would excite no surprise), but also as deliberate contradictions, incorporated in laws and institutions, of his most emphatic and explicit injunctions. The ethical doctrine he lays down respecting non-resistance, divorce, and so forth, is set aside totally in the legislation and constant practice of the nations which are currently classed as Christian; yet even the vast majority of Christian ministers and Christian church-members consider it vulgar fanaticism to point out these grave discrepancies between profession and practice, and especially to insist on conforming the latter to the former. It has been a purpose of ours for several years, which perhaps may yet be executed at some future time, to codify the ethical teachings of the gospels just as they stand, to compare the moral code thus drawn up with that embodied in the general jurisprudence of Christendom, and to point out how utterly at variance are the theoretical morality preached in the pulpits and the practical morality enforced by the courts. It would be a most instructive comparison, and would open the eyes of every intelligent person to the ineffable absurdity of supposing that so-called Christian nations pay more than a nominal homage to the system of morals which is attributed to Jesus in the New Testament. No better service could be rendered to the cause of Free Religion than to make this comparison thoroughly, methodically, and unflinchingly, with the requisite research and freedom from popular prejudices; but it would demand months, perhaps years, of severe labor and study.

Without entering at all on a task so far beyond our opportunities, we wish in this article to express merely a few thoughts respecting oath-taking, as one of the numerous points on which the profession and practice of Christendom are irreconcilable. What Jesus is reported to have taught on this subject is contained in the first gospel, in the familiar words of the Sermon on the Mount:—

"Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, 'Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths.' But I say unto you, Swear not at all: neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King; neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black: but let your communication be Yea, yea, Nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."

Without expressing unalloyed satisfaction with the reasons here given for not using the oath, it must surely be held that this is noble teaching. The moral dignity of the position assumed in the passage quoted is self-evident. Why the whole Christian world should not accept practically this part of the ethics of Jesus, but on the contrary should give it the lie direct by using and defending the use of the oath as a guarantee of veracity, it is difficult to understand. The fact is evident enough. Jesus explicitly condemns, in language admitting of no qualification or mental reservation, the practice of swearing to the truth of any statement or to the performance of any promise, as if an oath could add anything to the force of plain yes or no; he declares that whatever is more than these comes of evil. But the practice of Christian governments, sanctioned and indorsed by almost all Christian sects (the Quakers alone excepted, so far as we know), is to require oaths in countless cases, on the ground that plain yes or no is not enough. One would naturally think that so manifest a departure from the injunction of him who is taken to be the revealer of God's will in all matters he touches upon,—so audacious and undeniable a nullification of the law of the Most High God as amended under the "Christian dispensation" by the Second Person of the Trinity,—would disturb the consciences of those who profess to be his obedient disciples. How can they wink at such a patent abrogation of his most solemn and emphatic command? How can they dare to add anything to simple "Yea, yea, Nay, nay," when he declares that "WHATSOEVER is more than these cometh of evil"? Are Christians so simple as to be ignorant that the "So help me God!" which they add to yes or no is actually an addition? Yet by common consent Christian clergymen and Christian jurists are strenuously in favor of this glaring violation of the command of one they profess to believe in as God himself. When it is proposed by men with secular principles to adopt a course which shall simply be in strict conformity with the injunction of their own professed Lord, they raise the cry of "infidels," and declare the foundations of religion and morality and social order to be most dangerously shaken. It is such Christians as these who are willing even to deprive free thinkers of their political rights, as in Mr. Nieland's case, if they object to doing what Jesus himself teaches ought not to be done. We wish we could defend these covert repudiators of Jesus against the charge of hypocrisy in publicly professing themselves to be his followers; but we cannot. That would take more logic than we are master of. They must defend themselves as best they can.

With regard to non-resistance, divorce, and other things, we consider Jesus to have taught impractical, unjust, and irrational doctrine. But with regard to the oath, we consider him to have taught the only doctrine which is worthy of the dignity of human nature. These are some of the reasons why oath-taking as approved by Catholics and Protestants, and as practised in all so-called Christian nations, appears to us a custom "more honored in the breach than in the observance":—

1. To suppose that the oath adds anything intrinsically to the value of a man's bare word is superstition. If he has told the truth, he has told the truth. If he has perjured himself, he has lied. That is all. Although falsehood as such cannot be made in all cases a penal offence, it is perfectly right and proper that in some cases, when great interests hinge on the telling of the truth, heavy penalties should follow falsehood. Except as falsehood for which penalties are provided by civil enactment, there is no such thing as perjury. A lie is a lie—no more and no less. If any lie is a sin against God, all lies are equally so; they cannot be made more so by calling him to witness. But it is childish, superstitious, and inane to imagine that there can be special supernatural penalties for perjury. The fear of them doubtless urges many ignorant persons to tell the truth on oath who would lie, if unsworn; and this is the only imaginable defence of the oath on grounds of reason. But it is in accordance with sound morality to extort the truth by means of the oath, when the practice of extorting it by means of torture, which is more efficient still, has been condemned by the universal consent of civilized mankind? The oath is only a mental rack, an instrument of soul-torture. The State has no right to use spiritual thumb-screws, any more than to use physical thumb-screws. All its penalties should be of the earth, earthy; that is, they should be fine, imprisonment, or other ordinary and legitimate punishment. To employ superstitious fear of hell-fire as a part of the machinery for getting at truth is barbarous, and unworthy of an enlightened State.

2. The oath becomes ineffectual in proportion as men become intelligent. It may influence a superstitious man; but none other. On the contrary, it becomes an utterly tedious, ridiculous, and meaningless affair, as rattled off by glib officials who vulgarize it for all who have any decency of mind. Whoever cherishes any genuine reverence for God is simply disgusted at the fathomless irreverence for him which habitual oath-taking and oath-administering create.

3. The requisition of the oath by the State is a relic of the old connection of Church and State which ought to be totally dissolved on grounds of general principle. It is a stepping outside of the conceptions which are alone appropriate to civil affairs, and meddling with notions which belong to the Church alone. The gravest objections to the oath on public grounds are connected with this false position of the State, but we need not now enlarge on this familiar point.

4. The last reason for abolishing the oath which we wish to mention at present is that it is a degrading affront to a person of self-respect, whose bare word should carry all the weight of a sworn statement, to require him to take it. The requisition is tantamount to an intimation that, but for the oath, a falsehood might naturally be expected. One who holds his word of honor cheaply may not wisely be believed on oath; while he whose parole is always an affidavit should be spared the insult of official suspicion. It is not a light evil to turn the State into an instrument either of demoralization or of oppression; and these alternatives are presented to one who cherishes sufficient pride of character to resent the insinuation that his word of honor is not enough for credence. To submit and take the oath is to suppress a justifiable and necessary protest, which is demoralizing; to refuse to take it may subject to penalties the very person who least deserves them, which is oppressive. In some of the United States, affirmation instead of the oath is permitted to any one who prefers it; and this provision, at least, should be extended to all the States. But the oath itself ought to be everywhere abolished; and the Christians ought first of all to insist on its abolition, in obedience to their now disregarded Lord.

DOCTRINE AND LIFE.

Jesus may have been mistaken as to a good many things which he roundly and somewhat dogmatically taught, but not infrequently he did hit the nail on the head, and gave us a profoundly wise and admirable maxim. One of his true and deep sayings, it seems to me, was this: "He that doeth the will shall know of the doctrine."

The merely sentimental interpretation of this maxim is wrong, albeit it is that which the Church usually gives of it. That distinguished and able Catholic, Father Hecker, once said to me that there was no illumination of the mind equal to that which came to a man when once he completely surrendered himself to the infallible direction of the Church. By this one act of obedience, he said, the mind was opened, and a flood of light admitted on many things that were dark before; so that for the first time the man could say truly that he was at once both free and enlightened. When a boy, my good Methodist friends again and again assured me that, if I would but entirely give myself up to Jesus, the light and joy and power of a believing mind would come to me: I should know the truth through such submission. The disciples of George Fox make substantially the same declaration about the miraculous illuminating power of the Holy Spirit upon the minds of those who passively submit to it.

But all these statements are wrong, in so far as they imply that mental illumination comes from mental subserviency or mental inaction. They are wrong, in so far as they imply that a religious man must necessarily know more and better of the truth than one who is not religious. The heart alone cannot make us wise. The mere exercise of the holiest emotions or the highest sentiments of the soul will not put us in possession of the truth about anything, if at the same time the intellect be sluggish, or the reasoning powers be held in abeyance. The mischievous and disobedient boy in school is often the brightest, the one who learns his lessons quickest, and who reaches higher in his attainments as a scholar than the steadiest-going and most exemplary boy in conduct. The veriest scamp not infrequently knows more than the veriest saint. The profoundest scholars and the most distinguished savans are not invariably religious men, men under the influence of the Holy Spirit, as the Church might phrase it, but quite the reverse. Good men do not appear to have any monopoly of the truth; but infidels and free thinkers, who refuse utterly to be subject to Christian doctrines and Christian influences, somehow contrive in many cases to be just about as knowing and wise as any of their neighbors.

And yet there is a certain deep sense in which the saying of Jesus is true. If the heart alone cannot make us wise, neither can the head. If the intuitions of themselves are not sufficient to grasp the truth, neither of itself is the logical understanding able to intrench us in the best fortified fastnesses of her wide domain. To know that a thing is true, we must in a certain sense feel it as well as think it. It is as necessary to experience the truth of things, as to arrive at it through the strict order of an intellectual process. When the intellect makes a careful and elaborate proposition of the truth upon any subject, no matter how well and strongly reasoned out its conclusion may be, unless the heart, the soul, also apprehend it, and send their warm life-blood to quicken the cold thought of the mind, there occurs in us no enthusiasm of what we call conviction; and the truth, like a still-born child, lies pulseless and lifeless in our hands. But, on the other hand, if the truth conceived by the intellect be adopted by the heart, and brooded over with the love and devotion of the soul, then the grand momentum of conviction seizes us and swings us into the very line of truth's purpose, and our whole being obeys her law.

A man cannot be said to know the truth very well until he has tried to live it,—until he has endeavored to translate it from speculation into practice, from word into deed, from thought into life. When we try to put our ideas and principles into practice, we get a new perception of their worth or their worthlessness; for life is a test of truth: it both enlarges our vision of what is true, and helps us to eliminate error from our mental apprehension. The best way for young men or women just out of school, and wishing to test the value of their education, is to turn teachers themselves, and try to instruct others in what they have been instructed. This deepens and fastens in their own minds the knowledge which they have acquired, by leading them through the practical relations of what they have hitherto only theoretically considered. Tell a child that two and two make four, and he will probably believe it if he has confidence in you; but let him take two marbles, and put them with two other marbles, and possess the sum of them,—then he has experienced the certain truth of what before he only intellectually perceived. So, too, a man's belief in God and immortality is not worth a handful of peanuts, until he has striven in daily life to be a god himself, and to live into all the immortal truths and principles which he has been able to think and discover by the help of his reason. If he can be immortal here, then perhaps there is some chance that he may continue to be immortal hereafter. If he can find divinity in himself, then it is not at all unlikely that he may be able to discover the complete Godhead elsewhere. I observe that those who have been able to impress their beliefs most mightily upon men, invariably have been those who have carried the demonstration home by a life of illustration even as much as by intellectual arguments and formulas. And this because there is a certain great moral power of truth as well as mental.

I can but think that any association of men and women which aims to increase the knowledge of truth among mankind, and to promote a larger fellowship of the spirit, must make a great mistake if it confine itself to things that pertain to mere doctrine more than life. It may state and restate truth in intellectual forms never so clearly and cogently, but if it do not try to show how what is true in doctrine may be made true in life,—how truth can be made to apply to all social conditions, and be made to subserve the highest social welfare and happiness,—then very soon its hour of inspiration and of usefulness must pass, and it will come to take rank as an intellectual ornament of the times, rather than an instrumentality for practical good. The world always needs workers as well as thinkers; or rather, it always needs that the wisest thought of the wisest minds should be applied to the regulation and improvement of all the affairs of human life. This must not be done in any paltry or impertinent way; in no fussy, meddlesome, or captious spirit; but in a truly wise way, and in a spirit of large charity and deep foresight. Thus the true State, the State founded on truth and righteousness, will come to pass among men; and all in it shall be fellows and equals, inspired of wisdom and actuated by good will.

A. W. S.

AN IRREPARABLE LOSS.

The terrible disaster of the wreck of the Schiller, which has carried grief and agony to so many hundreds of hearts, brought to our own community, in the death of two young women, a thrill of grief and pain as great possibly as the death of any private persons could possibly produce; and it is the only consolation that remains to us that lives so rich and beautiful cannot be snatched suddenly away without leaving an influence of good upon their survivors. To deepen this influence and to continue their noble work is the privilege of those who have known and loved them, and whose hearts are heavy with their loss.

Susan Dimock, M. D., was first known to us as a student at the New England Hospital for Women and Children, where she at once won the respect and confidence of her teachers by her superior intellectual and moral qualities, by her love for the profession she had chosen, and her uncommon qualifications for it. After gaining all the benefit she could receive from instruction in this country, by the help of friends who believed that she would do signal honor to the profession she went to Zurich, where she attended the entire course of medical study, and graduated with high honors. On returning to America, she at once took the place long designed for her, as Resident Physician of the Hospital, and devoted herself to its duties with such zeal and skill, and so entirely to the satisfaction of the Board of Directors, that a year before the expiration of her term of service they asked her to extend it for three years longer. She consented to this, with the reservation of the privilege of five months leave of absence this summer for a proposed journey to Europe. The high reputation for so young a person, her winning manners, and her attention to her patients, soon procured her a large private practice in addition to her work at the Hospital. She was especially skilful in surgery, and performed many difficult operations with a degree of skill and success which has called forth the admiration of our oldest and best practitioners. She managed the Training School for Nurses mainly herself, until within a few weeks of her departure, and succeeded in training a body of nurses who are confessedly superior to any who have ever before been educated for that profession in this country. With the best natural gifts, with the most thorough training for her work, and having disarmed the prejudices of those most opposed to her calling by her winning character and her thorough success, with health, hope, friends, and a wide field of usefulness before her, her life seemed a thing as precious as the sun looks down upon in his daily course. It is swept away in an hour. What remains to us of it—all that made it so precious and so noble—the devotion to the great and good work to which she had pledged her life, the conscientious training for her work, the love of humanity which kept her ever active in it, the sweetness and beauty of soul which ennobled it all—these qualities are undying. Like the ashes of the martyrs strown upon the waters, the wild waves will only bear them to every shore upon earth, and in a thousand hearts they will kindle anew the same spirit which has made her short life such a blessing and encouragement to us all.

Beside her in that dreadful hour was the beloved friend who had been with her in so many scenes of joy and sorrow, herself as fair and beloved and full of life; and who, with all that wealth, and position, and high culture, and the dearest love of friends could furnish her, had devoted herself to aiding her noble friend in her work of humanity by succoring the friendless mother, or the orphan child, whom her skill had restored to health and life. A friendship on so high a plane between such gifted souls was as beautiful as that of David and Jonathan. Truly, they were "lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided."

May the good Spirit which has guided their lives strengthen and support the hearts of all to whom they are dear; for in many a dark alley and poor home of suffering and poverty will life look harder, and earth seem more cold and friendless, for the passing away from it of these two angels of God's mercy and love.

E. D. C.

Literary Notices.

THE BRIC-A-BRAC SERIES. No. VI: Personal Reminiscences by Moore and Jordan. No. VII: Personal Reminiscences by Cornelia Knight and Thomas Raikes. Edited by Richard Henry Stoddard. New York: Scribner, Armstrong, & Co. 1875.

These are entertaining volumes to have at hand, to take up at odd moments of leisure in home life, or to serve as companions at mountain or seaside.

Moore's social intercourse with most of the distinguished literary persons of his day gave him good opportunity for anecdote respecting them; and the reader is, as it were, brought face to face, at dinners and parties, and sometimes privately at their own homes, with those whose names have been familiar to him as authors, and whose unrestrained conversation and private life have for him much interest. Jordan, though not a man of note now, as editor of the Literary Gazette was brought into relations with many literary celebrities of his time, which enabled him to relate interesting bits of their history.

Cornelia Knight was a familiar friend of Lord and Lady Hamilton, and was thus brought into acquaintance with Lord Nelson, whose victories she celebrated in verse. She was called by the naval officers of the time, "Nelson's poet laureate." She was seven years maid of honor to Queen Charlotte, wife of George III., and afterwards "lady companion" to the young Princess Charlotte. Her "Reminiscences," as also those of Thomas Raikes, chiefly concern persons of rank and station, both English and Continental.

In these volumes are introduced occasional portraits of celebrated persons mentioned.

A. H.

BOYS AND GIRLS IN BIOLOGY; or, Simple Studies of the Lower Forms of Life, based upon the Latest Lectures of Prof. T. H. Huxley, and published by his permission. By Sarah Hackett Stevenson. Illustrated by Miss M. A. I. Macomish. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1875.

The object of this work is to interest children in the science of living things. Beginning with the yeast-plant, the lowest form of vegetable life, the author by means of characteristic samples carries her young readers through the three classes of plants—the Fungi, Green Plants, and Flowering Plants. She then introduces to their notice the lowest form of animal life, and, pursuing the same plan, carries them through the classes of Invertebrates; and she closes by intimating that in a future volume she may treat the classes of vertebrate animals in the same manner. Miss Stevenson says the idea of this work occurred to her while listening to Prof. Huxley's lucid description of the yeast-plant, and that her outline of the plan received his entire approval.

The subject is treated in a manner adapted to the intelligence of children; and is fitted, not only to answer many of the thousand questionings which naturally arise in their minds, but also to stimulate farther inquiry into the wonderful things in Nature which are everywhere presented to their eyes. As an illustration of the attractive way in which the topics are presented to the mind of the child, the first paragraph of the book, preliminary to the study of vegetable life, is here given:—

"Upon the old stone hearth by the kitchen fireplace stood a quaint-looking earthen jar, whose outside, so often spattered with batter, told of the treasures within—the precious buckwheat-cakes." A. H.

Communications.

FROM GENEROUS FRIENDS.

AMESBURY, May 15, 1875.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Please accept for THE INDEX, from several of your subscribers in this place, the enclosed amount, thirty dollars, as an earnest of their desire for the long life of your paper. We find it much easier to voice the praise of THE INDEX than to express the same ideas in the currency of the "realm"; so this must be regarded as a very inadequate expression of our goodwill and wishes. If those who every Sunday enjoy the quickening which they receive from THE INDEX would contribute a tithe of what "Christians" do in support of their religion, the more than "forty-parson-power" of the paper would be as firmly entrenched, and as secure, as the most popular preachers of the land.

To this end we pass in our contribution.

Truly yours, J. T. CLARKSON.

P. S.—Please acknowledge in your usual column the receipt of $5 each from Geo. H. Briggs, James W. Goodrich, T. H. Buchanan, R. T. Briggs, W. E. Darling, J. T. Clarkson. C.

[On behalf of The Index Association we return sincere thanks for this unsolicited contribution to its treasury. It is very encouraging to find that THE INDEX is so highly prized by its readers, and of this encouragement all who write for it are entitled to an equal share. No appeal for donations has been made, but we venture to ask the aid of all our subscribers in extending the circulation of the paper. We take this opportunity of thanking the many friends who have recently been making special efforts in this direction, one gentleman alone having sent in the names of eighteen new subscribers. This is the best possible way to strengthen the influence of THE INDEX, which we spare no pains to make worthy of the high demands of its own ideas and of the generous support of its friends.—Ed.]

THE "INTUITIONALISTS."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your article, "Drawing Lines," in THE INDEX of Jan. 23, you say that Intuitionists decline to submit the doctrines of God and immortality to the test of thought. Again, "The Intuitionist is imperfectly true to Free Religion until this reservation is given up."

Now I understand an Intuitionist to be one who takes heed to his emotions, and professes to learn something therefrom.

To me, my emotions are facts, a part of my nature; and I claim the right to analyze them, to read them, to profit by them. Does "Free Religion" deny me this right?

My emotions are not common property; they are my own; and I intend to hold them as such in unison with my reason and common-sense. But I will not attempt to force my conclusions on others, neither will I exclude others from fellowship for rejecting them.

But "people's emotions deceive them." Yes, and so do their eyes and their ears. If my eyes or ears deceive me, I will learn to take better heed how I see and how I hear; but I will not put out my eyes or stop my ears.

Does science claim the right to enter the sanctuary of my inner life, and read its lesson for me? Or shall I remain in possession of that citadel on my own responsibility? When science says the unseen is the unknowable, shall I cry Amen?

If every existing atom is instinct with the living possibilities of its own future development, then what of the human mind or soul?

If science can measure the capacity of the soul, and give us a correct estimate of its capabilities, then let the bound be set, and let it be said, "Here shall thy proud waves be stayed." Till this is done I will remain my own interpreter. Does Free Religion object? Then so much the worse for Free Religion.

Yours for all that is true and good—being free for all time and all eternity,
CANTON, Pa. HENRY PALPHIAMAND.

[We used, and use, the word "intuitionist" in no other sense than that of one who assumes the existence of God and the reality of a future life on the mere affirmation of an assumed faculty specially fitted to reveal these truths. It is this double assumption to which we object. But we have no objection to "emotions," if they are not put forward in the place of reason as the discoverer of truth; any more than we would quarrel with hands or feet, eyes or ears, if they are not set to do work they cannot do. We are as anxious to "learn" from human emotions as Mr. Palphiamand can be; but we think that it is the function of reason, scientifically applied, to draw from them the lessons they have to teach respecting objective truth. Whoever reflects on them, or draws conclusions from them, can only do so by the exercise of reason; and this is the fact which we think the "Intuitionist" overlooks.—Ed.]

AN AVOWAL OF FAITH IN THE LITERAL TRUTH OF THE GOSPELS.

NORTH ABINGTON, Mass., March 11, 1875.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—My attention has been called to your reprint of the pamphlet entitled "The Divine Decree," in your issue of February 25; and I have read it carefully. I beg some space in your columns to comment upon it. The portions I would especially notice are on page 87, and first the paragraph beginning with "We conclude, then," and ending with "astounding marvel."

Now whether I shall be called a "man of sense and education," or not, I shall leave at present for you to decide. Both the editors of THE INDEX have some acquaintance in the case. But, regardless of any decision in that matter, I will venture to give my testimony on the point at issue.

The pamphlet says that we Christians do not really believe in their literal sense the affirmations of the creed. For one I do most literally believe them. I believe, with all my heart and mind, that on a literal day when the sun was shining, and the heavens lay blue above, and all Nature was in Galilee just what Nature in Galilee is now, there appeared to a woman named Mary, living in Nazareth, a pure and perfect virgin upon whom the shadow even of sex-sin had not fallen, a literal angel, a being of life and light from the innermost heaven where God dwells, bearing a message direct from God to her, and that that message was the one recorded in the Gospel of Luke, 1: 27-38.

I believe also that from the moment when she said, "Be it unto me according to thy word," the creative energy flowed directly down from God himself, caused to go forth by his explicit personal act, entered as a begetting power into her person, and caused her to begin to become a mother. And I not only religiously but scientifically believe it to have been. No one who knows me will think me a blind, bigoted devotee, or pietist. With my eyes wide open, and looking steadily right into all that science discloses, and never flinching from what she really demands; and seeing, moreover, (as I think) in a comprehensive view, the field of science in its relation to other fields of life and being, I do most earnestly declare that there is nothing in real science which conflicts with such an event. Nay, more, with Henry James in his Secret of Swedenborg, I declare that that event was a logical necessity for the scientific completion of the universe, as it was the highest possible physical event in it. If scientists only could receive it, in that event God gave to man the scientific clue to understanding the mystery of the evolution of types of being one after another. There was a time when there was no man on the globe. How came the first man and woman to be? Will scientists tell us that they grew spontaneously out of the soil? There was a first pair, and for all time before there was not a human being on all the globe. Every school of science teaches this. The mystery of the coming of that first pair is not greater than the mystery of the begetting of Jesus; and any Darwinianism, even, that solves the one solves the other. And I have a better ground than Darwin: for by a direct sight do I behold the interior and immanent God, and have a partial cognizance of the divine movements of power. With a partial view I interiorly behold the facts, of which science at its best can only take exterior and more partial view. Jesus was a new and higher order of human, differing in kind from any human more than any human does from the next lower animals. As out of the lower he, the higher, came into the world, so in all creation's epoch has God brought the higher out of the lower, each "after his kind." The first Adam was the human kind; the second Adam the divine human kind. Now all this is a matter to be discussed just as scientifically as protoplasm; and if any man can show why it is more difficult to believe that Jesus was directly begotten of God in the womb of the Virgin Mary, than that the human race was potentially present in protoplasm and grew out of it, I am all attention to learn the reasons.

So then I do with all my heart and mind believe that on a certain day, a day on which "the sun rose and set" just as it does on any other day, and on which "men went about their business just as they go about their business now, a child was born" in Bethlehem, and cradled in the low stone trough in the side of the wall where they were wont to feed the cattle, "who never had a human father, whom angels came visibly down from heaven to worship, and to whom a multitude of the heavenly host, in the hearing of common men . . . like ourselves, sang hymns of praise." Yea, and moreover I realize in a measure how they burst out through the ether into the upper air, and manifested themselves to the astonished and reverent shepherds; and how it seemed to the shepherds. Many a time have I lived the scene over within myself, so that it is only less real than if I had experienced it.

So, also, with all my heart and mind do I believe that on a certain day Jesus Christ, the very man who was crucified, who died wholly dead, and who, being scientifically dead, did literally become alive again, and walk with his disciples on the earth,—that he in the presence of eleven of them "in bodily shape and substance . . . rose up from the earth and mounted visibly into the sky, in defiance of that unalterable law of gravitation," etc. Moreover, this is not only literally true, but it discloses a new law to which scientists would do well to give heed. I have seen bits of iron leap up through the air, drawn by the invisible power of the magnet. I say invisible magnetically, because no human being has ever seen that power, or can do anything more than to describe its effect. God was the infinite magnet which drew Jesus Christ up from the earth through the sky into heaven; and could we but become as pure as he was, we also would all be so drawn up into the interior spheres without any death, as we now know death; and such would have been the movement of all human kind but for sin. Thus to my entire belief in the literal truth of the Gospel narratives, and their harmony with all true science, I make this my solemn avowal. But I am not content with this.

The first Sabbath in March in the afternoon is our communion service; and so important did I consider the matter of the charge brought by your paper, that I made it the subject of the afternoon discourse, and brought it distinctly before the church. I read the paragraph I have now commented upon, and the one on miracles; and then in the fullest and most explicit manner I set forth my full belief in the literal truthfulness of the Bible story. With what power I could, and with what fairness I am capable of, I presented the whole subject, and told them I felt that it was an occasion for testimony. So, after the communion was over, I asked for a vote. I think every church-member present voted, and all in the affirmative; and joy to bear testimony in such a case fairly shone right out through the faces of some of the mothers in Israel, as by the uplifted hand they declared their faith in the spotless virginity of Mary, and that God was the literal and direct father of Jesus.

Now it is true that we are not a large church, much regarded by the world; and we may not be people "of sense." But such as we are, so far as I am acquainted, we are about like the average New England congregations; and what was done here would, I am persuaded, be done under like circumstances in all our New England churches.

